With plenty staring them in the face they practiced self-control. They struggled against their appetites, according to their custom and their religion. Even the Sunday School Chinese refrained to a large extent from eating. HOW CHINESE WOMEN LIVE AT HOME

By REV. T. WRIGHT, SEAMAN'S MISSION, HONG KONG

The Coming of the Chinese Factory Girl....

A WOMEN'S Conference, somewhat unique in character, has recently been held at Shanghai, China. Its object was to discuss the home life of Chinese women, and over 250 ladies from all parts of China were present and took part in the proceedings. It was the first conference that has ever been held on the subject of the social position, customs, and daily life of one-sixth of the human race, namely the two hundred millions of women in China.

A TYPICAL DEITY

The promoters were fortunate in securing the services of Lady Blake, wife of the Governor of Hong Kong, as President. Papers were contributed by European and American lady missionaries, and by Christian Chinese ladies. They embraced a wide range of subjects, such as "Slave Girls," "Foot-binding," "Daughters-in-Law," "Early Betrothals," "Marriage," and "Funeral and Social Customs." A large amount of valuable information was thus elicited and some remedies suggested, though anything like a crusade against existing customs was studiously avoided, with the exception of foot-binding, which was condemned with one voice as a cruel, senseless custom, holding in bondage millions of our sisters in this wonderful and little-known empire.

We have not room for the whole of the scholarly speech of Lady Blake, but it follows may give some idea of its tenor. She said: In every clime and in all countries, the position and influence of women in social matters must be of as great importance as that of the masculine element. To understand a country, we ought to know something of its women as well as its men. The absence, or ill-regulated force, of female influence must have a deleterious effect on any society. It is in every modern day, much more than a century ago, that women began to receive their share in the general work of progress in Western lands.

As we claim that the countries have advanced since women have done so, we are not also claiming that part of progress is due to the women of Europe and America? Undoubtedly in our own countries the position of women has been largely owing to the spread of the ideas and customs of the Teutonic and Celtic races, in whose ranks, from the dawn of history, women occupied an exceptionally honorable and important position. Tacitus writes that "the Germans suppose some divine and prophetic quality resident in their women, and are careful neither to disregard their admonitions nor to neglect their answers." The Cymbri are described by another contemporary writer as accompanied on their expeditions by venerable prophetesses in long linen robes, "most splendidly white." All Celtic histories and traditions also bear testimony to the consideration in which their women were held.

"That the ladies of China are respected and appreciated by their countrymen, I have no doubt, though their way of living is almost a closed book to us; but if the women who, in Scandinavia, worshipped Odin and Thor; who, in Britain, with golden sickles cut the sacred mistletoe from the boughs of the oak; who guarded the holy fires in the ancient shrines of Ireland, were treated with honor and consideration, and took leading parts in the affairs of their peoples long before those people had learned the higher truths of Christianity, why should it not be the same with their sisters who live where the noble teachings of Confucius and the great lessons of the Light of Asia are the professed guides of the nation? From the days of the beautiful and not over scrupulous Empress, who for sixty-seven years, exercised despotic sway over the Empire, Chinese history makes mention of many distinguished and remarkable women, and, as far as we can judge, the position of women in China is superior to that which they occupy in most Oriental lands; but in no Asiatic country is the status of women on a par with what it is where Teutonic and Celtic ideas preponderate; therefore we are justified in thinking that in many ways the lot of Chinese women might be ameliorated, and more interest and greater happiness might be introduced into their lives, while it is not a necessary corollary that Chinese women should adopt manners and customs peculiar to foreign races and to which, by heredity and surroundings, Oriental women must be unfitted.

"Echoes from the homes of China reach us, from time to time, of young girls committing suicide to escape a distasteful marriage; of brides putting an end to an existence rendered intolerable by the tyranny of their mother-in-law; which lead us to suppose that there are aspects of the life of Chinese women that are capable of improvement. To enable us to understand something more of the mode of life and thought of the women of China; to enable them to obtain glimmers of light on the—them—strange and weird ways and minds of their European sisters, is the object of this conference, which may be the beginning of larger efforts, and I hope and trust will ultimately lead to greater mutual good-will and friendship."

One of the most interesting papers was by a Chinese lady (Dr. Ida Khan), on the subject of "Slave Girls." Her beautifully pathetic appeal was interpreted in a manner equally beautiful, by her classmate and friend, Dr. Mary Stone, also a Chinese lady. Little girls are either bought or stolen at a very early age, in the interior, and transported to the coast for nefarious purposes before they have been very long in their teens. Tears flowed freely as these ladies related incidents from their personal experience. Being Chinese themselves, they spoke with feeling and authority, and few hearts could resist their earnest pleading for the abolition of a practice which has brought sorrow and shame to so many girls in China.

The relations of daughters-in-law to their mother-in-law were fully discussed. These are very exacting and obligatory, according to Chinese ideas: the system is patriarchal, sons and their wives having to live under the same roof as the son's parents. The mother-in-law's power is almost absolute: Her daughter-in-law is her slave, and she can inflict severe corporal chastisement at pleasure. The husband cannot interfere to protect his wife, who has to rest content with the consolation that in time her turn will come, and she will have the privilege of "lording" it over someone else. Early betrothals are the fashion, and the little prospective daughter-in-law grows up in the home of her future husband.

A new development of Chinese life was adverted to at the closing meeting. The familiar "factory girls" of the West is an innovation in this great conservative empire. Such, however, is the case: The Chinese factory girl has come, and, it may be safely assumed, that she has come to stay. It will be interesting to watch her evolution; but, meanwhile, one effect of her entrance upon the industrial life of China is the improved estimate in which "mere girls" are held. As is generally known, the birth of a girl is an unwelcome event in the family, but the good wages many of them receive as factory workers in the treaty ports and elsewhere, has added considerably to their importance as members of the family. They have consequently become more self-reliant and independent, instead of being merely subdued drudges, and a change for the better is also manifest in their dress and manners generally. This is no small achievement, and argues well for the future of Chinese womanhood.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

I. These questions are printed Four weeks in advance so as to afford our readers an opportunity to answer them.

II. For answers to the questions which appear below, when accepted, we will allow compensation for the matter used at the rate of One Dollar a hundred words. Answers should so far as possible be limited to one hundred words.

III. Answers must be received at this office three weeks in advance of the date in which they are intended to appear.

IV. The editor reserves the right to condense accepted answers when necessary, and compensation will be based on the matter as printed.

V. Do not write inquiring if your material has been accepted. If it appears on this page, you will know that it has been accepted.

VI. We cannot return any MSS. sent to the Editor of THE MAIL-BAG—not even if stamps accompany them.

VII. Write only on one side of the sheet, and never send on the same sheet anything intended for any other department of the paper. Correspondents answering more than one question should append their name and address to each answer.

VIII. Address all communications intended for this department, Editor The Mail-Bag, The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

These Questions will be Answered May 29

1. In what sense, other than spiritual, may poverty be regarded as a blessing, and riches as a handicap?

2. A friend asserts that an evangelist is not justified in counting his converts, and announcing confidently that "so many have been converted"; another friend, with equal emphasis, claims that such a course is thoroughly Scriptural, and that the spiritual laborer does right to claim for Christ every soul which accepts openly the offer of salvation. Which of the two is right?

3. Is a man who has a house for sale, justified in selling it, asking no questions, to a bidder, when he has reason to suspect that the proposed purchaser may use it for a gambling house, or for some other wicked purpose?

4. If a Christian sees a burglar fleeing with his property and cannot overtake him, is he justified in shooting at the man?

5. When a drunkard or some other person gives himself to Christ, should he be urged to join a church at once or should he be put on a period of probation first?

Questions of the Week

1. I wish to give a book (other than the Bible) to one of my pupils, a boy of thirteen, that will influence him on the side of Christianity. What is the best book for this purpose?

[Many answers have been received to this question, and many books named, including Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, Life of D. L. Moody, Titus, Livingston's Travels, Luther's Catechism, with Christ at Sea, Egerton Young's Travels and a host of biographies. Following are two of the answers:]

It depends upon his taste, character and development, and somewhat upon his environment at home. Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, or the Life of Moody, would give enjoyment and suggestion. In fact, a biography of any good man is an object lesson that appeals forcibly to the youthful mind. Walker's Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation, Bushnell's Character of Jesus, or The Bible in the Nineteenth Century, are all excellent books and cannot fail to leave a lasting impression.

M. R. D. DINGWALL.

The best book for this purpose is Touching Incidents and Remarkable Answers to Prayer. These incidents and remarkable answers to prayer have been related by John B. Gough, Bishop Bowman, John Wesley, Dr. Talmage, George Muller, Bishop Simpson, D. L. Moody, C. H. Spurgeon, H. L. Hastings, and many others. This book teaches the young as well as the old how to pray so as to find God. It also strengthens the faith of all Christians who read it.

G. H. ROGERS.

2. If a church's membership is so wedded to the saloon that, if the pastor preaches on temperance or prohibition, he is sure to lose a large part of his audience, should the pastor refrain from touching upon these subjects and hold his audience, or should he preach upon them and lose it?

As the object of all our Churches is to bring the Gospel into the lives of every one that it is possible for it to reach, would it be wise to drive out from its doors those who so sorely need its influence as do saloon-keepers? The writer knows of a minister who felt it was his duty to come out openly against saloon-keepers, and, in consequence, was relieved of his charge at once, without doing any good to his hearers. His family were the only sufferers, unless it was his reputation for wisdom and Christian forbearance. Paul said to the Corinthians, "All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient." If our missionaries should go to heathen lands and proceed to tell these nations and individuals all their sins, and set them in order before them, their opportunities for presenting the truth to them would be very limited. With the love of Christ in our hearts, we can work for saloon-keepers in other ways than condemning them from the pulpit. Paul says that "the tongue of an angel, gifts of prophecy, faith to remove mountains availeth nothing, without love." He adds, "Love never faileth, but hopeth all things, and believeth all things." Nathan had a hard task before him when he went to rebuke David, but his wisdom in presenting the sin led David to condemn himself. Saloon-keepers will condemn themselves when their consciences are guilt or criminal complicity of any people with any evil, the greater responsibility of the preacher to put forth every effort to reclaim and redeem from such sin and guilt. Undoubtedly to preach against any sin deeply ingrained in the hearts and lives of a people is calculated to stir up strife and division; but this is precisely the mission of the preacher. Christ did exactly this thing himself, and would have all his disciples and servants do likewise. "I am not come to send peace on earth, but a sword"; "I am not come to send peace on earth, nay rather division," and "A man's foes shall be they of his own household." If the preacher's all-absorbing ambition is to secure a comfortable place, a large salary and an easy life, and nothing more,

3. In view of Paul's recommendation of celibacy to the teachers of his time (I. Cor. 7: 32, 33) should a Church, in considering the relative merits of candidates for its vacant pulp, where one is married and the other single, prefer the single pastor, other qualifications being equal?

No. The context shows that Paul was formulating a command concerning the marital relation in general (God Almighty has determined that in the constitution of man but merely expressing an opinion that, in conditions then obtaining, which he describes as the "present distress," celibacy was better. Various views are held concerning the meaning of this phrase; but it seems certain that it is nothing analogous thereto in modern times. The experience of centuries demonstrates the superiority of a married ministry alike moral and utilitarian grounds. The unmarried minister to-day finds himself hindered in all the functions of his office; and a celibate, when "called," soon discovers, both as a minister and minister, that "it is not good for man to be alone." CHARLES H. HARRISON

4. Would not the unity of the churches accomplish much greater results both at home and in the foreign field with the same financial outlay as at present?

Most assuredly. In this combination of co-operation are evidenced the most potent features of our times. The wisdom of the fable about the bundle of fagots, that could only be broken when each fagot was taken separately, has never been so evident as at the present time. Such a unity only would save the vast amount of wasteful expenditures, such as having two or three pastors, two or three organs, where one would suffice, which the Churches in their several capacities make necessary. Hitherto, various denominations have preferred to act independently, each maintaining its own machinery for separate work, but it is manifest that this method is a duplication of effort, a waste of both energy and money. What real reason is there why Churches should not adopt such a plan? There is none.

EDWIN A. SWING

5. When the children of Christian parents are invited by worldly people to a party, where cards and dancing will be the chief occupations of the evening, should the invitation be declined, if doing so involves social ostracism, or should it be accepted, at the risk of bringing the children into worldly temptation?

It should be declined, as should all other invitations to do wrong, no matter what they follow. We are surely responsible to God for the training of our children, and the welfare of their souls is far beyond all other considerations. We, as Christian parents, should be kind and courteous to those around us; such kindness does not call for the sacrifice of our children's morals. We should shield them at any cost from all the evils and temptations the world is waiting to offer them, and let no false notions of social duty stand between them and heaven.

MARY ABBOTT

If the children are inclined to such amusements, or are liable to fall into such temptations, forbid their going. Better insult society in God. What matter if society ostracizes? Did not even the Church slam its door in the face of him "who was despised and rejected of men?" But if your children are strong in grace and stout in character, and can go to the party without yielding to the seductions of the card and the dance, let them go. Their presence there, standing aloof from what they think is evil, will have a wonderful effect on others. People will say, "These young people are Christians indeed, for they are in the world, yet not of it." R. T. EDWARDS

M. D., Douglass, Neb. It cannot be justified upon any grounds that we know of.

aroused by the consecrated wisdom of man, blessed by the power of God. Reformed saloon-keepers have done much for the Lord's work. The Master needs those saloon-keepers in your church, brother.

L. B. CHAMBERLAIN.

The stronger the ties that wed a Church to such an iniquitous institution as that of the rum-shop, the greater the necessity for the preacher to cry aloud and spare not. The more blinded by self-interest or ignorance they are on the great monstrous sin of drunkard-making, the more urgent is the demand that their minds be enlightened and their consciences aroused. The greater the personal then possibly his selfish interests could best be subserved by a resort to vigorous denunciation of sins his Church and congregation are not guilty of. But if he have the spirit of Christ in his heart, any sense of his responsibility for his position, and any desire to meet the tremendous obligations resting upon him, he will do as Christ did, and convince, convict, convert and cleanse guilty souls by the effective use of weapons of heavenly warfare. A sermon with no "Thou art the man" in it is merely a display of fireworks in place of shot and shell—simply a discharge of blank cartridges instead of genuine ammunition during a serious engagement.

When Spring Flowers Bloom

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

BURNEY

"MY LADY"

"HAVE been talking with My Lady," said Katharine, "and she has shown me an open door."

Katharine is a cripple. Summer and winter she is fast bound to her chair, never takes a step unaided, and often suffers a great deal of pain. Her youth is passing in this bondage, and she has no hope of being cured, until the coming of that kind angel whose touch heals every mortal ache.

Two days ago I called on Katharine and found her very much depressed. Usually very bright and cheery, she had come over her a wave of melancholy. She was weary of constant torture, of the dull weight of misery, and the sharp pangs, and the enforced inactivity. And, for the moment, she could not see the Father's face, felt the thickness of the cloud. I left her, with a prayer that the darkness might soon pass, and the sunshine again break forth.

When I met her this morning, she greeted me with so much merry gladness in her face that I knew the Lord had sent his messenger to help her. The messenger was the friend she called "My Lady."

"And," said I, "what was the door My Lady opened?"

"Well," Katharine answered, "it was this. I was away, 'way down, and she came in bringing me a great bunch of yellow flowers. There they are in that prettily brown pitcher. She brought the too; she said the color went with the flowers. Then she took my hand and looked at me, and she said, 'Katharine, the dear Lord has given you a golden gift.' Of course I was puzzled. I am blind poor and shut-in. How could I have a golden gift, I, who felt just then that I was a cripple and a pauper indeed. But I waited till My Lady went on to explain.

"Here am I, Katharine," she said, "so busy that I cannot beget through the day's work, that I seldom have time to read or to think as I would like to, at here you are, with time on your hands, to use for your friends. You, dear, are alone at quiet for hours, every day, while I must live in a crowd. You can be surrounded with silence, I am oppressed by the clamor about me. Now, Katharine, you can pray for me, by name, every hour, every day; or, at any rate, once a day. All there are other people: Mr. Bainbridge, whose business troubles him; Jimmy Folsom, who has no position; Ellen Marr, who wants to go to college; Lise Vaughan, who is in danger of making a great mistake in her life, these are your neighbors and you know them. You can pray for them. It can be a secret, as they are concerned, between your Lord and you. If added joy and blessings reach them, by the word of the skies, they will not need to know that they have a friend who asked for them, that their lives should be uplifted. I call this your golden gift, Katharine—time to pray, people to pray for, and a heart to pray."

My Lady had left a seed-thought in this suggestion of the open door for Katharine.

My Lady is the mother of a half dozen boys and girls. She has a large house to care for, and as her husband is minister, she looks after the needs of a widely scattered parish, in such ways as minister's wives know. May a loaf of cake and jar of preserves and glass of jelly from the manse, carries pleasure to the beds of invalids, and the brown vase with the yellow flowers taken from Katharine was just what we might expect from My Lady. Katharine always gave her that name, and never thought of her as Mrs. —, and the name suited her, for "lady" means "loaf-giver," and she who does kind things daily breaks the bread of life for hungry souls.

You, dear friends, who, with Katharine, belong to the company of Shut-Ins, will you not notice the open door, and pray for us who bear the heat and burden of the day?

How to Make the Bible Interesting

The trouble with many people is not that the Bible is not interesting, but they are not interested in it. To such I would say, read the Bible as you would read any

Sunday at the Pan-American

A VERY resolute attempt is being made to open the Exposition at Buffalo on the Sabbath. We recall that a similar effort was pressed, against the convictions of the American people, at the great World's Fair at Chicago in 1893. As a nation, our traditions are all on the side of the preservation of the Lord's Day, as a sacred day of rest. In Paris, at the recent Exposition, American athletes made themselves honorable by their refusal to engage in contests on the Sabbath, and their action was applauded by those at home, as they represented the dominant feeling of their countrymen. Many specious arguments are advanced to excuse or justify the Sunday opening of these great industrial and artistic exhibits, the one most eagerly and loudly pleaded being that working-people are excluded from Expositions, and that they will be deprived of the pleasure and profit of this one, because Sunday is their only day of leisure. The underlying reason, however, is the desire of the management to make more money through entrance fees, and the degeneration evident in the moral character of the nation, which is less careful to obey God than of old. Once let any people forget God, their doom is sounded, their decadence begun. Notwithstanding the weakened feeling of obligation about Sabbath keeping, evinced by the general Sunday pleasuring, by Sunday bicycling and Sunday golf, a feeling which has come to us with other importations from Europe, our people still are law-abiding and religious, and, outside the great cities, are church-going. Visit any town of Pennsylvania, Ohio, or central New York, and you will observe that everyone attends church on Sunday. Only in the great cosmopolitan cities, where are the wide extremes of the ultra fashionable and the desperately poor, is there conspicuous lack of interest in religious worship. But we cannot afford to let the Buffalo Exposition be opened on the Lord's Day, unless it is over the indignant protest of the Christian conscience through all our borders.

There will be holidays for the working people, and multiplied excursions, and the Saturday half-holiday, and the evenings. To Sunday opening at Buffalo, the voices of all who reverence the Sabbath will say "No."

A LITTLE CHARIOTEER

other book. Take it as you would a history, or a story, or a poem, and read it, not skipping anything except now and then a long chapter of genealogy, and you will soon yield to the fascination of the wonderful Book. The great difficulty with most of us who do not love God's Book is that we go to it as to a duty, not taking it as a pleasure.

DAFFODILS AND SNOWDROPS

THE snowdrop and the daffodil,
The greening grass on dell and hill,
The little ripples on the lake,
The myriad sounds of spring that wake,
Oh, God be praised that every year,
The winter goes, and flowers appear.

This do we bless Thee for to-day,
That ice and frost have passed away,
And daffodils and snowdrops light
The garden, valley, plain and height.
So, let our hearts, that late were cold,
New thoughts of God and love unfold.

For never yet the spring was lost
From any calendar, though tost
With tempest were the billowy seas,
The halcyon days returned, and these,
The common happenings, but tell
That God still keeps his children well.

Birthday Gifts

Keep up all the family anniversaries and make a festival of every birthday. A cake with frosting, and candles, one for each year, and another for the lifetime, is the crowning feature of a birthday feast. Each child, when the birthday comes, should receive some little distinctive or pretty gift, and should have the opportunity to give a penny for every birthday to some dear charity.

Prayer-Meetings

"I never went to a prayer-meeting in my life that I was not helped," said Mrs. Media, her friend Miss Halcyon being just then her listener.

"Even to stupid ones?" said the young lady.
"Yes, even to very slow and halting ones. I will not say stupid ones, dear. For, always there has been there the presence of those who were seeking the gift of the Holy Spirit, and the Saviour's promise has been: 'Where two or three are gathered in my name, there am I in the midst of them.'"

GEMS FROM THE WORLD'S GREAT PULPITS

Living Thoughts from the Recent Sermons of Eminent Preachers of Many Denominations

UNUSED POWER

BY DR. DAVID JAMES BURRELL
MARBLE COLLEGIATE CHURCH, NEW YORK

It has pleased God to make the humblest of men a reservoir of moral energy, and with it, of necessity, comes the responsibility of its proper use. There is no searching of a man's power. We are able to apprehend truth, to reason about the eternal verities, to influence our fellow men and to glorify God.

It is impossible to measure the energy thus reposed in us. No man has ever yet been morally exhausted. We can measure our physical strength—the striking power of our biceps muscle, the lifting power of back and limbs; but we cannot estimate the possibilities of our souls. And herein there is a vast difference between moral and material energy. The unit of measurement in mechanics is horse-power, and the potency of an engine can be determined to the fraction of an ounce. But no dynamometer has ever been invented to measure the moral energy of a man.

The question arises: What becomes of this vast deposit of moral energy? And this brings us to the practical point. It is obvious that the human race, made up of units, each endowed with immeasurable power, is capable of magnificent achievements. Let us suppose for a moment that all the moral power of the sixteen hundred millions of people on earth, made in God's likeness and thus splendidly endowed, were developed and exerted to the utmost, what a world ours would be! Yet, in fact, how inadequate the results! How little there is to show for all this endowment!

The Church professes to be in sympathy with the great purpose of Christ, to bring the sinful world back to God. It has entered into covenant with him to this end. Awake, awake, O Zion; put on thy strength! There is a voice from heaven ever calling, "Advance to the conquest of the world!" When will the Church know her power and her responsibility? The day of her awakening will give the signal of universal conquest.

But the important lesson is personal, after all. The Church is only what its individual members make it. Be thou strong, therefore, my friend, in the power of the Lord! Keep in close touch with him. Spend and be spent like him in the behalf of men. This is the life of faith, for faith is contact with God.

HOPE

REV. J. F. CARSON, D.D., CENTRAL PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

HOPE is the characteristic thing in Christianity. Its human condition is faith in God; its Divine condition is the energy of the Holy Spirit in the life of the man who believes. Hope is not something that is within the scope of our wisdom or culture or toil. It is not in our health or toil or treasure. It is born in us, not created by us. When the Spirit of God has right of way in any life, the darkness is scattered, the plane of thought and feeling is raised and hope abounds. It brightens youth with prospect. It sweetens manhood with promise. It brightens old age with an abiding outlook. The hope which is begotten in us by the Spirit of God points man forward. Limited, imperfect, sinful now, yet out of these he is to grow through the power of the Holy Spirit, into completeness, perfection and holiness. Christianity gives man an outlook. When Daniel prayed he opened his window toward Jerusalem and the outlook gave him strength and courage. Stephen looked up steadfastly into heaven and the outlook made him strong for martyrdom. Hope, begotten in us by the Holy Spirit, opens windows heavenward and the outlook soothes, sustains, satisfies—a beauty not of earth, a calm and deep peace pass into the soul.

OVERCOMING FORCE

REV. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN, TOLLINGTON PARK CHURCH, LONDON

WHEN I came into the world I not only inherited evil tendencies from my ancestors, but I inherited also all that Christ has accomplished for me. I am not only heir to the sin of the past, but I have at my disposal that new force to overcome the old, the force of the life of Jesus Christ. Remember that. Moreover, it is not point for point in the economy of grace. Here is the great truth: "Where sin abounded, grace doth much more abound." There is more power in the healing work that Jesus comes to do in my life than in all the disposition to evil which I inherited from my forefathers. "Christ is able to save to the uttermost all that come unto God by him." My brother, if you are saying, "I am naturally hot-tempered," I am glad you know it. Some people call it "righteous indignation," when that is not the right name for it; it is an unholiness. But if you have a naturally hot temper, Jesus Christ has a naturally meek and gentle spirit; and if you can get his spirit into you, what chance will your hot temper have to show itself? None at all, because "where sin abounded, grace doth much more abound."

Your relationship to Christ is a higher, a more powerful thing, than your relationship to your ancestors; and if you are blaming them for your sin you are dishonoring God. Here is a man living in a swamp, down in the midst of pestilence and malaria. He says: "I cannot help it. My father left me this house, and I must stay here." Then someone comes along and says: "Why, what are you living here for? There is a house for you up on the hill yonder which has been left you, rent free." The man says: "No, I can't help it. I want to be healthy, but I am bound to stay here in the swamp because my father left this home." You would say: "Someone who has a deeper interest in you than your father has left you that house on the hill. Move up there." Is not that man responsible for continuing to live in the swamp?

REV. DAVID JAMES BURRELL, D.D.
Pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church, New York

God help you, my brother, if you are living in a broken-down tenement. Your Heavenly Father says to you: "Move up on the heights. You can live in the pure atmosphere, in the breath of the divine Spirit of God, in the power of the new life of Jesus Christ, and all the things that have mastered you heretofore shall be overcome and cast out by the power of the life of Jesus Christ."

LIFE A PREPARATION

DR. JOHN RHEY THOMPSON, SUMMERFIELD M. E. CHURCH, BROOKLYN

THE varied experiences and disciplines of this life are not in vain. They are all, every one of them, either of divine appointment or permission, or at least of divine knowledge. Nor can a house be built without a plan or materials; or tools, or scaffolding? No more can we be built up into temples of the living God without the schooling of this present world. There is no better or effective preparation for the glories and privileges of the immortal life, than cheerful fidelity and loyalty to the duties of this present life. This, then, is my message: Live in the open brightness, the glad sunshine of our great immortality. We confess that we, like our fathers, are strangers and pilgrims on the earth, and that we seek a better country, that is a heavenly; wherefore God is not ashamed to be our God; for he has prepared for us a city. Not always in a calm and quiet sea do we sail, but still we strive to keep the prow of our vessel headed for the heavenly port, and scarcely will its keel touch the shining golden sands at last, when all the air above us shall be bright with waving palms, and thick with the dear faces and vanished smiles of long ago; and we shall hear once more the old familiar household voices saying: "Welcome, welcome, welcome, home."

WASTED STRENGTH

DR. EMORY W. HUNT, CLARENDON ST. BAPTIST CHURCH, BOSTON, MASS.

THE economic problem of the day is the problem of waste. The successful manufacturer saves his profits from what used to be waste. Many lives which are not vicious lie under the condemnation of allowing their energies to go to waste. They are not intelligently directed to useful ends. They lack point and purpose. Therefore they waste power. Power is wasted when it is applied, not only in harmful and useless, but even in less useful ways than it might. As we are "not our own, but are bought," we are to make our lives tell to the utmost for him "whose we are and whom we serve." We are under obligations, as soldiers, to sell our lives as dearly as possible. We need to answer for our own lives the question: What is worth while? What is most worth while? We can waste power by using it for good purposes, but not in the best and most efficient ways. So much of it is poured out other channels and not upon a wheel of service. If we climb the bank above a mill and look into the channel by which the water reaches it, we see that the channel is grown with weeds and choked with floatsam and jetsam. The power of God is similarly hindered by our disobedience. The Holy Spirit is "given to them that obey him." The greatest obstacles in the ways of God's entrance to our lives are not in our heads, but in our hearts. For one who fails to experience power because of trouble with the thinking, there are many who shut him out by their living. "If any man is willing to do his will, he shall know" the essential things. It may be a great duty which we have neglected; it may be we regard as a small section of our hearts which we close against him; but it is enough to prevent the working of power.

THE CHURCH'S ARSENAL

DR. CRISSMAN, BROADWAY PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH,
DENVER, COLO.

MODERN warfare with all its improvement in its weapons could suggest nothing better for the Christian's furnishing than the Lord has furnished for his victory against the stronghold of the enemy. To the weapons the reasons may seem as inadequate as in the case of the lapse of Jericho's tumbling walls. Prayers, sincere and full faith, the flashing sword of Divine truth, the helmet of salvation, united and persistent Christian effort, implicit trust in God with the Cromwell idea of keeping the powder dry, through God, prevail to the pulling down of the strongholds of infidelity, religious indifference, intemperance, strident, entrenched social evil, demoralizing worldliness and the long list, that confront the religious world at the opening of the twentieth century. These are giants, jeering and laughing from their tall strongholds. They are browbeaten in their disregard of God's laws and the sacred rights of the human race. The right use of weapons that God supplies will surely cause victory to perch on the banner of righteousness and truth.

RESURRECTION LIFE

DR. CORTLAND MYERS, THE BAPTIST TEMPLE, BROOKLYN

EASTER morning is the dawn of the world's hope. It is the unique and distinctive feature of the Gospel of Christ. The resurrection of Jesus Christ is the pivotal point around which the Bible and history and the heart's hope revolve. This central truth differentiates Christianity from every dead and dying religion in the earth. This truth Christianity out of the possibility of comparative religion. The living, risen Saviour of men is the supreme fact of History and Revelation. It is established by its power in the world's life. All progress and civilization here find their impulse. Falsehood is greater than truth if Christ did not rise from the dead. But falsehood is disintegrating and dying. There is no deathless life and unconquered power. There is a greater proof of the Resurrection than all in its relation to humanity and meeting the supreme desires and needs of mankind. The stone of unbelief has been rolled back, and reason clasped hands with faith. There is no rational method of accounting for all the facts and consequent effects apart from the supreme cause. "As it began in the dawn" is the poetry of the story. This is also the poetic life. "He lives"—that is the only answer to the great enigma.

THE FREEDOM OF THE SOUL

REV. D. C. KELLEY, D.D., METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, NASHVILLE, TENN.

GOD knows his children as individuals, not in the aggregate. He wants to know them as free, with no mark of slavery on their souls; docile children, ready to receive light; humble children, eager to follow light, let it come from any source, the meanest; patient children, ready to bear all things; brave children, ready to suffer anything in pursuit of truth may cost; manly children, who will not betray their individual sense of duty, at the call of all the powers of State or Church alike; children who would at a thousand times rather die with Christ than live with Herod, Pilate, Judas, or the High Priest.

STRENGTHENED BY CONFLICT

REV. DAVID H. GREER, D.D., ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH,
NEW YORK

THE forces working in modern business life and modern social life appeared to the prophet (Ezek. 1: 15-20) as wheels with the ravenous forces in them. Do we see, as the prophet did in these forces the vision of a man coming out of the ravenous forces, as the ultimate product of them, the product which they are intended to produce? The vision of a Man, whose moral muscles and fibres have been made strong by conflict, by struggle, by resistance, by endurance, sometimes by defeat? The vision of a Man, taught, trained, developed, lifted up into a purer and more human manhood, by pressures and reverses, by achievements and successes, whom discipline has fortified, whom temptation has purified, whom prosperity has not corrupted, whom adversity has not spoiled? The vision of a Man, coming up out of the conflict, the struggle, and the strife, with the marks of the conflict on him, the scars, the wounds, the hurts, the physical distresses, the physical ravages and enfeebliments perhaps, with the Cross, yet a Man, a Man like Jesus Christ?

A STRANGE MAY-DAY WALK

How it Led to Philanthropy and an Attic

By CHARLOTTE B. FROST

JOHN WIN-THROP was a very fortunate man and he knew it, as he walked briskly up the avenue that beautiful May evening. It made his heart leap to think that within a few short weeks Grace Latimer would be his wife. His life spread itself out before his vision, and he was more than content at the prospect. He raised his head and looked up at the glorious stars, and his heart there was a prayer of thankfulness.

A few moments later he walked up the steps of a substantial, handsome old residence, the house which had been the home of the Latimers for three generations.
As he rang the bell, it occurred to John to ask Grace to go for a walk, it was too glorious an evening to stay indoors. The old butler, who had known him from his childhood, smiled the usual welcome, as he informed him, "Miss Grace was in the library."

There he saw her a moment later, and it was not long before his eyes found her very fair to look upon. Grace Latimer was as sweet and lovable as she was beautiful.
Though the idol and only child of rich and indulgent parents, she had always received the most careful Christian training, and she had grown to womanhood all unspoiled, and had repaid a thousand-fold the anxious care given her.

She was delighted with John's idea of an evening walk and was soon ready to go. On their way out they stopped in the dining-room to say good-night to Mr.
and Mrs. Latimer. When they had left the room the father and mother looked at each other, and the mother's eyes filled with tears. They were both thinking how terribly alone they would be, when, in a few weeks, Grace would leave her old home for her new one. But they were proud for her to be the wife of such a man as John Winthrop, and that was a great comfort to them. Sometimes of his fellow bankers and brokers had once dubbed John Winthrop "Good John," and he had come to be known "on the street" as "Good John." Good he was, and successful also, and he had the respect of all who knew him.

As he walked down the avenue with Grace by his side, he took occasion to remark that next month, when they started out for a walk, it would be from their own home, and Grace's cheeks had borrowed a little extra color by way of reply. Just then they came to a magnificent window of a noted florist, and John suggested that they go in and decorate themselves. After fastening a great bunch of violets on her coat, Grace, at John's instance, was selecting some choice red roses to send home, when she heard a clear, boyish voice ask:
"If you please, how much are the red roses?"

"Twelve dollars a dozen," replied a man behind the flower-laden counter.
Grace turned, and saw dismay plainly written on the face of a little fellow not fourteen years old. His clothes were very shabby, and he carried a few evening papers under his arm—"left-overs" from his day's business. But Grace noticed that his face and hands were clean, his hair neatly brushed, and she caught the gleam of a pair of honest blue eyes.

The boy turned to leave the store and Grace followed.
John, with an armful of roses, was already at the door, and, with instinctive politeness, stood back to let Grace pass out first. Once on the sidewalk, she turned to the boy and said, "Red roses are very expensive at this season of the year, aren't they? Did you want me, my dear?"

The boy's face flushed at being spoken to so kindly by so beautiful a lady, and he replied, "Yes, ma'am, I did want one; I had a whole quarter I could spare for one.
My little sister is so sick, and she's been wanting some red roses. Grace was thinking to herself, "this boy has it always sold newspapers. I wonder what his history is." Aloud she said: "John, perhaps our little friend, this boy, will take us to see his sister and let us share the roses with her."

John gave the little hand on his arm a quick pressure and turned back into the store. "Let us have those roses. We will take them ourselves," he said to the salesman, and then turned to the boy. The child's eyes were alight with joy, but he was saying rather shyly that it would surely tire the lady to climb the many stairs to his poor room. Soon the three were making their way toward the East side, where the poor of New York City make their homes. On the way, by sympathetic questioning, they brought Paul to tell them his sad story, and more than once Grace wiped her eyes and tightened her clasp on John's coat sleeve. John had taken Paul's cold little hand into his as they walked along, and that seemed to make it much easier for Paul to talk.

Briefly, his story was this: He and his sister Edith, who was ten years old, were orphans and without relatives, as far as they knew. Their mother had died at Edith's birth and their father had brought them from a New Jersey town to New York City. He had been a journalist, and they had had a pleasant home and every comfort. Two winters ago, their father had died very suddenly of pneumonia and they had found themselves fatherless and almost penniless. They had sold all their household effects, except furniture enough for one room. Paul had found a bit of an attic room at the top of a building near the river, and there they had been living. Paul had, of course, been obliged to leave school and he had sold papers, run errands, and done such odd jobs as he could find, and so managed to provide enough for them to eat and to pay their room rent.
They had really been quite content, he bravely said, but the last few months little Edith had been so sick, and now she could not leave her bed. He could hardly coax her to eat at all. He was afraid every time he left her to sell his papers, that he would come back to find her much worse—and here his voice broke—and what would he do if he had to live without her?

John asked him why he had not asked help of some church or hospital, and Paul replied that he had often spoken of it, but Edith had insisted that if he did so, she would be taken to some institution where she could not have him with her, and the very thought of parting from him made her so much worse, he did not dare discuss it further.

The story was scarcely finished, when they reached the tall, dark tenement-house, and felt their way up the dimly-lighted, bad-smelling halls. At the very top, Paul opened a door and led them into a cramped room, with sloping ceiling, and one small window. The few pieces of furniture in the room, plainly showed they had once been in a home of refinement and comfort. Paul had everything spotlessly clean. A bright light came from their lamp, and the little stove upon which it was the custom to do their cooking, shone with much polishing.

John felt a big lump in his throat when he realized how bravely this child had worked to provide so well for his little sister and himself.

Little Edith lay on her bed, her face as white as her pillow, and her large, dark eyes gazing wonderingly at the strangers. Then her eyes fell upon a huge cluster of big red roses, which the beautiful lady was bringing toward her. The stems were so long, that some of the leaves trailed on the floor, and she could smell them already. The very roses she had been longing for. Paul explained that Miss Latimer and Mr. Winthrop wished to come and see her—but already Grace had her loving arms about the poor sick child. And Edith had buried her face in the longed-for roses. Very soon her shyness was gone, and she was talking happily to Grace.

In the meantime, John had sent for a well known doctor. When he arrived, and had examined his little patient, he had a long conference in the hall outside with John and Grace; the result was that John went out and telephoned first to Mrs. Latimer and then to the nearest livery stable, while Grace returned and unfolded a beautiful plan to the two children.

She told them she had set her heart upon taking them home with her for a visit, that it would do Edith good, and that they really must not refuse. Their shabby clothing would make no difference at all,

she reassured them,
and Edith should see the great doctor every day and grow well and strong again. At last the pair, after some soft murmurings together, decided to accept this delightful invitation, and then Paul and Grace set about wrapping up the sick child.

John came tearing up the rickety stairs to say the carriage was waiting, and very tenderly he lifted the little girl on the bed into his big strong arms. Paul gave the shawl around her a twist to have it closer about her throat, and then he said:

"I think I'd better pin it, Edith. I'll fix it with Father's pin," and Edith smiled at him weakly and happily while it was being done.

John glanced at "father's pin," and then to everyone's surprise, he sat down and stared first at Paul and then back at the pin.

"Whose pin was it?" he demanded of the boy.

"My father's, sir."

"Look here!" Grace," cried John, "it is my own fraternity pin!"

"It was father's fraternity, too," said Paul, "when he was at Yale."

"Yale!" exclaimed both John and Grace. "Look here, my boy," said John. "Is it possible your father's name was Henry Curtis, and that he went to Yale about fifteen years ago?"

"His name was Henry, and he graduated at Yale. I don't know just when, but a few years before I was born —about sixteen years ago, I think, sir," replied Paul.

"Come down to the carriage," said John, rising abruptly, and holding Edith closely with arms that trembled with intense feeling.

In the carriage John turned to Paul. "Did your father ever speak to you of his college friends?"

"Oh, yes, sir; his best friend's last name was like yours. He was Jerome, Winthrop and he came often to see us."

"Paul," said John, "God sent you to us to-night.
Jerome Winthrop was my brother, and I have often seen and spoken to your dear father in my own home."
And then, in a husky voice he told Paul how his father's college chum, Jerome Winthrop, had given his life to his country, when, as a member of the Seventy-first he died on San Juan Hill.

And Paul sobbed in sympathy, and told how much his father had loved the dead soldier.

They did not feel at all like strangers when they reached Grace's home. Mrs. Latimer led the way to a beautiful room where a trained nurse was already moving quietly about, and poor little Edith was soon put to bed.

The rest of that evening was spent by the Latimers in council with John, and when they separated for the night their hearts were full of tenderness and a new joy.

A month later, when John carried his bride to his own home, Mr. and Mrs. Latimer were not alone, for they had fully taken Edith and Paul into their hearts and the children were to have a permanent home with them.
Little Edith soon found her way back to strength and health, and Paul was happy all day long, watching Edith grow well and taking advantage of his opportunities at the splendid school to which his friends were sending him.

On every birthday, among her other gifts, Edith always finds a bunch of red roses, and I have often seen her bury her rosy face in the red petals to hide the tears which come at thought of the attic room and her first cluster of red roses. In memory of that night, this loving little girl takes flowers and dainty food to poor, sick little children wherever she finds them. The children's wards in the city hospitals and waifs at the Orphan Asylum and at the Fresh-Air Home have come to know her sweet face well, and the prayers and blessings of many little ones follow her.

A MOTHER'S PLEA FOR HER BOYS

Dear "Christian Herald":—I have read your dear pages for missing but one year in nine, and have never missed copy in the whole eight years. You are the greatest asure I have and I count you my best earthly friend, for now that you always stand up for the right and I have so much good from you. I live in rather an out-of-the-way place, so I look forward with the greatest pleasure to your weekly visits, and I gather so much knowledge of the world from you.

But what I am writing chiefly now is to know what you think of what Mrs. Nation is doing to the saloons. I had been reading for several weeks of her wrecking saloons. I cannot help thinking that this movement will do good. Of course, as Christians, we do not believe in violence; but something must be done. Our Government won't do it; the men won't do it, because they want the whiskey; but we mothers don't. Oh! how our hearts ache, not only for our own dear ones, but for our neighbors, too—our splendid boys!

We are, I think, about eighteen miles from a saloon; but it makes no difference. They send the whiskey in jugs, by the gallon. Oh, I wish it was as hard to get as strychnine! They rob our men and boys and destroy their body and soul.
This little mill town was so bad at Christmas, so many men and boys drunk and bruised up. Drink is the curse of this place and of many others. We have a little Sunday School here; about six of us mothers go every Sunday and take our little ones, and we have a good time, because you know it doesn't always take a large crowd to bring the blessing and so we get it, though so few. One Sunday on coming home, one of the ladies said: "We are always widows when we go to Sunday School." Oh! I would to God it was not so; but only one man, our leader, would be there, and perhaps one boy, except the little ones. Our woman's hearts ache when we think and talk of these things.

Dear CHRISTIAN HERALD, this letter is only the echo of other hearts besides mine. If Mrs. Nation is right in the sight of God, I hope millions of mothers will go and help her.
I cannot but think something will be done soon to stop the murderous work of the saloons in this our great and glorious country.

THE DIET AT SPEYER, BEFORE WHICH THE GREAT PROTEST WAS MADE, A. D. 1529

From the Famous Historical Pictures

MARTIN LUTHER BEFORE THE DIET AT WORMS

—BY A. J. D. WEDEMEYER—

THE thirty-first day of October is called the birthday of the Reformation, because it was on this date, in 1517, when Martin Luther nailed on the doors of the Castle Church, in Wittenberg, his ninety-five theses, protesting against the infamous sale of indulgences and other questionable and wicked practices in the church. These theses stirred all Christendom, and finally led to the excommunication of Luther by the Pope in 1520. Luther, in turn, publicly burned the Pope's bull at Wittenberg, on December 12, 1520. The Papists, not being able to get Luther into their power, because the Elector Frederick of Saxony—then the most influential and powerful among the German princes—protected him from his enemies; and it being evident that the Pope's power and influence was waning, and indeed in danger of being lost entirely in Germany, the Pope, by a brief, demanded of the Emperor Charles V: the enforcement of his bull against Luther.

The Imperial Diet was in session in Worms, where it had been opened on January 28, 1521. The Emperor so far acceded to the urgent demand of the Pope as to issue a citation to Luther, summoning him to Worms, to give information concerning his doctrines and books. An imperial herald was sent to conduct him thither. The Emperor's citation was delivered on March 26. Within twenty-one days after its receipt, Luther had to appear at Worms, where he was therefore due, at latest, on April 16. Luther at once made ready to go, and his mind was fully made up not to retract a single point, unless convinced by Scriptural proof that he had erred in his teachings. The Papists had their plans well laid, and felt sure that, if once in their hands, the arch-heretic would not escape out of their power; and, after he was disposed of, they would make short work with his followers.

Luther was persistently urged by his friends not to risk going to Worms, knowing the great danger awaiting him there; but he answered that if there were as many devils in Worms "as there were tiles on the roofs of the houses, he would go." To his friend, Prince John Frederick, nephew of the Elector Frederick, he wrote before starting for Worms: "I know, and am certain, that our Lord Jesus Christ still lives and rules. Upon this knowledge and assurance I rely, therefore I will not fear ten thousand Popes."

On Tuesday after Easter, April 2, he set out on his way to Worms, accompanied by a number of trusted friends. The herald rode on before, and on April 16, at ten o'clock in the morning, Luther entered Worms, riding in an open carriage and clothed in his monk's habit. His journey all the way from Wittenberg had been remarkable for the interest both his friends and foes had taken in him; and when he arrived at Worms, thousands streamed to see him, and the watchman in the tower blew his horn. The gentlemen of the Court escorted him into the house of the Knights of St. John, where lodging had been prepared for him. On the following evening he was to appear before the Diet, which was assembled in the Bishop's palace. Eck, the official of the Bishop of Treves, acted as the prosecutor, and the name of the Emperor, simply asked him two questions (pointing to a stack of books on a bench near by): (1) whether he acknowledged the books as his own, and (2) if he would retract them or persist in them. Luther seemed nervous; possibly the first sight of the august assembly frightened him.

The titles of the books were asked for, and he acknowledged them as his own; but he divided them into three classes, each of which, he said, had to be treated separately. He was evidently not prepared for this, and said the contents concerned the highest of all things, the Word of God and the salvation of souls, and he must beware of giving rash answers. He humbly entreated further time for consideration, which the Emperor directed Eck to grant till the following day.

The next day, April 18 (Thursday) Luther had to appear again. After waiting two hours, standing in a dense crowd, he was called in. Eck reproached him for having wanted time for consideration, and then put to him the question, in conformity with the wishes of the members of the Diet: "Wilt thou defend all the books acknowledged by thee to be thine, or recant some part?" With firmness and modesty, in a well-considered speech, Luther answered at length, explaining his books, and also his position, which he defended eloquently. Both Eck and Luther spoke in Latin, and then, by desire, Luther repeated his speech with equal firmness in German.

Eck, commissioned by the Emperor, ridiculed the demand of Luther to be convinced by proofs from Scripture, since the Council of Constance had already declared him a heretic, and that was all-sufficient. He demanded a short answer "without horns." To this, Luther replied that he would give an answer with neither "horns nor teeth," and that unless he were refuted by proofs from Scripture, or by evident reason, his conscience bound him to adhere to the Word of God. He could not, therefore, and he would not retract anything, for it was neither safe nor honest to act against one's conscience, and finally, still more vehemently, with a clear, ringing voice, he exclaimed:

"Here I stand! I cannot do otherwise—God help me! Amen!"

This answer fell like a thunderbolt upon the great assembly. Luther's enemies were in consternation and in rage, but his friends rejoiced and congratulated him in unmeasured terms of delight. Luther himself was happy notwithstanding his imminent danger.

For the time being, this point-blank refusal to retract destroyed all hopes of mediation or reconciliation.

Hindrances to Revivals*

THE pastor may hinder the revival, and he may do this without in the least intending it. The trouble is not with our living as pastors, for that, in the main, is right, but with our preaching.

It is not always aimed at conversion. I do not mean that one should always stand in his pulpit and, after the manner of an evangelist, cry out, "Come to Jesus!" for that sweet expression would lose its sweetness if too many times repeated; but I do mean that every minister should so preach that the surprise would be, not that people were converted under the influence of the sermon, but that they were not, and every sermon preached, upon whatever theme, should have enough of the plan of salvation in it so that if one should hear the preacher just once, he would know from that one message what he ought to do to be saved.

The people may hinder a revival. It is unquestionably true that there is to-day in many places a dearth of conversions; and whatever the explanation may be as to the cause of this, it must certainly be true that in many cases it is due to the fact that the Church is too closely in touch with the world and not enough in fellowship with her risen Head. Some one has said that the reason why the world does not join the Church is found in the fact that the Church has joined the world.

It is not necessary that we should be grossly inconsistent to lose our power both with God and with man. Paul wrote, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing." The emphatic word in the text is "touch."

I remember, when a boy studying philosophy, I was told that you could not fill a man with electricity so long as he stood on the ground, for the electrical current would pass through him into the ground and be lost; but if you would allow him to take his position upon a stool with glass legs, glass being a non-conductor of electricity, as soon as he would touch the electrical current, instantly he would be filled with it to overflowing; but if, when he were in this position, he should reach out and touch a tree, or bend over and touch the ground with one finger of his hand, the electrical power would immediately leave him.

Alas, it is because we are in some slight way in touch with the world that we have been shorn of our power, and God's work has been hindered.

I had preached for five days in a Western city with no apparent indication of victory, and I made the request that I should be allowed to leave the city and turn my face towards another field which was white already with a harvest. One of the pastors asked me to tarry for a few days, for he felt that he knew the cause of the failure. He sought out in his office one of the prominent workers in the meetings, an old man who was a judge of one of the highest courts in the city, whose name was on the church books, but whose life was in many ways inconsistent, and he said to him, "Judge, I have heard these rumors concerning you. If they are untrue, I have come to support you; but if they are true, I have also come to give you a brother's sympathy and help." The old judge bowed his head in his hands upon his desk, sobbing so that he could not speak for a moment, and then said, "It is all true, and more, and I am the most miserable man in the city." They bowed on their knees, and asked forgiveness of him who never turns away from any seeking soul. They came directly to the afternoon meeting. Just as I was on the point of pronouncing the benediction, the old judge rose to say: "My friends, I have for a long time been a professed follower of Jesus Christ, but I have been an inconsistent Christian. I have hindered the work of God, and stood in the way of this revival; and I rise to ask your forgiveness, as I have sought it from God." There was no benediction pronounced. The people, with one accord, passed by the judge to take his hand and speak a word of sympathy, and when the evening service came the power of God came upon the audience, and no less than fifty people accepted Christ as a Saviour. It was the beginning of a work which meant five hundred souls at least for Christ.

The infidelity of the world cannot hinder a revival. The sinning of the unregenerate cannot stay the wheels of the chariot of Salvation. But the infidelity of the Church and the sins of God's children—these mightily hinder it. These are an almost insurmountable barrier.

"Little" Man in Sunday School*

"ISN'T he too small?" This was the quietly circulated inquiry when my name was suggested for the above-named position. "Oh, no, we think he has the ability to discharge the duties of the office." "Yes, but how about his size?" Well, I was elected, and a general smile passed over the school when I assumed the duties. "Is that little fellow the superintendent?" was an every-day question.

I had learned one lesson well. It was this: Under such circumstances the proper thing to do was to just go ahead and perform the duties assigned as if I had been six feet high.

I did so, and yielded not a particle of my authority, but drove with a tight rein. Some smiled, others looked surprised, and all looked anxious, apparently believing failure was in store for me.

Soon the regular attendants accepted the situation, and went about their duties as willing to be led by a man four feet eight as if he were a veritable Goliath.

Amusing incidents would happen, however. After an absence of three or four weeks at one period, on my return I was introduced to a young man who was a newcomer during my absence. One of my assistants said to him, "This is our superintendent."

The young man stared, looked at both of us, and said, "What did you say?" "This is the superintendent of the school." "Superintendent, did you say?" "Yes; superintendent of this school." "Oh, yes;" and with a look that said, "There is a mistake here somewhere, but I cannot fathom it," went his way, but soon learned by actual observation that it was true.

An earnest determination to do your task soon enables you to lose sight of your personality, and I tried to forget myself in the effort to demonstrate that physical stature is not essential in the higher spheres of life.

Grandmother's Happy Old Age†

ONE afternoon while Dr. Craigie was engaged in planting out trees on the sanitarium grounds, a young lady about twenty-five years of age came up over the hill towards him.

"Grandma has been in rather poor health for a number of years," she said, "and becoming interested in the reports she heard of your lectures, and thinking you might be able to suggest something that would be helpful to her, she wished me to come up here and request you to call and have a talk with her sometime at your leisure."

Pp. 255; cloth. Price, $1. Publishers, F. E. Ormsby & Co., Monmouth, Ills.

"I contemplate a trip to the country tomorrow, and as my way passes right by your house, I can stop there for a little while in the morning, if that will be agreeable to you," was the doctor's brief reply.

With a "Thank you, that will suit grandma," the young woman turned and went back down the hill with light, elastic step.

It was early the next day when Dr. Craigie called at the cottage where dwelt Mrs. Queen and her granddaughter. The air was chill, and a bright fire glowed in the open grate, before which sat the old lady, comfortably ensconced in her big arm chair. An open Bible lay in her lap, and on a small stand beside her was her knitting, ready to be taken up in the odd moments.

When the doctor came in she had an easy chair drawn up to the fire for him by her side. She closed her Bible, and as she welcomed him, said:

"It has always been my custom to spend a little time every morning and evening meditating over the teachings of the Holy Book. The Bible is a letter from heaven and a guidebook to heaven, and it is a daily help to keep me in the strait and narrow way, which I have found to be a very pleasant way. For me to be strong for life's battles the quiet hour alone with the Father is an absolute necessity."

Dr. Craigie sat down, and the old lady was soon talking to him as to one she had always known, for he had a way of making speedy friendships with old people and little children, and they soon knew they had a place in his affections. He was helpful to them, and often from the aged one's experience he drew wise conclusions, and the guileless little ones, like fresh air and sunshine, made life more glad some to him.

Old Mrs. Queen wanted to consult him about a heart difficulty that had troubled her to some extent for many years, but as she grew older it had become worse. At times she had strange feelings, and her heart-beats became so faint that she feared they might stop altogether.

"As all people grow old they should be careful not to overwork or overfatigue themselves in any way; the resulting waste may be so great that they cannot recover from it entirely and it may leave them in a state that will cause fatal disease to seize upon the system. Nor should they get overheated, as the blood cannot cool off without injury, as it could in younger years. They should sleep a good deal; take a noonday nap; sleep whenever there is the least inclination that way. Nor should they feel that they can no longer do anything in the world because they cannot do as much. They should maintain an interest in what is going on around them."

"Grandma does that; she interests herself and is interesting because she is always learning so much," said Julia Queen, who had come in and sat down with them. "She is not like some old folks, who become garrulous, cross and disagreeable to live with, but she is just a pleasing, comfortable companion all the while."

Grandma smiled as she said: "Perhaps I keep in a happier frame of mind than some do, as I have such a sweet hope in looking forward to the eternal happy home prepared for those who love God. God is love, and love is what makes the happiness of heaven, and I think, too, that nothing makes this life on earth tolerable but love."

CHEW FOOD.

ewling Preserves the Teeth and Helps Digestion.

The finest specimens of teeth are seen in animals and human beings who chew the food thoroughly.

Dentists agree that teeth must be used to properly preserve them, and therefore they are people to chew their food thoroughly, not the nervous, hurried manner of eating altogether too common among people, and even fed on soft mushes they are liable to swallow the food without chewing.

Dyspepsia and bad teeth are the result if its practice is continued. True one can eat soft food without detriment if the necessity of chewing is remembered. Grape-Nuts food is so crisp and brittle and withal so pleasant to the taste that the user cannot forget to chew, and thus the teeth get the necessary use, and the glands of the gums are made to secrete the juices that Nature intends shall be mixed with the food before it enters the stomach. A New York doctor says many New Yorkers put a little sugar on oatmeal and then cover with Grape-Nuts, and this method compels the chewing necessary to digest the oatmeal.

Grape-Nuts food is pre-digested and also helps in digestion of other food. The doctor's plan might do for a variety, but Grape-Nuts and cream alone are considered ideal by hundreds of thousands of brainy people.

There are other reasons why those who eat Grape-Nuts look nourished and well fed. The food is made of parts of the field grains which Nature makes use of in rebuilding brain and nerve centers. Proof will follow use.

NOW A SINGER FOR SOULS

How John P. Hillis was Won from the Minstrel Stage to Christian Service....

BY REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D.

Of the ever-growing host—which is to be greatly increased in numbers in the near future—of those who give themselves, with supreme consecration, to sing the Gospel of Jesus Christ, so that it shall be a message from God to the hearts of unconvinced men, few if any have a happier spirit or a more wholesome and engaging personality than John P. Hillis. He was the Rev. B. Fay Mills' comrade for four years during the great days of his evangelistic labor, was associated for two years with Dr. S. A. Keen, and now, for five years, has had a most happy evangelistic fellowship with the Rev. Henry Ostrom. The personal Christian character of Hillis is so sweet and transparent, that it makes a background of marvelous power for the sweet songs he sings.

John Hillis was born on a farm in Putnam County, Indiana. His father and mother were active Christians, and members of the Presbyterian Church near their home. They trained their boy in the fear of God, and in his early life he was very prayerful and devout. He says, "I have always prayed. When a young boy, in the woods and fields alone, while driving the cows home from the pasture, I would often seek a quiet, secluded place to pray."

As John grew older, he was led away by evil associations among the irreligious boys of the neighborhood, and he began to neglect the religious instruction he had received in the home. When about fourteen years of age, he was aroused in his conscience and very much desired to make a public confession of Christ, but was afraid to come out definitely before his companions. At the age of fifteen, his parents moved from the farm to the little city of Greencastle, Ind., the seat of Depauw University. He thought that here would be his chance to begin the Christian life, and form new associations among those who were Christians; but being of a diffident disposition, he kept putting it off, and no one offered him the proper encouragement to make such a start. How often it is that there are young people waiting, just ready for somebody to speak the word of encouragement, and they will yield to the call of duty. Every church service ought to have in some way an opportunity for these "waiting souls" to have a chance to respond to the call of the spirit.

About this time, the Rev. Dr. M. M. Parkhurst, now superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League in Chicago, came to be pastor of the church where John attended Sabbath School. The first Sunday night that he preached, he announced that he would hold an "After meeting," in the lecture room at the close of the preaching service, and invited all those interested as Christian workers and seekers for Christ to come. John was greatly impressed by the appeal, and was sure that every word was meant for him. He went into that "inquiry room" hungry to know God. He arose for prayer when the opportunity was offered, but took no farther step that night. The next afternoon Dr. Parkhurst came to see him at the store, having secured his name, and learned where he was employed, and spoke to him so kindly, and showed such an interest in him, that he was more than ever determined to become a Christian. Unfortunately, although he joined the Church on probation, and went through many of the forms of public worship, he was not converted, and did not become conscious of the presence of Christ in his life. After a short time, in spite of many encouragements, he was back among the old evil associations. Soon after he had an opportunity for a good-paying engagement to join a minstrel troupe, and did so. In this way he was on the road all the time, and among associations that constantly led him into sin. The old convictions, however, did not leave him. For weeks he fought against his conscience, and every night went to bed with the tender but rebuking memory that his father and mother were praying for him. Then it was that Dr. Parkhurst, his pastor, was moved to write him a letter, tenderly but earnestly urging him to forsake the associations he had formed, and come back home and enter with new purpose upon a Christian life. That faithful letter came at just the right time, and went straight to young Hillis' heart. He yielded to it, came home, and in October, 1888, he definitely turned away from all his sins, surrendered himself to Christ, and entered into a joyous personal fellowship with Jesus, that has continued through all the years since until the present time.

As soon as his own heart was filled with the joys of salvation, it was the most natural thing in the world for him: to sing of them to others. He had such a strong, beautiful voice, and such a happy, hearty Christian experience, that he was immediately in demand.

When Hillis goes home to heaven, he will find many happy singers before the throne, who caught their first note of gladness from his Gospel songs.

between the Roman and Evangelical parties. The break was complete, and the dawn of liberty and freedom of conscience was in sight, which, since that eventful day, has grown brighter and is still growing brighter in all parts of the world.

To commemorate this crucial, but glorious episode in the history of the Reformation, the German people, in the year 1868, erected in the city of Worms that colossal monument, which is, without question, the grandest of its kind in the world. The immense bronze figure of Luther in the centre is surrounded by a number of statues representing the famous forerunners of the Reformation, and also Luther's illustrious contemporaries. There are, likewise, three female figures in the group, which eloquently represent three cities that were the scenes of the most stirring and trying conflicts for religious liberty. These are, the protesting Speyer, the faith-declaring Augsburg, and the sorrowing Magdeburg. To Speyer the attention of the Protestant world is just now directed, for it was here, where, five years after the scene of Worms, and again three years later, the fight for religious freedom had to be taken up once more; and to commemorate these events, the beautiful Protestant Cathedral is being built. While Wittenberg is fittingly called the birthplace of Protestantism, Speyer is the baptismal font, for it was here where, in the memorable year 1520, the Evangelicals were first called "Protestants."

A CONSECRATED WOMAN'S WORK

BY MARY BARTON COOKMAN

AMONG the most successful Gospel workers of our day, is Mrs. Grace Weiser Davis, wife of Judge Davis, of Jersey City, N. J. Let me give a leaf from her history, the record of what one consecrated Christian woman has done to bring lost souls to Jesus. She has been an evangelist for sixteen years. Thirty-four thousand souls have obeyed the Gospel call through her ministry. One hundred and eighty-seven ministers of the Gospel are numbered among the results of her labors for Christ. In Africa, one devoted missionary, converted under her preaching, is proclaiming the Gospel of Peace to those who had never heard of Jesus. She has been greatly blessed in her work among the young and in bringing little children to the Master.

She has carried a message, too, to many professing Christians, confirming fainting faith, or reviving love grown cold in those who, after once following the Master, had turned away.

Mrs. Davis first entered upon her evangelistic work at Annapolis, Md. The saloons had just been closed, and the revival then pastor, two boys sought Christ at the altar of Simpson Church, kneeling side by side. Both were converted, and they joined the church at the same time. Those two boys, close friends then, have continued in that relation all these years; they have been true to Christ, and they are now side by side in Christian work. One is the Superintendent of Simpson Sunday School, which numbers eight hundred scholars, and the other is Assistant-Superintendent. Another lad who sought Christ fourteen years ago is now the leader of the Junior Boys' Epworth League, composed of one hundred members, and pronounced by one of the Methodist Bishops to be the most effective Boys' Junior Epworth League in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Such living witnesses as these to the value of revival work, added powerfully to the interest of the recent meetings. The first Sabbath of the series the Superintendent of a Breakfast Association of Brooklyn brought a large number of men to the service. They were all converted.

At the men's meeting on the second Sabbath, the confession broke forth from one man that he had come there with the purpose of taking his life. During the pastor's kindly talk with him, he gave up the letter he had written to his poor old mother, enclosing the key to his trunk; also one to his daughter, telling her to forgive him for what he was about to do, and saying, "take care of your mother's grave"; and put into the minister's hand the bottle containing the poison he had intended to take.

Mrs. Davis has the happy gift of singing the Gospel, as well as preaching it. Many of the hymns used at the meetings are written by her. One of the most recent ones, entitled "Papa, Be a Christian for Your Little Girl's Sake," and set to music by Professor Kirkpatrick, has a touching history. When, at the close, one evening, of services she was conducting in Altoona, Penn., she was pleading with a man for whose conversion she was very anxious, his little girl ran up, exclaiming, "Papa!" Mrs. Davis said, "Why, you ought to be a Christian for your little girl's sake." The next night, as the father was starting to the church, he took the little one in his arms to kiss her good night, when suddenly she surprised him by putting her arms around his neck, and saying, "Papa, you ought to be a Christian for your little girl's sake." That night the father said he did not need any more persuasion after such a sermon as that at home, and he yielded his heart to God.

"I think Mrs. Davis comes nearer Dwight L. Moody in her evangelistic work than any person I ever saw," writes Mr. Freeborn G. Smith, a prominent business man and an earnest Christian worker, of Brooklyn, who has, with others like himself, lent practical aid and influence to making her meetings successful. All denominations have shared in the blessed results of her labors, and ministers and laymen of all churches have expressed appreciation of her extraordinary gifts and great faithfulness.

Answers to Prayers

"I know a little land-locked bay,
For souls upon a stormy sea;
What light on all the hills around,
What song of birds in every tree!

"No billows roll, no rocks do rend,
No wildly wrecking winds are there,
But tiny ripples whisper 'Peace!'
That little land-locked bay is Prayer."

The above, on a pretty printed card, has been received from two readers, "Ada and Nell," who say: "We send out this little leaflet in loving memory of our dear mother, who passed into the 'Haven of Rest,' March 15, 1900, trusting that it may prove as great a blessing to many others as it was to her."

Mrs. J. G. G. Varney, Canada, writes: "I wish to express my deep gratitude for many prayers answered when the way seemed as if every hand was against us, and troubles crowded in upon us from every side. I went to God, and he heard my prayers and answered them."

J. L. F., Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "I have been praying for nine years for relief from a great trouble. God has blessed me and granted my wish."

Reader, Elmira, N. Y., writes:

Surely "man's extremity is God's opportunity." After wrestling in prayer for months for deliverance from sore trials, the Lord has met me in a most unlooked for way, just at a time when my resources were entirely exhausted.

Reader, Chanute, Kan., writes:

I had a great trouble, a trouble which it seemed would break my heart. My husband and I prayed to God to help us, and he has helped. Now we feel we can never praise God enough for his loving kindness to us. May every one who reads this be renewed in faith.

Mrs. M. A. S., Muncie, Ind., writes:

In answer to prayer, my loved ones were saved, for which I am very thankful. Reading of the many answers to prayer, my faith has been strengthened.

Mrs. J. E. Conner, Marshalltown, Ia., writes:

I was sick. I had not heard from a dear grandchild for a long time. It seemed to me he must be sick or dead. One evening I just asked God, before I went to sleep, that if he was well and all right to let me dream of him, and he answered me. I dreamed of my grandchild and woke up peaceful and happy; and soon I received a letter from him. You can use my full name if you wish.

SAVED TO SERVE

BY ALFRED S. DYER, FORMERLY EDITOR OF THE "BOMBAY GUARDIAN"

ON Calvary's Cross he bought me,
With an undying love;
A sinking soul he sought me,
As heir with him above;
How thrills my heart at mercy,
So undeserved and free,
That placed my feet in safety,
Beyond the raging sea.

Shall grace be unrequited,
To which I owe my all?
Shall peerless love be slighted,
And conscience vainly call?
Ah no, O gracious Saviour!
Naught that I have be mine;
The life which thou hast purchased,
Be ever, only thine.

Secure from passion's billows,
Secure from sin's control,
Upon the Rock of Ages
A saved and serving soul!
To sister and to brother
To stretch the aiding hand,
That safe from death's overwhelming
They by the Cross shall stand.

To souls in heathen darkness,
How longs my heart to tell,
The precious, priceless message
I've learnt to love so well;
Of One who to the sinking,
The tempest-tossed, gives rest,
Whom saddened lives by trusting
Are now and ever blest.

Aldington, Kent, England.

A well known picture represents a shipwrecked woman clinging to a wave-lashed Cross upon a rock in an angry ocean. From above, a stream of light falls upon the Cross and the face of the refugee. She is saved! A companion picture shows the same rock, the same Cross, and the same saved woman, but she is now engaged in helping up from the raging sea a well-nigh engulfed sister. Here is portrayed the ideal Christian life—saved to serve.

There is a peculiar appropriateness in the reproduction of these artistic creations as a frontispiece (at the expense of a friend) in the recently issued report of Soonderbai H. Powar's Zenana Training Home and Orphanage at Poona, India. Among the inmates of this Home in training for Christian work, are girls rescued from death by starvation. The second picture is described as "a Scriptural ideal for Indian Christian womanhood;" for it is written: "He died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves."

These pictures have suggested the foregoing verses, in consequence of a request from my adopted daughter, formerly a famine orphan, for an original hymn. Two of the girls in training were fellow-sufferers with her in the famine of 1867, which the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD nobly did so much to relieve. Of these two girls, Soonderbai Powar lately wrote, in reference to their care of children rescued from the famine of 1900: "I do not know what I should have done without them. The Lord knew it; and so wonderfully he sent them here." These cases are not singular. I am personally acquainted with valued workers in several missions in India, who were famine waifs of years ago.

An Active Christian Worker Gone

Elder William Bartley, of Bartley, N. J., died at his home, on Wednesday afternoon, March 13, after a brief illness, in his seventy-sixth year. Mr. Bartley served as elder of the First Presbyterian Church, at Flanders, N. J., from its organization Feb. 18, 1852; and superintendent of the Bartley Sunday School from its organization. He was a life member of the American Bible Society, an honored member of the Board of Freeholders, a conscientious and upright business man, and an exemplary Christian. He was greatly beloved, especially by his church and the Sunday School at Bartley.

A Pastor's High Tribute

Rev. Robert W. Evans, Trenton, Neb., writes: "I am well pleased with your marvelous premium, the Bible, which is worthy to be in the hands of all classes of men. It is in every respect one of the best Bibles ever published."

An absorbing chapter of inside political history, telling of the secret magnanimity that marked the behavior of two open enemies at a great crisis in their lives.

Baltimore's Home
for Working-Girls

—BY—
REV. PETER AINSLIE

IN the Fall of 1895, God gave me the idea of establishing in Baltimore, a non-sectarian Home for those working girls who receive small wages. The pastor of the Calhoun Street Church of the Disciples, and at that time editor of a weekly paper, I already had my hands full; yet I could not abandon the thoughts of this Home, and it became the subject of daily prayer. The first donation was from a poor girl in Strasburg, Va. In November, 1895, I had just concluded an address there on

They are also required to be prompt at meals and to be in the Home every evening by 10:30. The position is taken that in order to perform the day's duty satisfactorily and retain good health, the working-girl requires a full night's sleep. Hence the keeping of late hours is discouraged; but at the discretion of the matron, privilege may be extended beyond the regular limit. Efforts are made to make the girls feel that they are not simply in a boarding-house, but in a real home, and that they are free to approach the matron, any of the lady managers, or the president, with any matters that concern them.

There are fifteen ladies on the board of managers. Each of these ladies visits the Home once a month, a special day being given to each, and so every other day one of the lady managers is present when the girls get in from their work; and she remains until after supper. In this way the ladies are brought into direct touch with the residents, and frequently the ladies invite the girls into their own homes. Once or twice a week I visit the Home and overlook its affairs generally, occasionally taking supper there. On the first Monday in each month there is a general board meeting in the parlor, when we are all present. Thus the matron, who has full charge, is reinforced by all the help and encouragement we can give, and the Home profits by our united efforts.

Most of our girls get $2.50, $3.00, and $3.50 a week, and if after being in our Home for some time, any of the girls should lose their positions, several large firms in the city have offered to employ them at $3.00 a week, and occasionally we avail ourselves of this opportunity.

The girls are allowed to entertain their friends in the parlor, as they would in their own private homes, remembering however, that the hour of retiring is 10:30 P.M. They use the piano, play games, read, receive callers, or make calls. When they are sick, a prominent physician gives his services to them free. We are somewhat crowded now, but in course of time,

REV. PETER AINSLIE

On the occasion of the annual convention of the Disciples of Christ, in which I merely made mention of my hope for the establishment of a Home for working girls. Immediately on adjournment, a poorly-clad girl pressed her way to the front, and laid in my hands eleven cents, saying, with tears, "Please, sir, take this for the Working-Girls' Home, it is all I have," and withdrew so quickly that I failed to get her name. In a few weeks I had made the first deposit in a savings bank for this cause, and several months thereafter, I invited a number of ladies, only a part of whom were members of my church, to form a board of managers and meet with me every month, which they did in the parlors of the West Branch Y. M. C. A. Their capital was gradually enlarged by contributions of kind-hearted people, this increase coming chiefly in nickels, dimes, quarters, half-dollars, dollars, with occasionally gifts of five dollars and twenty-five dollars. A few friends gave several hundred dollars each, and thus by June 1, 1899, we had enough to purchase a substantial three-story brick building at 5 W. Fayette street, with an annual bond rent of seventy-five dollars, the property being deeded to our trustees. On Oct. 12, 1899, the Home was formally opened, and since then about seventy-five girls have registered; two or three times that number have applied for admittance, but the capacity of the institution is limited to twenty-three. Any working girl, whose parents are not living in Baltimore, and whose wages are not over five dollars a week, may be admitted into this Home on the presentation of two letters of recommendation. Some of the girls deposit ten cents and others a dollar or more occasionally, and take pride in having a saving bank account; by this system we hope to encourage habits of thrift and the value of small economies.

Every girl is required to attend some church, Protestant or Roman Catholic, at least once on Sunday. Almost every denomination is represented among the residents. Guests are expected to read their Bibles every day. Some of the girls, though coming from Christian homes, had never formed the habit of daily Bible reading until they came to the institution.

WORKING GIRLS' HOME, BALTIMORE

we hope to enlarge our building. Many have expressed great surprise that we are able to run the Home on an income which in the aggregate represents receipts of only $1.90 a week from each girl, and that we have been able to meet all bills and keep out of debt. The girls' board money goes to pay the matron, servants, groceries, fuel, and lights. The furnishings and cost of repairs have to be supplied from contributions. At our annual donation day (October 30), we usually receive groceries; and at Easter, money for the general work of the Home is given. The Lord has supplied all our needs.

THEY poled about and made believe they were on a voyage of discovery; all the boys talking at once and a pandemonium reigning. But after a half hour had passed they began to grow somewhat weary of voyaging, and Maud said:

"This makes me think of Jules Verne's story."

"Which one?" asked one of the boys. "I've read a lot of them, but don't know which one you mean."

"The one called In Search of the Castaways. Do you know that one?"

"No, but it sounds good. What is it about, anyway?"

"O about a man who got lost on an island, and some people went to hunt him up."

"Did they find him?"

"Yes, but not for a long while. Sit down on the raft, and I'll tell you all I can remember about it, if you want me to," said Maud, who dearly loved to spin a yarn, and could do it remarkably well when she had an appreciative audience.

The boys poled the raft close to the shore, and squatting around her like a flock of interested penguins, they prepared to listen to the adventures of the "Castaways," little dreaming how graphically the story was to be illustrated. Maud soon had her listeners so absorbed that they utterly forgot the raft and all connected with it. Not so with the wind and the tide, which had just begun to ebb. On went the story teller, growing more and more eloquent, until Marjorie, too, lost all thought of her surroundings, and the boys' eyes nearly popped out of their sockets.

The raft swayed about and helped to make the story more real, and at last, just when Maud was bringing her story to a thrilling climax, and the unfortunate exile was about to be rescued, Marjorie looked up and gave a scream which brought them all to their feet. The raft, with the cove left far behind, was dancing merrily on the waves, and making straight for the Point which would take them out into the open river beyond.

The "cap'n" made a dive for his pole, only to find that the water was many times deeper than its length, and growing deeper every instant.

"Oh! oh! What shall we do? What shall we do?" cried Marjorie, in terror.

"Hush," commanded Maud, almost as white as Marjorie, but in full possession of her wits. "Sit perfectly still, every one of you. I got you all into this scrape, and now I'm going to get you all out, or my name isn't Maud Adelaide Drake."

CHAPTER XII

The Rescue of the Castaways

ON floated the raft, each moment gaining greater headway from wind and tide. As it came to the Point it was caught in the current and fairly whirled around. Some of the boys were almost in tears from fright, but the sturdy little "cap'n" never flinched, and stood beside Maud like a small admiral.

Marjorie sat perfectly still upon her rather unstable seat, and they certainly presented a striking picture as they came sailing around the Point, and into full view of a party of ladies and gentlemen who were seated upon some of the shady benches of the romantic "Flirtation Walk."

"Oh, I say; look yonder!" shouted one young man. "Those youngsters are in trouble."

"Where? What?" asked the others, springing to their feet in time to see the tallest girl on the raft wave a long pole, upon which she had fastened her handkerchief as a signal of distress. "There; just off the Point. Come, fellows; come with me as quick as you can," shouted Rodman, "or those children will be drowned as sure as the world!" and they all rushed for the boat landing.

No one had noticed Margaret, but at that instant she shrieked, "Oh, Rodman, Rodman! It is Maud and Marjorie!"

"So it is! Lord help us!" he cried, as he tore away around the Point.

But it would have been a hopeless chase had it not been for Gordon. Standing upon the forward deck of the Kingston, he was one of the first to sight the castaways, and a second later had the gig manned, and was rowing to the rescue. Imagine his surprise, when he recognized them as some of the yacht's party. Standing close to the river's edge, Margaret and the others witnessed the rescue, just as the other boat—in which Rodman and his friends were pulling at a rate which would have won them everlasting fame in their college crew—came in view, and a wild cheer rang out, waking the echoes on peaks, a mile or more below.

Gordon rowed straight up to where Margaret, white as her white serge yachting suit, stood with outstretched arms, and Marjorie, nearly dead with fright, threw herself into them, while Helen went to Maud.

"My darling, don't tremble so, you are safe now," said Margaret, "and we will soon have you on board the yacht. Gordon, we will go right back with you; and Alice, I would like you to come with us, please, while Helen goes up to speak to mamma. Rodman, will you kindly look to the care of the others, and see that these small men are returned to their homes."

Margaret soon had her charges on board the yacht, and leaving Maud to Alice's care, went below with Marjorie. Placing her upon a couch, she gave her a cup of hot coffee, which the thoughtful Gordon had instantly provided, and then desired him to take some to Maud. "I don't want it," said that young lady, "I'm over my scare, but I'm not over being sorry. If anything had happened to Marjorie, I'd never have forgiven myself."

"How in this world did you come there, anyway?" demanded Alice, who, finding that neither nursing nor consolation were required, was determined to satisfy her curiosity.

"Why, the boys invited us to ride on their raft, and I said all right, and off we went. And then I got to telling them a story about some castaways, and the next thing we knew we were castaways ourselves; and, oh, dear, I'm always getting into scrapes and nearly scaring people to death," and poor Maud looked miserably penitent.

"How could you do such a dangerous thing? Why, Maud, you will never be nearer drowning, I believe!"

"I know it, and knew it every minute; but it was no use to howl, was it?"

A little later Mrs. Drake and the rest of the party came aboard, and were not a little startled to learn of the children's escapade.

At five o'clock they started down the river, for Mrs. Drake had a plan with which to bring the day to a pleasant ending, and at the same time give happiness to a large number of little souls who had not found as much sunshine in this world as should have fallen to their share. For a year or more, Mrs. Drake had been deeply interested in the "Children's Home," near the pretty town of Nyack, a mile or more above Irvington, on the opposite side of the Hudson—an excellent institution maintained by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, whose proprietor had given many hours of time and thought out of his busy life that God's little ones might enjoy some of the lovely things which he had put on this beautiful world. Mrs. Drake had visited Mont-Lawn, as the "Home" is called, many times, but had never yet done so upon the Fourth of July, the children's day. The day of all others in the year which was enjoyed as only those to whom pleasure is the rare exception—indeed, to whom the common necessities of life are almost unknown—can enjoy, and of which the children lived for six months of the year in rapturous antici-tion, and for another six in joyous remembrance.

During the summer Maud and Marjorie had helped Mrs. Drake to make many small garments to send to the little people who, as often as not, came to Mont-Lawn for their ten days' outing, with only just enough clothing to give one an excuse for calling it such; but for whom such a condition was speedily remedied by the House Mother and teachers in charge.

Gordon had been made aware of Mrs. Drake's desire, and had so planned their start from West Point as to enable them to reach Nyack in good time. The beautiful yacht glided through the water so gracefully that it was difficult to realize the speed at which she overtook and passed other craft. Margaret sat in a low wicker chair, with Marjorie curled up on a rug at her feet; for she had not entirely recovered from her fright, which had been greater than any but Margaret realized. With her head resting against the knee of the friend whom she was rapidly learning to love better than any one in the world, excepting her father, she let her thoughts turn to that father and to the Father ever present, whom she silently thanked for sparing her to the one so far away.

A very subdued Maud sat beside her mother, and had but little to say; for some very serious thoughts were passing through that young lady's brain.

Mrs. Drake was somewhat removed from the others, and presently, when all were waving their handkerchiefs to a passing steamer laden with pleasure seekers, she took Maud's face in her hands and, turning it toward her—without saying one word—just looked in her eyes.

"Yes, mamma, I know it; I know just exactly what you are thinking. Suppose anything had happened to Marjorie! How should I have felt now?"

Mrs. Drake nodded. "I don't know what makes me do such heedless things. I don't mean to; and then the first thing I know I fly off and do some dreadful thing like I did this afternoon, and make everybody miserable, if I don't kill them outright. I wish you would knock me on the head, mamma; I believe it would do me good," Maud ended desperately.

"No, dear, knocking on the head will not help matters; it must be a knock on the conscience, and I hope you will learn to heed it, for I am afraid I shall not always be just at hand when help is needed," and Mrs. Drake stooped forward to kiss both the eyes, looking into them earnestly. And who shall say whether it was the mother's kiss just at that moment when the young heart was touched and troubled, or the spoken words which proved the greater help to madcap Maud?

At half-past-five dinner was served, and just as it was finished the yacht drew up to the Nyack landing and a merry company stepped ashore. With her usual forethought Mrs. Drake had planned all beforehand, and an omnibus was in waiting to take the entire party to the Home, nestled in a cleft of the Rockland Hills and looking out upon the peaceful expanse of the noble Hudson. Ordinarily, this would have been the hour when tired little bodies would have been seeking rest in the many snowy cots; but was this not Independence Day?

By this time all had learned their destination and were enthusiastic at the prospect. Supper had just ended as the stage drove into the beautiful grounds, and the children were gathering upon the lawn in eager anticipation of the splendid fireworks which Dr. Klopsch had provided for them. As Mrs. Drake's party stepped from the omnibus they were greeted with the Home call:

Here we are! Here we are!
C. H., C. H.—ha, ha, ha!

And not less than two hundred youngsters, ranging in age from five to twelve years, crowded about them, all eager to make the new-comers welcome and to extend to them the hospitality of their beloved "Home," for on the Fourth of July all who visit Mont-Lawn are considered the children's especial guests. The important air with which the tots filled their roles of hosts and hostesses was at once amusing and pathetic.

Poor little souls! until this beautiful charity had opened to them a new world, blessed with fresh air, sunshine, birds and blossoms, and where all was done "by

TIME WAS UP.

It was Quit Coffee or Die

When a woman is brought to the edge of the grave by poisoning from the drinking of ordinary coffee day by day, and is then made a well woman by leaving it off, her experience is worth something to others that are poison in various ways from the same habit.

Mrs. Jeannette B. Brown, 100 Minor street, New Haven, Conn., says: "Four years ago my life hung on a very slender thread of liver, kidney and heart trouble, and a very severe form of rheumatism. I was confined to bed with hands, wrists, feet and ankles badly swollen that they bore no resemblance to parts of the human body. I had frequent sinking spells from heart weakness which was thought to be dying and sometimes thought to be dead. My doctor, one of the directors of the State Hospital, a very successful man in his profession, told me to stop drinking coffee and use Postum Food Coffee as he said coffee was the primary cause of my trouble."

"I took his advice at once and discontinued medicines. Slowly the swelling disappeared and the rheumatism left me, the sinking spells became less frequent, and I got out of bed and around the house. I was completely cured, but it required some time."

"For the past three years I have been perfectly strong, healthy woman, sleep with good appetite, good color, active and energetic."

"It is a great pleasure to testify to Post that has made me a well woman again. I have many friends here and in other parts of the State who are using Postum Food Coffee regularly, and I know to their very great benefit."

love's sweet rule," for the sake of the little child born in Bethlehem so many years ago, theirs had been a starved existence. Maud and Marjorie were captured at once and carried off bodily; the children dancing and singing about them like a lot of merry butterflies; for all were dressed in pretty slips,—pink and blue predominating—provided by the "Home" and they were as clean and neat as soap and water and incessant care could keep them.

"See my new apron!" cried one tot, proudly displaying an atom of pink and white gingham.

"Where did you get such a beautiful apron?" asked Marjorie.

"Off teacher," with a satisfied nod of her head, as though one had only to suggest a need in this fairy world in order to have "teacher" shed the desired article, as the marvelous creatures in the Christmas pantomime shed their shining garments, only to stand arrayed in something still more beautiful.

"And what have you been doing all this lovely afternoon?" asked Maud of the little hunchbacked lad who had come up beside her, and confidingly slipping his hand in hers, had looked at her with big blue eyes which were too guileless to conceal his admiration for bonny Maud.

"Oh, we've been doin' heaps er things. We all got in line 'bout de Liberty Pole an' s'luted our big flag up dere. Ain't dat fine flag—see! An' we singed 'America,' 'Columbia, de Gem o' de Ocean,' an'—"

"An' we went in de chapel an' said poetry an' singed 'Gospel Bells'—chimed another tot, who, in turn was interrupted by an eager little maid, exclaiming: "An' we all played games an' made the biggest ring-a-rosy—O, just the biggest one! An' we all had pretty little flags an' marched an' marched an' marched, an' sung an' sung. An' we had ice cream—pink and white—an' I had two plates!"

"And now we are going to see the fireworks as soon as it is dark," said a tall, sweet-faced girl. "But wouldn't you like to see everything about the place? I can take you everywhere if you want me, for I've been here ever so long; almost ever since the Home opened, and I'm going to stay too, for I have nobody in the world, and I can do lots of things to help here. So, I'll show you the Home."

They explored every hole and cranny of the big, airy building, visited the great kitchen where, daily, hundreds of quarts of milk were poured into brimming mugs, and hundreds of loaves of bread were cut for hungry mouths, to say nothing of the preparation of meat, potatoes, vegetables, and cookies and cakes galore. They lingered in the airy dormitories with picture-glass walls, and rows and rows of such lowly little cots as most of the children had never even dreamed of before coming here. Then they rambled through the beautiful grounds and the charming woodland paths about the Home. And then it was time to witness the fireworks, the glowing glory of the day of wonders and delights.

Never were fireworks more thoroughly appreciated, as glad choruses of "Ohs!" and "Ahs!" testified. It was truly a gorgeous display, and visitors from miles around had come to witness it and the children's delight. Nor could there have been a more exquisite setting. High on the hillside as the Home was situated, its lights could be seen for miles around. South Mountain stood as it had stood for ages, keeping guard over the peaceful valley and casting its protecting shadow upon the placid expanse of water beyond. Across the river sparkled Tarrytown like a jewel of the night. On the mountains gleamed forth the lights of many a stately dwelling. Opposition fireworks made the heavens glorious for everybody. Everyalla along the Hudson seemed to be celebrating the Fourth. But at last the glorious day had to come to an end—and it was time, as many a nodding little head testified.

Just before leaving, Mrs. Drake gave to sweet Housemother Collins the articles of clothing which she had brought for the purpose. Marjorie was standing near her, and turning to Margaret she said: "Miss Drake, may I do something that I very much want to?"

"Certainly, dear, if I may first know what it is."

"May I give Miss Collins the ten dollars papa left with me to use for myself when he went away? It would give three little children each ten days out here in this lovely place, and I've never realized before how much it meant to them."

Margaret reached for Marjorie's hand in the darkness which hid them, and raising it to her lips, kissed it softly. It was her only reply, but Marjorie needed no other, and the ten-dollar bill was speedily transferred from her purse to Miss Collins' hands. Farewells were now said, and amid a babel of "Good-byes" and "Come agains" the omnibus rolled away. Once again on the yacht, they sailed slowly across the river that they might enjoy Mr. King's fireworks on board. It was an ideal night, and the spectacle from the river, as rocket answered rocket from opposite shores, and the red or green fire illuminated the lordly mountains, was magnificent. It was so calm that voices on shore could be distinctly heard. At intervals a fish would spring out of the water and leave a silvery shower of drops in the moonlight as he fell back. At ten o'clock they landed at their own landing stage, and made their way to the peaceful home among the trees.

CHAPTER XIII.

"Dear Papa Checa, Come Back!"

IT only needed the letter which Marjorie found upon her return to make the day one of the most delightful she had ever known. From it she learned that ere two weeks had passed her father would again be with her, and the girl was nearly beside herself with joy.

"Only think, Miss Drake," she cried, "only two weeks to wait, and how shall we make them pass quickly?"

"Suppose we go with mamma and Maud to the sea-side for one of them. That will do us all good, and the girls can keep house." So to the sea they went, and splashed and swam to their heart's content.

And how had it fared with Dr. Prior all this time? When he reached his brother, the crisis of the illness had been passed safely; but it was a forlorn shadow of Lloyd Prior which lay stretched in the miserable Mexican inn, which went by the high-sounding name of "Hotel Bustanante," but had little claim to elegance in anything save name. As soon as it was possible to move him, the doctor had his patient taken to a resort not far from Monterey, where he felt sure the high altitude would do much toward his speedy recovery, and everything necessary for his comfort was procurable. Here, after providing him with everything that could add to his comfort, he left him in the care of the trained nurse and the friend who had remained with him all through his illness, and then started on his homeward way, for he was filled with a most intense longing to see Marjorie. As he had journeyed South, he had thought again and again of the change which the past months had brought about in his home, and was filled with a very genuine gratitude to the one who had wrought it. And yet, when Dr. Prior tried to analyze just wherein the change lay, and how it had been brought to pass, it was hard for him to find the starting point.

Miss Drake had made no radical changes in his household, nor had she established any cast-iron rules which Marjorie was compelled to follow. There seemed little outward change in the girl's life, and yet he could not fail to see that the restless, nervous, and often petulant Marjorie, had given place to a sunny, happy girl who filled the house with song and laughter, and was always ready to do her share toward the happiness of others.

And so his letter was sent, and as he lived in the anticipation of his return to home and to Marjorie, she too lived in her anticipation of his coming. The letter stated the date of his sailing, and the name of the ship, but Marjorie hoped that it would be followed by another on the day he sailed. But none came, and although a little disappointed, she was in no wise concerned.

SOUL-WINNING HIS LIFE-WORK

WHEN the passion for soul-saving fills the heart, it changes the plans and purposes of a lifetime. All else seems of little value, compared with the precious souls that may be won from sin and brought to the Cross. There are multitudes of Christ's followers to-day who, for the sake of being made instrumental in reclaiming even one sinner, would consider no sacrifice too great. These are the master-workmen in the Lord's vineyard, and they are an inspiration to all around them.

A reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Mr. S. W. Corwin, of Middletown, N. Y., has sent us a brief sketch of one worker who belongs to this category:

"David L. Conklin was born in Middletown, Orange County, New York, fifty-three years ago. He was converted when twenty-three years old, and united with the First Congregational Church. Very soon afterward he was elected Assistant-Superintendent of the Sunday School, and soon began to lead meetings and do earnest work for his Master. He held frequent meetings with the basket-makers in the woods, and conducted revival services in school houses in Orange and Sullivan counties. He was ordained to the ministry in 1891, having previously, in 1882, been licensed to preach. His heart was specially drawn toward the poor and suffering, and the oppressed, and he has worked much among the occupants of jails and prisons and almshouses, and spoke cheering words concerning him who was 'oppressed and afflicted, and who had not where to lay his head.' The Faith Mission in Middletown, over which he now presides, was incorporated in March, 1889. Its special work is to provide a place of worship for the poor and the churchless. The mission has about 130 members. Besides his mission work, Mr. Conklin leads a Bible class in the Sunday School, and he also conducts two services every Sunday, from one to two week-day (evening) prayer meetings, and frequently supplies pulpits elsewhere, solemnizes marriages, and conducts funerals. He has never accepted any salary for his work, and but few donations. Through his efforts, aided by those of Rev. R. H. McCready, Pastor of the Chester Presbyterian Church, he succeeded in getting the Board of Supervisors of Orange County to appropriate $300 for jail work in Goshen and Newburgh, so that regular preaching can be held every Sabbath in these jails. For over twenty years Mr. Conklin has been employed as book-keeper and teller for the First National Bank of Middletown, where he is busy from early till late. He has never failed to find time for his spiritual work, however, and the highest joy of his life is the knowledge, that under Divine blessing, he has been the means of leading many souls into the Kingdom."

The Slaughter of the Birds

To all who are interested in the preservation of our American song-birds, these facts will be full of significance: A dealer in London received last year from the East Indies 400,000 humming birds, 6,000 birds of paradise, and some 400,000 miscellaneous birds. In one auction-room in London, within four months, over 800,000 East and West India and Brazilian bird skins and thousands of pheasants and birds of paradise were offered for sale. It is said that in England alone between 25,000,000 and 30,000,000 birds are imported yearly, and that for Europe the number reaches 150,000,000. Hence the fashionable desire for birds leads to the annual demand of between 200,000,000 and 300,000,000 birds.

A Notable Religious Congress

THE third annual Congress of the Disciples of Christ, in session at the Central Christian Church, Lexington, Ky., March 26-28, was a kind of intellectual and theological safety valve for that division of Christians. The Disciples, being congregational in polity, and withal an intensely missionary people, the annual missionary conventions of the church do not afford the opportunity of discussing many of the great problems confronting the thinking Christian man. The national Congress was planned simply as a voluntary coming together of free men in Christ, for the purpose of discussing and exchanging views on some of the great issues of the church; in other words, it was strictly educational along intellectual and spiritual lines. In scope and method it was distinctly democratic. For instance, there were nine sessions in all, each of which had its separate chairman, its specific theme, and its own set of speakers. At each session a strong paper was presented on the topic of the hour, which was afterward freely discussed. One session was devoted to the question, "Is the Doctrine of Evolution Compatible with Christian Faith?" Others dealt with "The Evolution of Religion," "The Psychology of Religious Experience," "City Evangelization," "Individualism and Christian Union," "Woman's Place in the Church, in Education, and in the Club," and the necessity and methods of readjusting the Church to new industrial and social conditions.

The programme included many phases of practical Christian work. Among those taking prominent part from outside the Disciples of Christ were Dr. Josiah Strong, Social Service League; Mr. John R. Mott, Students' Volunteer Movement; and Prof. W. D. Mackinsie, Chicago Theological Seminary.

Especially is this Congress serviceable in bringing under its influence the many students in the University of Kentucky, the Bible College, and the Hamilton Female College. REV. S. T. WILLIS.

BROKEN PETER: THE UNBROKEN NET

BY
MRS. M. BAXTER

A LITTLE band of disciples, of whom Peter was one, had traveled up to the old familiar haunts in Galilee, with the sure expectation of meeting there the risen Lord. To Peter, the most difficult thing always was to wait. Taking the initiative, he said, "I go a-fishing." They say unto him, "We also come with thee. They went forth . . . and that night they took nothing"; all their energy was wasted. When the day was breaking, after this unsatisfactory night, "Jesus stood on the beach" (R. V.); they saw him, and yet they knew him not. And "he saith unto them, Children, have ye any meat?"—just what he had asked them on the evening of the resurrection day; and yet their eyes and ears did not serve them to recognize him. "They answered him, No. And he said unto them, Cast the net on the right side of the boat, and ye shall find. They cast therefore," still unaware of who it was that gave them this direction. "And now they were not able to draw it for the multitude of fishes." Their instincts were one; they had come all the journey at his command to meet him, and the first indication of his presence brought them at once in contact with him, and they brought with them the provision which they had obtained in obedience to his command, even when they did not know who spoke to them.

With the risen Lord they found also the provision which they had so needed. Waiting for them there was a fire ready kindled, and fish and bread cooking. Oh, how often have our best efforts to help ourselves in spiritual and in earthly matters proved futile, when a look up to our risen Lord has brought us immediate help! "Bring of the fish which ye have now taken," said the Lord, and Simon Peter went aboard, and drew the whole net of fishes to land, a hundred and fifty-three great fishes, but the net was not broken. Since that time, when their net had broken (Luke 5:7), the disciples themselves had all become broken and ashamed. God aims at the inward through the outward. When outward things are fully yielded up to him, and the whole being of his children is broken, yielded, and at his disposal, he can leave them their nets with which to serve him. He came down to their human needs as their brother-Man, while he had in store much more to give them, as they were able to receive. He knew from experience how much more easy it is to receive spiritual help when the body is not weary and exhausted.

When they had eaten, "he said to Simon Peter, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these?" Did the remembrance rise up in the heart of Peter how he had boastfully said, "Though I should die with thee, yet will I not deny thee" (Matt. 26:35); "Although all should be offended, yet will not I" (Mark 14:29). He suggested that others might be offended, but not he; and now he had to acknowledge that it was he, and no other, who had denied his Lord! What proof was there now that he had loved him more than they? Peter was broken. The spirit which led him to draw comparisons was conquered. He could assert nothing on his own testimony; Jesus himself should be his witness. "Yea, Lord, thou knowest that I love thee." And now it is no more a question of fishing, but of shepherding: "Feed my lambs." Thou who hast learned thy powerlessness, thou who knowest how to be ashamed and confounded, be thou a shepherd. The question was repeated, Jesus still using an ordinary term for love—not the word Peter used, which implied the full choice of a heart which is won. Peter's answer was but a repetition, and the Lord's word was similar: "Tend [or, feed] my sheep." But a third time the Master asks the question; only now using the same word which Peter had used, and yet questioning: "Lovest thou me?"

Three times Peter had denied his Lord. Three times his love must be questioned. There is ever an analogy between our walk as disciples and the Lord's dealings with us. He must teach us the exceeding sinfulness of sin in his holy eyes. It is not retaliation—that is impossible with God; but a holy jealousy that we shall take his side against sin, and against ourselves, as far as we yield to sin; and that we may understand what our sin has cost him. "Peter was grieved because he said unto him the third time, Lovest thou me? And he said unto him, Lord, thou knowest all things; Thou knowest that I love thee." To the last, this formerly self-confident Peter could not be stirred to his former and natural self-assertion. It was no more "I," but "Thou." Oh! how God must needs humble us, by test after test, by failure after failure, until all our self-reliance and self-assertion gives way, and the "I" of our nature changes into the "Thou" of grateful faith. We never cease comparing ourselves with others until we have learned in bitter shame the utter collapse of all we had reckoned on in ourselves, and we count only on our Lord.

DECISION of CHARACTER

The Power of a Life Consecrated to God in Attracting Others to Christ

MODERN life, with its strenuous effort and its fierce competition, makes demands upon men so exhausting that there is a tendency to postpone to some future period of leisure the consideration of any question that does not appear to be immediately pressing. There is also in many men a constitutional shrinking from decision on a subject which involves difficulties of thought and action. They "do not quite know what to do with it"; they will "think it over." Or it may be that they will proceed experimentally in one course, and finding it difficult, or monotonous, or unpalatable, will change off to the opposite course. Or they have not quite made up their minds and proceed in a half-hearted, sincere way, like a man treading a passage in the dark, with uncertain, halting steps which can never lead to any definite goal. Whatsoever the subject that is treated in this way, it will be a painful and disagreeable subject in proportion to its importance. Especially is it so, if the subject is religion. To postpone consideration of it, to experiment with it, or to pursue it with a lack of energy and decision, is to treat it unfairly and with no prospect of gaining from it either happiness or usefulness. Such a person might well be addressed in the words of Elijah: "How long halt ye between two opinions? the Lord be God, follow him; but if not, then follow him."

James tells us that "a double-minded man is unstable in all his ways," and so find it in all walks of life. The man who tries first one occupation and then another, who hesitates and changes his plans, seldom comes to any success. The student who is uncertain; who gives himself to the study of mathematics, and then abandons it for the study of history, or the study of astronomy, is very likely to end with a smattering of knowledge useless to himself and the world. In politics, the man who votes one year with the Democrats and another year with the Republicans is not liked by either party, and he is often told to be either one thing or the other. So in religion there are people who, like vagabonds, wander from one church to another, "all things by turns and nothing long." True it is that if a man finds himself in a wrong course, or is convinced that he has been mistaken, can do nothing better than get as quickly as possible into the right path, and he is very foolish if he allows his pride or his love of consistency to prevent his making the change; but the change ought to be made for good reason and to be well considered. It is the man who is frequently changing or who changes lightly and listlessly who is to be despised. Quite as fatal is the habit of hesitation. Emergencies arise in every man's life which demand that he commit himself to one course or the opposite. The strong man considers the situation in all its bearings and decides. The weak man ponders and vacillates, leans first to one side and then to the other until the time for useful decision is past.

Most familiar of all illustrations of indecision is that of the man who is urged to become a follower of Christ. He admits the force of the arguments advanced, recognizes that it is his duty to become a Christian, but shrinks from the decisive step. Some day he will yield to Christ, but not now. So he goes on attending church on Sunday and the haunts of worldly pleasure in the week. Neither a thorough worldling nor a good Christian; one time almost persuaded to cast in his lot with the people of God, at another time revelling in the delights of sin. Every man is familiar with such characters, and the worst feature of the trouble is that one of them in times of religious fervor creeps into the church and become the most mischievous of all people—inconsistent Christians. God has no use for such people. Christ's message to the Church (Laodicea shows how he regards them.) The true man is he who, having pledged himself to Christ, makes his Lord's will supreme in his life. That course involves sacrifices, self-denial, occasionally ridicule and obloquy; but he who has counted the cost accepts the consequences. To him temptation involves no struggle, for he was prepared at the outset to take up his cross and follow Christ. The allurements of the world never draw him aside, for his gaze is set on Christ and all the forces of his nature are engaged in the pursuit of holiness. He is known as "a Christ's man," a man whose influence is constantly exerted on the side of right living and honesty and purity. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

A Christian Pioneer Gone

Mrs. Rhoda R. Bozorth, one of the pioneers of the State of Washington, passed away at her home in Woodland on Sunday evening, January 13, while reading. Mrs. Bozorth was born February 22, 1839, near Danville, Ill. She crossed the plains with her father, Jacob John, and his family, in 1852, with an ox-team. Six months were consumed in this trip. She married Mr. Bozorth in 1863. Since 1881 Mr. and Mrs. Bozorth have resided in Woodland. Mrs. Bozorth gained the confidence of all who met her. She was a Christian from her early years and her daily life exemplified her faith. She was an efficient wife, a kind mother and a warm friend. Her husband and four children survive her. She had been a subscriber of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for many years.

A Year's Work at Northfield Schools

The closing exercises of the eleventh year of the Northfield Bible Training School, founded by D. L. Moody, were held on March 28th. Rev. Dr. Scofield, President of the School, welcomed the guests. The report of the principal, Miss L. S. Halsey, showed the number of students enrolled to be sixty-six. Preaching and Sunday School services were held every Sunday in the different districts, extending out as far as five miles. Thirteen different pulpits have been supplied, one hundred and twenty Sunday School classes taught, fifty-six children's and young people's meetings held, one hundred and sixty-eight cottage meetings conducted and assisted, two hundred and twenty-five personal visits made. Letters were read from former students who are actively engaged in Christian work, some in China and other foreign countries, and some in the home fields. One hundred and thirty-five are on the fields, doing rescue mission work, hospital, prison, and institution work in the South among the colored people, and pastoral work. They all bear testimony to the fact that all that is learned in the school can be put into practical use, especially in city mission work. One of the students adopted a homeless colored boy in the South and is bringing him up for the Lord's work. Dr. Scofield delivered an address on the Relation of Preparation to Power.

Editor THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:—Your Testament in red is a marvel of excellence, especially in the accuracy of alignment in your work. As an old journalist and publisher, I have long revelled in the luxury of the typographical perfection attained by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which is the model publication of its time. The Lord's work ought to have the best in every direction, and in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD it has, for which I am devoutly thankful.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS AMONG THE MEN OF THE FLEETS

U. S. BATTLESHIP "OREGON"

A GREAT REVIVAL IN THE FLEETS

Our Fugitive Missionaries in China Divinely Used in the Conversion of Many Sailors on American and British Warships

FROM A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT IN SHANGHAI

SIX years ago, God sent us to China, to work among the English-speaking students of the various Government colleges, in our Beulah Chapel, Tientsin. A year ago, in addition to the Chinese student work, we were given the care of the Tientsin Guard, a company of twenty-five British marines, and we moved into the spacious new Temperance Hall. This combination work led to a new field of opportunities and far-reaching results. Our gatherings, meetings and receptions soon won the hearts of the Guard, and they permitted us to begin a weekly song-service in their barracks. One by one they accepted the Saviour, until one-third of the Guard had registered their names in my little book, in which only Christians are requested to write.

The barracks song-service was our delight. Seated at the small organ, with Mr. and Mrs. Mills, of the China Inland Mission, in the midst of shouts and weapons, and surrounded by the soldiers, we would not have exchanged places with the gods of the Chinese empire! They had a social grudge, a wound, against missionaries, and looked upon us as their natural enemies, so we resolved on a plan of scattering smiles and sunshine. Mr. Woodberry and Dr. Wong were meanwhile making a tour of the great cities in the south of China, selling 50,000 Gospels. I could not sell Gospels, but the men attended our Gospel services, for it was a Gospel of love. We sang the Gospel hymn book through and through.

As the time drew near when we must leave Tientsin, it was a question where we should go to spend the hot season. The Lord said, "Go to Wei-Hai-Wei," and do them as much good as you have done us." The prospect was inviting. I had become greatly interested in their histories and struggles. Tientsin abounded in places of vice, and many a trap was laid for unwary feet. I set every home joy as a Christian device rarely at issue with temptations, and the Lord gave us the victory! The spirit of seed was then sown that will bear fruit in eternity.

One Christian lady, who loves the work among sailors and soldiers, gave me a check "for ice cream and cake," and I taught English to a Japanese lady, who had already graduated from a Japanese college, and I also taught two gentlemen from the Japanese Consulate, and the bills were paid. As the gentlemen chose Pilgrim's Progress for a reader, it was missionary work beside, so I was more than repaid. The Lord invited us to a good-bye banquet at the barracks. The table was bright with snowy linen, silver and china. The sergeant was especially profuse in his kindness, and made a little speech of thanks after dinner. Tender messages of farewell were spoken, and we went home rejoicing. They, with our Chinese students, accompanied us to the dock, and amid waving of handkerchiefs and exclamations of "We'll all soon meet again in Wei-Hai-Wei," we pulled out of Tientsin, and were soon on the "rolling blue sea." I did not think what would happen before we met again.

Beautiful Wei-Hai-Wei! How we reveled in the fresh beauty and sparkling sea all around us! We did not yet realize the wonderful love of God that had guided us to this charming retreat before the gathering storm was to burst on Tientsin. Our first letter was from the sergeant of the Tientsin Guard, welcoming us to Wei-Hai-Wei, and this was soon followed by a letter and gift of $25 from the whole Guard. Soon a telegram came stating that the Guard had been turned back on the point of starting. Then came letters thrilling in interest, of the allied troops being hurried to Peking. Chapter after chapter followed quickly. We learned that our old home in the Temperance Hall was occupied by United States troops, turned into a barracks, guarded by field-pieces, and a target for shot and shell. We were told of mounted patrols and barricades on the streets of Tientsin, and batteries planted on the mud wall, the favorite promenade; of the crowding of women and children in the basement of Gordon Hall, the cutting of railroads, burning of stations and bridges, the thankfulness, and trust in God. From these daily prayer services, we often went to the beach to witness the landing of the wounded, in every imaginable condition. Boys, who left Wei-Hai-Wei, were dismembered and beheaded by Boxers on the way to Peking, and others were cruelly wounded in the taking of the Tientsin, "native city." Mother's boy, half way round the world from home, endured discomforts and bravely faced death for us all, that China might be civilized and brought within the pale of nations.

Life at Wei-Hai-Wei was too pleasant to last long, and we were not surprised when a telegram came ordering us to Japan. We asked Captain Gaunt's permission to give the men a good-bye. It was a happy evening. The dining-room and verandas were filled, and the Gospel songs rang out with a hearty good will. A deep impression was made by the marine (mentioned above), advancing to the centre of the audience and singing to auto-harp and accompaniment:

Take my life, and let it be Consecrated, Lord, to thee.

He had hosts of friends, and followed with a hearty song of invitation.

Then news came that all our things stored in Tientsin—piano, library, pictures and treasures of the home land, brought to China five years before—were destroyed by the Russians. Letters and remittances were hopelessly astray in those days, and we depended on Elijah's God. We were taken to Shanghai on the British store ship Humber, receiving every attention. We were glad to leave Shanghai. It was simply congested. A thousand missionaries, representing sixty missionary boards; business men and their families, and hundreds of Chinamen from the north, taxing every available place, and amid all the discomforts of August heat. We applied for passage to Japan on the Nagato Maru, and were told every ticket was sold; but Captain Young gave us the "social room," until we were welcomed by Mr. Makins and Mr. Mosely, in the Christian Endeavor Seaman's Home, in Nagasaki. Here were also friends from Tientsin. The United States Consul, Mr. Harris, was being constantly interviewed as to free passages home for the refugees. He was indefatigable in his efforts, and I went to him and asked to be sent home with three little children. Almost immediately after this I found a letter at the post-office, telling me to remain in Japan, and by no means come home.

I had seen comparatively few Americans during nearly six years in China. Now it was a pleasant sight—our own boys in blue. The first night at the song service, two United States sergeants confessed Christ, and many others back here from Manila now began a Christian life. Happy days followed. The meetings on the United States transports were especially inspiring to me, and they were a revelation of the lives our boys live on the sea. It is not a bright picture. I will not dwell upon it; but, by God's help, my life shall be given to the work of brightening and uplifting sailors and soldiers lives in the Far East. One meeting in Nagasaki will serve as a sample of all. The Hancock, glittering with lights, is a thing of beauty, in the harbor; the whole harbor is ablaze with lights. The canal is lined with drinking-places, and streams of American seamen "going in thereat," or riding isolation of Peking and Paotingfu, and the disastrous march of the column under Admiral Seymour to the relief of the capital. My chief cause for thankfulness was that every man of the old Tientsin Guard had a New Testament in his box, and that my husband had left 20,000 portions of the Gospel in the native homes and stores of Peking.

In the meantime, streets of little Chinese houses in Wei-Hai-Wei were repaired, and fitted up for the temporary accommodation of the refugees. But for the distressing news from the north and the arrival of boatloads of wounded, we would have felt it an earthly paradise! Our cottage was ever open to the sailors and soldiers off duty, and the Gospel story again found willing listeners. One of the brightest conversions of our six years' work in China was a royal marine at Wei-Hai-Wei. The Seamen's Institute, under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Mudditt, is one of the moral lighthouses of Wei-Hai-Wei. There we saw bluejackets and marines, missionaries and refugees from many places, and heard narratives of thrilling adventure and providential escapes that were more like fiction than fact, yet, told with calmness, and touching and singing in 'rickshaw processions.' Money is spent like water, because here one dollar suddenly becomes two in value. Wicked men and women entice on every hand. A little band of Christian workers comes to the Seaman's Home, and with Gospel hymns and baby organ and attractive literature, headed by Mr. Makins, are rowed over in his private sampan. We find a hundred men in swimming by moonlight, and we are escorted up the gangway to find the decks crowded with hundreds more. The men are soon singing Gospel hymns under the swinging lights.

One by one, heartfelt testimonies are given. Mr. M— extends an invitation to turn away from all this "Vanity Fair," and "enter in at the strait gate." I hear a "Praise the Lord!" and know that some "wandering boy" has accepted the invitation. Then I am called upon as "Mrs. Woodberry, the sailors' and soldiers' friend, from Tientsin." I find the whole deck covered with earnest-faced men, waiting for a message from God. Everything is forgotten in the enthusiasm of the work. A second lad rises at my invitation, and stands by the first, and as I tell the simple story of God's work among the boys in Tientsin and Wei-Hai-Wei, another comes and says, "I want the angel to write my name down to-night, and I'll sit down and write and tell mother." The hour passes all too soon, and amid a shower of hand-shakings and thanks, we return to the city.

September found us in Shanghai again, homeless and uncertain what to do, but with boundless trust in God. I began looking for a home and chapel combined. I found and rented a house, and gathered a little company of Chinese students for meetings and receptions each week. To my joy, I found I was in the same block with the Seaman's Home, called Shaftesbury House, kept by Mr. and Mrs. Fellgate, of the C. I. M., and Mr. Stuckenbrok, a converted sailor of the U. S. S. Monocacy. The day after I arrived I led the meeting for sailors at Shaftesbury House. That night God gave us a soul from H. M. S. Bonaventure. I learned that the harbor and Yangtse Valley were the anchorage for many American and British men-of-war. Some of the converted sailors on the British warship Alacrity (Admiral Seymour's ship), whom I had met at Wei-Hai-Wei, told many interesting stories of the war. The whole city was stirred by constant rumors of the sufferings of the missionaries and others in far-off provinces. Prayers arose like daily incense, and each sought and found his or her place of service in this great heathen metropolis. A devoted missionary from Honan, Robert Powell, began visiting the ships and inaugurated a series of song services on board that attracted all interested in sailor work; and in this little company of choice musicians from half a dozen provinces, I have been permitted to work and "see the salvation of God." I send a photo of the workers, taken by Mr. Powell, whom I call the Count Von Waldersee of the allied Missionary forces, during the campaign in Shanghai harbor. He has also taken photos of H. M. S. Alacrity, Whiting, Hermione, and Waterwitch, and the group of missionaries and blue-jackets in the picnic parties. The photo of the U. S. S. Oregon was taken by Dr. Lee, of Tennessee, one of the ladies in the group. God has signally blessed the work on ship and shore. The other workers in the group are Messrs. Quirnbach, Miller, and Williams, of the C. I. M.; Dr. Lee and Miss Matthews of the Southern Presbyterian Mission; Mr. and Mrs. Chapin, Miss Davidson, and Mrs. Woodberry, of the Christian and Missionary Alliance, and the Misses Kellar and Kelly, of the Christian Mission. Many others, not in the photo, have also ably assisted. Splendid meetings have been held not only on the ships of which we send photos, but also on the Wallero, Aurora, Rosario, Pique, Placer, and Astraea; 125 men have been converted, and forty-five baptized. The friends from Shaftesbury House have been nobly assisted by Mr. N. Viloudaki, of Shanghai, and Rev. Mr. Sweet, of Hangchow, and Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy, on the U. S. S. Princeton, Nashville, and Helena. They expect to get on the Monadnock next week. The fleet has commenced going south to Hongkong, and the southern fleet will be coming north, when we hope to have a new field of service.

God is working marvels on these ships. Many of them are too far away to visit, but the Oregon's steam launch has met us at Woosung all winter, and carried us out Sundays. An average attendance of 125 men has greeted us, and the one Christian on board has now become the centre of a group of about thirty. We have taken our own lunch, but tables have been set for us with beautiful linen and china, tea, cream and sugar furnished, and servants show every attention. Words fail to express our appreciation of the kindness extended by the captain and officers of U. S. S. Oregon for the last three months, and last Sunday Captain Dickens completed the long list of favors by permitting a young man to accompany us home for baptism, although the ship was under sailing orders. For several weeks, the launch conveyed us to H. M. S. Aurora, and an afternoon service was held on board.

One of the most satisfactory features of the work has been to see the Christian lads work for their shipmates. Coming home one afternoon, I found a lad from the Alacrity kneeling in the dining-room praying with a lad from the Centurion, a fine athletic fellow on the admiral's staff. He has since become a splendid worker. Often I have come home, and the same lad who brought Mr. B—, has come to me and whispered, "Mrs. Woodberry, I've brought Mr. — to-night, just say a word and he will come to the Lord," and they have "Come." We talk a good deal about "starless crowns," and these lads are working for stars. They have won many, and the circles of influence which they set in motion are ever increasing in number and size. After one meeting on the Rosario, eight accepted Christ, and the whole ship was discussing the all-important theme of salvation. On most of the ships the Christians increased in numbers from two or three to from twelve to thirty, twenty-five and fifty. God has wonderfully brought ships and missionaries together in Shanghai this winter, and many an English and American boy has sent the glad word of his conversion home to father and mother from China.

Shaftesbury House is a model seaman's home. There are bright, full Gospel meetings there every night, except Thursday and Saturday, which have been granted me for seamen's receptions each week at Beulah Chapel. These are very popular, and God has signally blessed us with many conversions. After an evening of "Songs and Solos" and refreshments, we always "Throw out the Life Line," and the evenings have been few when someone or more have not gone away richer than they came.

The Christmas season ended with a large gathering at Union Church, where our Reception and Lookout Committees were provided with buttonhole bouquets for all entering, and little envelopes and texts for all departing. A fine programme and choice supper was given by ladies and gentlemen of Shanghai. On two beautiful autumn evenings, the bluejackets gave the workers an outing. They came up to Shaftesbury House in a long line of carriages, and we were whirled down Bubbling Well Road, several miles, to a charming locality, opposite Sheng Taotai's Cottage, where we had a picnic supper, songs and prayer. The most gratifying work has been done on the Hermione and Alacrity. On the former, since leaving for Nanking, the ward-officers, who became much interested during our reception in Shanghai, have opened their rooms for evening meetings for the men, and are working indefatigably for their conversion. The Hermione's have sent me nearly a hundred dollars so, to help me keep the receptions up and save the lads from the temptations of Shanghai. And now we are going to tell our homeland friends, through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, our desire for a circulating library, magazines, etc., for this most inspiring work among the "Boys in Blue" from the United States and England. Attractive story tracts, illustrated and flower Scripture texts can be used by the hundred. We are also receiving many little gifts for our Building Fund and hope, by and bye, to have much more suitable accommodation for both our sailor and Chinese friends, if God will.

A few weeks ago, H. M. S. Astraea arrived in harbor. I wrote to the captain, telling the story of the "Lord's new Jackets" in the "Far East." A reply was received at once, and the captain volunteered to put up our notices for Wednesday evenings. It looks now as if the Astraea will become the Banner Gospel Ship.

Sometime later we were invited to H. M. S. Hermione to spend Sunday, and participate with two hundred and fifty men in communion service, held by the chaplain and captain. In the afternoon, I was permitted to receive the twenty-five Christian lads, one by one, for a word of encouragement and counsel. Later, our visit to the sick bay was rewarded by the conversion of a sailmaker, who lay helpless in his hammock from rheumatism. A mother's prayers have followed him twenty-five years. Two others also found the light. Returning to Shanghai, in time for the Astraea's setting, we were again greeted by a large company of blue-jackets, and three more accepted Jesus, and two more on the same ship at Shaftesbury House, in the evening. Thus the work of the Lord, among British, American and Chinese, goes triumphantly forward into the twentieth century. To God be all the glory! Yours for Christ and China and our boys in blue, MRS. W. J. WOODBERRY.

THE FESTIVAL OF MAY

THE loiterer in Central Park, on a bright Saturday of early May, often happens upon a sylvan scene of great beauty. A company of happy children, with banners and flowers and long streamers of gay ribbon, and in their midst one who has been chosen as the queen, the most popular, or the prettiest, or the wisest of their group. When the oldest of us were children, we played at this same picturesque game, and the mimicry of royalty, delighting our little ones to-day, dates back by many centuries, and is of great antiquity. Among Alfred Tennyson's best-known lyrics is one of strangely haunting music and tender pathos, which we understand when we remember that it is all about a lovely child, whose sweet soul is not long for this world.

Will you wake and call me early, call me early, Mother dear,
To-morrow 'll be the happiest day of all the glad new year.
Of all the glad new year, Mother, the maddest, merriest day,
For I'm to be queen of the May—Mother, I'm to be queen of the May.

THE CEREMONY OF CROWNING THE MAY QUEEN, CENTRAL PARK, N. Y.

In the merrie England of our forefathers, the May-pole always stood on the village green, and was the centre of laughing crowds, who sang and danced and performed feats of strength and dexterity, and the celebration of May is still a feature of rural life in England. With us, the May-baskets are hung in the twilight by the children, and the school children take this time for a gala occasion. For the Queen of May is usually the favorite pupil, and they all sing around her, as she takes her place on the throne, attended by aids of honor, fairies, elves, and ambassadors from the court of Flora of summer's self. The ceremony is often quite elaborate, and it is indeed a compliment and an honor to be chosen Queen of May. Robed in dainty white and bearing flower with gilded wands, and a crown of roses carried proudly in the van, the little processions wind in and out among the trees in Central Park, and add a unique feature to the charming May days. The winter siege is at last over, for May is here once more.

“YIELDING THE HEART TO GOD”

AN ADDRESS BY WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, THE BUSINESS MAN'S EVANGELIST

AT a recent Young Men's Christian Association Convention at Trenton, N. J., the principal address was delivered by William Phillips Hall, the “Business Man Evangelist” and Chairman of the Twentieth Century National Campaign. Taking for his text Proverbs 28:13, the speaker directed his remarks toward those who have not yet taken a decisive step toward eternal life. He said:

A year ago last April, while conducting a special series of evangelistic meetings, on a Sunday afternoon, while speaking upon the same text at I have used to-day, at the close of the meeting a number of men announced their intention of accepting Christ, and I went down to the audience and General E. said to me, “There is a young man I would like you to speak to, if you will come with me.” And I went down and saw the man, and he was deeply moved and was weeping. I said, “Do you want to yield to Christ?” and he said “I do.” There were two boys sitting beside him, one of whom wanted to take the same step. I prayed with them. The General knelt down, and I said, “General, you pray with him.” Then, with Mr. W. R. Moody and several other friends, I went to the hotel, and a few minutes afterwards General E. came to me and said, “I have such good news for you; the most wonderful conversion that ever took place in B— has come to pass; the man that you were talking to is now the wickedest man in B—. He has just come from prison, and the man who sat by him had threatened to shoot on sight, as it was through his evidence that he had been convicted; but God stayed his hand.” He had heard the message, “He that covereth his sins shall not prosper; but whoso confesseth and forsaketh his iniquity shall have mercy,” and he yielded to Christ, and I believe he was converted through and through.

At the Christian Workers' Conference in Northfield, a man came to me, a fine, princely looking fellow, and he said “I am so glad to see you,” and who do you suppose it was? He was that man who had once been the wickedest man in B—, whose name was spoken with disgust and loathing by all respectable citizens in that place; now become a Christian gentleman, a son of God, a prince of Heaven, and blessed be God, what Jesus Christ did for that man he can do for us. We are all in the same class, spiritually, in his sight; we are all sinners in his view. God is calling upon us in mercy and love.

If I could only impress on you the thought that God has been trying to win you to Heaven. There are some here to-day who have lost their loved ones; their hearts have been almost broken, and they have wondered why. It was because God loved you that he visited you with the rod of affliction. “Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth.” He loved you. He is striving and working to win you to himself. God speaks first in love and kindness, and then in affliction and judgment.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL,
Leader of the National Gospel Campaign

When I was a boy I united with the Christian Church, but a few years later I got where many get. I mention this for your benefit. I got off the track. My father was an earnest Christian man, and he would say to me “My boy, I long to have you come back to the Master's house, to live for Heaven.” And I would listen, but say nothing. And I remember one day I came home and found father very ill, and I remember how the family went down to dinner, and I sat by father's side, and he placed his arm about me, and he said “My boy, my heart aches for you; I want you to come back to God, to give your life to his service; I want you to promise me to take this step.” I sat dumb, not a word did I say. After having exhausted all the spirit of persuasion with me, my father began to pray to God, and he prayed in the same spirit as Moses prayed; he said, “My God, if it be necessary that thou shouldst take my life in order that my boy may be won over to Thee, then I pray Thee to take my life.”

I went straight to my place of business in Boston, and the following Wednesday, the first day in December, 1880, a telegraph operator came in with a telegram, which I opened, and read, “Come home at once, your father is dying—Mother.” It seemed as if a dagger was thrust through my heart. I went home through the darkness of that stormy December night. It all seems like a dream now, and finally I reached home, and I went through the door, and my mother met me there, and she threw her arms about my neck, and laid her head on my shoulder, saying “You are all that I have left now to look to, your father died this morning.” Do you wonder, dear friends, that I staggered like a drunken man?

After a time I tried to go to sleep, but could not sleep, and I said to myself, “If I had only reached here in time!” About midnight I could stand it no longer, and I went to the chamber wherein that silent form was laid, and I went up and uncovered the face upon which the hand of death had been laid; and looking upon it, dropped on my knees and placed my hand on that hand cold in death, but I felt that my father heard me, and I said, “Father, I have come home to give my heart to God,” and I then and there yielded myself to God, and God graciously forgave me.

Let this inspiring thought remain with you, that

He always wins who sides with God. To him no chance is lost.

God's will is sweetest to him, when it triumphs at his cost. All that he blesses is our good, and unblest good our ill, And all is right that seems most wrong, if it be his sweet will.

I am going to appeal to your manhood, to your intelligence; I am going to appeal to your sound reason and good judgment and common sense, and I say, you who have not yet yielded to Christ, who have not yet forsaken your sins, God's call comes to you with a double force—behold now is the accepted time—behold now is the day of salvation; and the time has come for you to yield yourselves to Jesus Christ; and by so doing, show yourselves to be far grander, nobler men than you have ever shown yourselves to be before. There is nothing that any man can do that so exhibits the grandeur of his manhood and innate nobility than standing up for his Lord and Master, and saying, “I accept him for my Lord and Saviour. I trust him as my Lord.”

I am going to ask two questions: First, I am going to ask every man in this assemblage who can say the word that has been given to-day is God's word, to say: “It is true; it is worthy of the acceptance of every true man, and I join my testimony with the testimony of Mr. Hall, and I join my exhortations with his, that every one of my fellow townsmen will yield to Christ.” Second, I ask every man here who is not standing, if he will say: “Not in my own strength, but with God's help, I will forsake sin and take Christ as my Saviour.”

“THE LITTLE GIANT OF TREMONT TEMPLE”

ONE of the busiest pastors in all New England is the Rev. George C. Lorimer, of Boston, Mass. What with morning, afternoon and evening services on Sundays, special meetings, prayer-meetings and “Talks to Young Men” during the week, not to mention lectures, literary work, the daily “office hours,” during which he is always to be found at Tremont Temple, and the multitudinous demands upon his time by societies and religious bodies for addresses, it surprises his acquaintances to know that he has even a moment's leisure. Dr. Lorimer, whom his contemporaries have dubbed “the little giant of Tremont Temple,” is a preacher rather than a preacher. There is a prevalent impression that his sermons are short, whereas, in fact, they are rather more lengthy than is the fashion nowadays; yet fascinating is his style and so all the interest sustained that his discourse seems unusually brief. The visitor to Tremont Temple, Monday or weekday, is impressed by the large percentage of men, especially young men, in attendance at the services. The Temple is probably the most unique church edifice in America—a sort of mammoth beehive, honeycombed with business offices, board-rooms, meeting-rooms, lecture-rooms, “Chopin Hall,” “Lorimer Hall” and the superb main Auditorium. Most of the halls in the Temple are rented months ahead for almost every day and evening in the year. Dr. Lorimer never has time to talk about himself for publication, but is always ready to tell of the glorious history and traditions of Tremont Temple.

Like the old London 'bus driver, who would never consent to take a holiday unless he was permitted to spend the day driving some other fellow's stage, Dr. Lorimer for many years has taken his summer “rest” by preaching in some other pastor's church. It is in his own home in Brookline, Mass., that the doctor does his hardest literary labor.

His library is his workshop. Here were written his Messages of To-day to the Men of To-morrow, The Argument for Christianity, Christianity and the Social State, and other books that have become well known.

INSECTILE LESSONS...

TEXT, Prov. 6: 6-8:

Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise: which having no guide, overseer, or ruler, provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest.

THE most of Solomon's writings have perished. They have gone out of existence as thoroughly as most of the books of Pliny, and of Æschylus, and Varro, and Solomon's Proverbs, preserved by inspiration, are a small part of his voluminous productions. He was a great scientist. One verse in the Bible suggests that he was a botanist, a zoologist, an ornithologist, and knew all about "He spake of trees, is in Lebanon, even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall: he spake also of beasts, and of fowl, and of creeping things, and of fishes." Besides all these scientific works, he composed three thousand proverbs and a thousand and five songs.

An Example of Divine Wisdom

Although Solomon lived long before the microscope was constructed, he was also an insectologist, and watched and describes the spider build its suspension bridge of silk from tree to tree, calling it the spider's web; and he notices its skillful foothold in climbing the smooth wall of the throne-room in Jerusalem, saying: "The spider taketh hold with her hands, and is in kings' palaces." But he is especially interested in the ant, and recommends its habits as worthy of study and imitation, saying: "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise: which having no guide, overseer, or ruler, provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest."

But it was not until about three hundred years ago, when Jan Swammerdam, the son of an apothecary at Amsterdam, Holland, began the study of the ant under powerful lens, that the full force of Solomon's injunction was understood. The great Dutch scientist, in his examination of the insect in my text, discovered as great display of the wisdom of God in its anatomy, as astronomers discover in the heavens, and was so absorbed and wrought upon by the wonders he discovered in the ant and other insects, that body and mind gave way, and he expired at forty-three years of age, a martyr of the great science of insectology.

No one but God could have fashioned the insect spoken of in the text, or given it such genius of instinct. Its wisdom for harvesting at the right time; its wonders of antennæ, by which it gathers food; and of mandibles, which, instead of the motion of the human jaw up and down in mastication, move from side to side; its nervous system; its enlarging doors in hot weather for more sweep of breeze; its mode of attack and defense, closing the gate at night against bandit invaders; its purification of the earth for human residence; its social life; its republican government with the consent of the governed; its maternal fidelities; the habit of these creatures of gathering now and then under the dome of the ant hillock, seemingly in consultation, and then departing to execute their different missions.

Insectile Vices and Virtues

But Solomon would not commend all the habits of the ant, for some of them are as bad as some of the habits of the human race. Some of these small creatures are desperadoes and murderers. Now and then they marshal themselves into hosts and march in straight line and come upon an encampment of their own race, and destroy its occupants, except the young, whom they carry into captivity; and if the army come back without any such captives they are not permitted to enter, but are sent forth to make more successful conquest. Solomon gives no commendation to such sanguinary behavior among insects, any more than he would have commended sanguinary behavior among men. These little creatures have sometimes wrought fearful damage, and they have undermined a town in New Granada, which in time may drop into the abyss they have dug for it.

But what are the habits which Solomon would enjoin when he says, "consider her ways, and be wise?" First of all, providence, forethought, anticipation of coming necessities. I am sorry to say these qualities are not characteristic of all the ants. These creatures of God are divided into granivorous and carnivorous. The latter are not frugal, but the former are frugal. While the air is warm, and moving about is not hindered by ice or snowbank, they import their cargoes of food. They bring in their caravan of provision; they haul in their long train of wheat or corn or oats. The farmers are not more busy in July and August in reaping their harvest than are the ants busy in July and August reaping their harvest. They stack them away, they pile them up. They question when they have enough. They aggregate a sufficient amount to last them until the next warm season. When winter opens, they are ready. Blow, ye wintry blasts! Hang your icicles from the tree branches!

Imbed all the upper highways under snow-drifts! Enough for all the denizens of the hills. Hunger shut out and plenty sits within every living thing, has blessed the ant-hill. In contrast with that insectile behavior, what do you think of that large number of prosperous men and women who live up to every dollar that they make, raising their families in luxurious habits, and at death expecting some kind friend to give their daughters employment as music teachers or typewriters or government employees? Such parents have no right to children. Every neighborhood has specimens of such improvidence. The two words that most strike me in the text are "summer" and "winter." Some people have no summer in their lives. From the rocking cradle impoverishment. In almost every man's life there comes a winter of cold misfortune. Prepare for it while you may. Whose thermometer has not sometimes stood below zero? What ship has never been caught in a storm? What regiment at the front never got into a battle? Have at least as much foresight as the insect world. Examine the pantries of the ant-hills in April weather, and you will find that last summer's supply is not yet exhausted. Examine them next July, and you will find them being replenished. "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise: which having no guide, overseer, or ruler, provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest."

Wise Forethought

This is no argument for miserliness. Avarice and penuriousness destroy a man about as soon as any of the other vices. We have heard of those who entered their iron money-vault for business purposes, and the door accidentally shut, and they were suffocated, their corpse not discovered until the next day. But every day, and all up and down the streets of our cities there are men, body, mind, and soul, forever fastened to their own money-vaults. Accumulation of bonds, mortgages, and government securities, and town lots, and big farms, just for the pleasure of accumulation, is despicable, but the putting aside of a surplus for your self-defense when your brain has halted, or your right hand has forgotten its cunning, or your old age needs a man-ant, or for the support of our more bloated breadwinner for your hold—that is beautiful, that is right, that is Christian, that is divinely approved. That slays that you have taken Solomon's ant for an object lesson. Going out of this world without leaving a dollar for those who remain behind, if you have done your best, you have a right to put your head in calm confidence on the pillow which Jeremiah shook up in the forty-ninth chapter of his prophecy: "Leave thy fatherless children, I will preserve them alive; and let thy widows trust in me." But if having means, through mortgages, or bonds, or good life insurance, for providing for helpless widowhood and orphanage, you make no provision for post-mortem needs, how dare you go up and take a place in heaven and let your wife and children go to the poor-house, or into a struggle for bread that makes life a horror and sometimes ends in suicide?

But my subject reaches higher than temporal foresight for the soul, provision for eternal experiences, preparation for the far beyond. Ant-hills, speak and teach us a larger and mightier lesson of preparing food for the more important part of us! Do you realize that a man may be a millionaire or a multi-millionaire for time and a bankrupt for eternity; a prince for a few years and a pauper forever? The ant would not be satisfied with gathering enough food for half a winter or quarter of a winter. But how many of us seem content, though for the ten-millionth part of our existence! Put your pardon for all you have ever done wrong, and you will be called to endure, and there will be no force in life or death or eternity to discomfit you. I declare it! There is enough of transforming and strengthening power in Christ for both hemispheres!

Strength for All

Furthermore, go to the ant, and consider that it does not decline work because it is insignificant. The argument of seed it hauls into its habitation may be so small that the unaided eye cannot see it; but the insectile work goes on—the carpenter ant at work above ground, the mason ant at work under ground. Some of these creatures mix the leaves of the fir and the catkins of the pine for the roof or wall of their tiny abode, and go out as hunters looking for food, while other domestic duties stay at home. Twenty specks of food they are moving toward their granary, put upon a balance, would hardly make the scales quiver. A bit of

to the still grave it is relentless January. Invalid infancy followed by some crippling accident, or dimness of eyesight, or dullness of hearing, or privation, or disaster, or unfortunate environment make life a perpetual winter. But in most lives there is a period of summer, although it may be a short summer, and that is the time to provide for the future.

One of the best ways of insuring the future is to put aside all you can for charitable provision. You put a crumbling stone in the foundation of your fortune if you do not in your plans regard the sufferings that you may alleviate. You will have the pledge of the high heavens for your temporal welfare when you help the helpless, for the promise is "Blessed is he that considereth the poor; the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble." Then there is another way of providing for the future. If you have a thousand dollars a year income, save one hundred dollars; or two thousand a year, save five hundred; or three thousand, save one thousand. Do you say such economy is meanness? I say it is a vaster meanness for you to make no provision for the future and compel your friends or the world to take care of you or yours in case of bereavement or calamity.

There are women who, at the first increase of their husband's resources, wreck all on an extravagant wardrobe. There are men who, at the prospect of larger prosperity, build houses they will never be able to pay for. There are people with four thousand dollars a year income, who have not one dollar laid up for a rainy day. It is a ghastly dishonesty practised on the next generation. Such men deserve bankruptcy and work on a small scale. There is no use in our refusing mission because it is insignificant. Anything that God in his providence puts before us to do is important. The needle has its office as certainly as the telescope, and the spade as a parliamentary scroll. You know that became of the man in the parable of the talents, who buried the one talent instead of putting it to practical and accumulative use. His apology was of no avail.

There is no need of our wasting time and energy in doing for some other sphere. There are plenty of people to do the big and resounding work of the church in the world. No lack of brigadier-generals or master-builders or engineers for bridging Niagaras or tunneling the Rocky Mountains. For every big enterprise of the world a dozen candidates. What we want is private soldiers in the common ranks—masons not ashamed to hold a trowel; candidates for ordinary work to be done in ordinary ways in ordinary places. Right where we are there is something that God would have us do. Let us do it, though it may seem to be as unimportant as the rolling of a grain of corn into an ant-hill. Furthermore, go to the ant and consider its indefatigableness. If by the accidental stroke of your foot or the removal of a timber destroyed, instantly they go to rebuilding. They do not sit around moping. At it again in a second. Their fright immediately gives way to their industry. And if our schemes of usefulness and our plans of work fail, why sit down in discouragement? As large ants as have ever been constructed will be constructed again. Put your trust in God and do your duty, and your best days are yet to come. You have never heard such songs as you will yet hear, nor have you ever lived in such grand abode as you will yet occupy, and all the worldly treasures you have lost are nothing compared with the opulence that you will yet own. If you love and trust the Lord, Paul looks you in the face, and then waves his hand towards a heaven full of palaces and tones, crying, "All are yours!" So that what you fail to get in this present life, you will get in the coming life. Go to work right away and rebuild as well as you can, knowing that what the trowels of earthly industry fail to rear, the sceptres of heavenly reward will more than make up. Persistence is the lesson of every ant-hill. Waste not a moment in useless regrets or unhealthy repining. Men fret themselves down, but no man ever yet fretted himself up. Make the obstacles in your way your coadjutors, as all those have who have accomplished anything worth accomplishment.

John Philpot Curran, Master of the Rolls in Ireland, at his first attempt in court stammered and sat down in confusion, and for that stammering was derisively called "Stuttering Jack Curran," and because of his flure in speech, was sneered at as "Orator Mum." But he went to work and conquered himself, and then conquered court-rooms and great assemblages whom he filled with his eloquence. So, instead of running against obstacles as against a stone wall, he placed them aslant like steps on which to mount. Put your trust in God, and nothing can stand before you. Rit-house, the astronomer, at the start was so poor that he figured out eclipses on a plow handle.

Furthermore, go to the ant, and consider that if God honors an insect by making it our instructor in important lessons, we ought not to abuse the lower orders of creation. It has been found by scientists that insects transfixed in the case of a museum have been alive and in torture for years. How much the insect, and the fish, and the brute may be rightly called to suffer for the advancement of human knowledge and the betterment of the condition of the human race I do not now stop to discuss, but he who uselessly harms any of God's living creation insults the Creator. Alas, for

The Horrors of Vivisection

Have not a scintilla of confidence in the morality of a man or a woman who would harm a horse, or a dog, or a cat, or a pigeon. Such men and women, under affront, if they dared, would take the life of a human being. You cannot make me believe that God looks down indifferently upon the galled neck of the ox, or the cruelly curbed bit of the horse, or the unsheltered cattle in the snow-storm, or the cock-pit, or the bear-baiting, or the pigeon shooting, or the laceration of fish that are not used. Go to the ant, thou miscreant, and show God honors it. In the great college of the universe it has been appointed your professor. All over the land, and all over the world there are over-driven horses that ought to be unharnessed, caged birds that ought to be put on their wings in the free air of heaven, calves of cattle agonized of thirst on the freight trains where they ought to be watered, and crustacea being boiled alive that ought to be lifted out of the fire. Christ chose twelve apostles for the human race in the first century, and you know their names, but in the nineteenth century he chose his thirteenth apostle, who sought for the relief of the brute creation, and his name was Henry Bergh. In my text the ant is not injured, is not dead, but alive, and in the warm fields providing her meat in the summer, and gathering her food in the harvest.

Furthermore, go to the ant and learn the lesson of God-appointed order. The Being who taught the insect how to build was geometer as well as architect. The paths inside that little home radiate from the door with a complete arrangement as ever the boulevards of a city radiated from a triumphal arch or a flowered circle.

And when they march they keep perfect order, moving in straight lines, turning out for nothing. If a timber lie in the way they climb over it. If there be house or barn in the way they march through it. Order in architectural structure, order in government, order of movement, order of expedition. So, let us all observe this God-appointed rule, and take satisfaction in the fact that things are not at loose ends in this world. If there is a divine regulation in a colony or republic of insects, is there not a divine regulation in the lives of immortal men and women? If

of his creatures, and shows them how to provide meat in the summer and gather their food in the harvest will he not be interested in matters of human livelihood and in the guidance of human affairs? I preach the doctrine of a particular providence. "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and yet not one of them is forgotten before God. Are ye not of more value than many sparrows?" Let there be order in our individual lives, order in the family, order in the church, order in the State. In all the world there is no room for anarchy.

After what Linnaeus and Pierre Huber have told us concerning these living mites of the natural world, are we not ready to believe that the God who turns the wheel of the solar system and the vaster wheel of the universe regulates the beehive and the ant-hill, and that all the affairs of our mortal lives are under divine management? When some one asked a hermit on the top of a mountain in Italy if he did not feel it dangerous to live so many miles from human habitation, he replied: "No: Providence is my very next-door neighbor."

A HILL CONSTRUCTED BY AFRICAN WHITE ANTS

He who became Sir Thomas Gresham and built the Royal Exchange in London, when an infant, was abandoned by his mother in the fields. Did it just happen so that the chirping of a grasshopper brought a boy to the spot where the babe lay, and his life was saved? Not so, thought Sir Thomas Gresham, who, having arrived at great wealth and power, chose a grasshopper for his crest, and had the figure of a grasshopper impressed on the wall of the Royal Exchange, and had at the top a weather vane in the figure of a grasshopper. The Waldensian Christians, in the seventeenth century, were expelled from the valleys, and on their way eight hundred of them were starving to death. Did it just happen so that one night the deep snow suddenly thawed and showed a large amount of wheat, which had been covered by the untimely snow, and was suddenly uncovered, so that the hunger was satisfied and the eight hundred lives were saved?

Did It Just Happen So?

Near Port Royal, Jamaica, is a tomb with this inscription: "Here lieth the body of Louis Cald, Esq., a native of Montpellier, in France, which country he left on account of the revocations. He was swallowed up by the earthquake which occurred at this place in 1692, but, by the great providence of God, was, by a second shock, flung into the sea, where he continued swimming till rescued by a boat, and lived forty years afterward." Was the release of that man from the jaws of the earthquake a "just happen so?" When during the plague in London, at the risk of his life and under the protest of his friends, Rev. Thomas Vincent spent his time preaching the Gospel to the sufferers, and 68,596 people perished, seven fatalities in the house where he lived, did it just happen so that he came through unhurt? In Fulton Street prayer meeting, New York, a young man rose and said: "I have been an infidel fourteen years; I had the prayers of a pious mother, but I spurned them. I have not seen her for fifteen years; I suppose she has given me up as lost. I don't know where to find her; but I would like to tell her what the Lord has done for me in answer to her earnest prayers." Did it just happen so that his mother was present and cried out: "Oh, my son—my son!" You know of the glorious Christian work in Japan, but do you know how it began? A New Testament was dropped from an English ship in the harbor of Tokio. The little book came into the hands of a prominent Japanese, who read it and was brought to God, and immediately began to commend Christ to the people. Did all that merely happen so? Tell that to those who do not believe there is a God, but do not tell it to at least a hundred of us who have had in our own lives providential rescues as easily proved as that we have ever lived at all.

But we live in times when there are so many clashing. There seems almost universal unrest. Large fortunes swallow up small fortunes. Civilized nations trying to gobble up barbaric nations. Upheaval of creeds, and people who once believed everything now believing nothing. The old Book that Moses began and St. John ended, bombarded from scientific observatories and college class rooms. Amid all this disturbance and uncertainty, that which many good people need is not a stimulus, but a sedative, and in my text I find it—divine observation and

Guidance of Minutest Affairs

And nothing is to God large or small—planet or ant-hill—the God who easily made the worlds employing his infinity in the wondrous construction of a spider's foot.

And now I bethink myself of the fact that we are close to a season of the year which will allow us to be more out of doors, and to confront the lessons of the natural world, and there are voices that seem to say, "Go to the ant; go to the bird; go to the flowers; go to the fields; go to the waters." Listen to the cantatas that drop from the gallery of the tree-tops. Notice in the path where you walk the lessons of industry and divine guidance. Make natural religion a commentary on revealed religion. Put the glow of sunrise and sunset into your spiritual experiences. Let every star speak of the morning star of the Redeemer, and every aromatic bloom make you think of him who is the Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley; and every overhanging cliff remind you of the Rock of Ages, and every morning suggest the "day-spring from on high, which giveth light to those who are in darkness," and even the little hillock built by the roadside or in the fields remind you of the wisdom of imitating in temporal and spiritual things the insectile forethought, "which having no guide, overseer, or ruler, provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest."

Over 8,500 Pages of Sermons by Dr. Talmage

WE are pleased to announce to our readers that, after nearly three years of infinite labor on the part of Dr. Talmage and a large number of CHRISTIAN HERALD assistants, and at an enormous outlay of money, the entire set of Twenty Volumes, comprising over Five Hundred of Dr. Talmage's Sermons, was recently completed, and have since taken an honored and well-deserved place in many a home. The publication of twenty volumes of sermonic literature is truly an event extraordinary, unique and unprecedented. In this remarkable work every volume contains more than 400, and the complete set, 8,571 pages. Each volume has an illuminated title page, is handsomely bound in maroon silk-finished cloth, with gold stamping and gilt-top, and the paper is deckle-edged. We are confident that the host of readers of his sermons will hail with unbounded enthusiasm this opportunity to secure for themselves a set of these priceless volumes, containing over 500 sermons, sermons abounding in spiritual helpfulness, matchless eloquence, valuable anecdote and pathos. Within their pages there is consolation for the sorrowing, an uplift for the fallen, hope for the despairing, an arousing for the indifferent and a glorious course indicated for the zealous and devoted Christian.

One cannot read the sermons contained in these volumes without gaining a vast amount of knowledge, increased vocabulary and improved diction.

The large and legible type used (long primer) is a feature seldom found in any publication of this magnitude. Too much emphasis cannot be put upon the value of the index, which consists briefly, as follows: The 500 texts of sermons; twenty pages of Titles and Texts; forty-four pages of Anecdotal and Historical Illustrations, and 235 pages of Index to Subjects. The index is in compact and convenient form and the type used is nonpareil.

AN AMERICAN'S VISIT TO MODERN EPHEBUS

Where the Apostles John and Paul Labored

BY REV. W. H. LAYSON, D.D.

LEGENDARY TOMB OF LUKE

RUINS OF THE THEATRE MENTIONED IN ACTS 19

PLACE WHERE ST. JOHN IS SAID TO HAVE BAPTIZED

WORDS addressed by Christ to the Church at Ephesus, might now appropriately be addressed to the city. "Remember," he said, "from whence thou art fallen." A greater contrast between former magnificence and present desolation, it would be difficult to find anywhere in the world. I visited it recently, and found it an utter waste, for even the ruins have been despoiled, and such objects of interest as there had been, were sent to the British Museum by the explorer who uncovered the buried buildings. The accompanying photographs, which we took on the site of the city famous for its grandeur, show how completely its splendor has passed away. Overturned columns tell us where the wonderful temple of Diana once stood, and heaps of broken blocks of marble mark the site of the stately theatre, where once nobles and their wives and daughters applauded the dramatic spectacles and the gladiatorial combats which were the marvel of the world. "Ichabod," the glory has departed, might be written on the ruins, on the marshy ground and on the harbor filled with silt, where once the navies of Greece and Rome rode at anchor, and the merchant ships of all nations brought their cargoes to minister to the luxurious tastes of the citizens of Ephesus.

The site was an ideal one for a wealthy city. On the eastern coast of the Aegean, it was on the highway of a traffic which was the source of supply to all the markets of the known world. From it, a well-made road led through a pass in the mountains at its back, to the great plateau of Asia Minor, then densely populated. Its rival, Miletus, was farther away, its connection was more difficult and its harbor inferior. In population, with dazzling effect. In front and in rear it had a portico of four rows of pillars, eight in a row, all sculptured by the most skilful workmen of the day. A double row of pillars, 127 in number, surrounded the temple, each one the gift of a king. Within, the gorgeous edifice was adorned by statuary, the work of the most eminent sculptors in the world. Paintings covered the walls for which vast sums had been paid. One, alone, cost a sum equivalent to $200,000 of our money. The shrine in the centre had a roof of cedar, supported by eight columns of green jasper, which are now in the Mosque of St. Sophia, in Constantinople. Behind it hung a purple curtain, which concealed the image of Artemis. It was made of ebony, cunningly bored and the apertures filled with choice perfumes. Around it were the gifts of potentates and wealthy men of all nations, the value of which was fabulous.

No visitors left the city without carrying with them models of the shrine and images of the goddess, which were made of clay, or wood, or silver to suit purchasers of various ranks. It was the makers of these shrines who, led by Demetrius, incited the riot described (Acts 19: 29-41). They had apparently taken little notice of Paul at first, but when his preaching produced such a result as the burning of the books of magic (Acts 19: 19), Demetrius became alarmed about his business, for if Paul continued preaching against idolatry, people might cease buying shrines. All this was probably ex-

The seats on the south were cut out of the solid rock of Mount Coressus, while those on the north rested on arches. At one end an arched doorway still stands, through which the gladiators and wild beasts entered the arena. In the unbroken silence of the scene we could imagine that turbulent crowd pouring in: "We are crying one thing, and some another, and the more we know not wherefore they were come together. It must, on the whole, have been a law-abiding populace, otherwise the words of the town-clerk would not so speedily have dispersed the assemblage.

Various other points, identified more or less legendarily with apostolic times, are shown to the visitor. One of these is the grave of the Evangelist Luke for which there is absolutely no evidence. The idea of Luke being buried there probably arose from the ossuary and the figure of a bull being cut upon a monumental stone, which is slight evidence for identification in the face of other traditions. After Paul's visit, Timothy took charge of the church there, and still later the Apostle John resided at Ephesus, as Eusebius relates. It is also asserted that the Virgin Mary accompanied him. The tomb of John and the baptismal font, which is said to have used, are still shown. Other interesting scenes are the foundations of the school of Tyrannus, where Paul, following the example of the philosophers of the city, gave daily lectures on the truths of Christianity (Acts 19: 9) after the synagogue was closed to him. Another building is shown as Paul's prison. There is no record of Paul having been imprisoned in Ephesus, though a passing allusion (I. Cor. 15: 32) appears to imply that he incurred dangers there, not mentioned by the historian of the Acts. The building shown does not appear to have been well adapted for wealth and culture, Ephesus surpassed all other cities in Asia Minor, of which it was the capital. It is difficult now to find traces of the residential portion, but the three buildings, which were the glory of the ancient capital, can still be identified. The Temple of Artemis, or Diana, as the Ephesians called her, was one of the most magnificent buildings in the world. It stood near the harbor, a conspicuous object to the view of the visitor approaching the city. Over four hundred feet long and more than two hundred wide, with columns of Parian marble sixty feet high, it reflected the rays of the sun plained at one of the guild houses, and then the smiths went out to arouse the city. The most natural place for a great mass-meeting would be the theatre, a huge semicircular area capable of holding fifty thousand persons. It stood at one end of the stadium or circus, a wide road 685 feet long, on which the foot-races were held. It is easy to trace the plan of the theatre still.

use as a prison. Forty-seven miles away at Smyrna, where another of the churches mentioned in Revelation once existed, I saw the building which commemorates the martyrdom of Polycarp, the faithful disciple of the Apostle John. Polycarp was buried at Smyrna, after making a noble confession of Christ, which he knew would be the signal for his execution. I left the scenes hallowed by associations with these illustrious men deeply impressed by the thought that while earthly magnificence passes away the memory of the righteous will never perish.

At the moment Mr. McKinley presses the button it will be one o'clock in New York, eleven o'clock in Denver, and two o'clock in San Francisco. But in Buffalo it will be high noon. By the President's watch it may be about twelve-thirty, for he will be somewhere about five hundred miles east and south of Buffalo, as he stated on his grand tour of the South and West on April 28.

The second address of the day will then be delivered

He will be followed by the Director-General of the enterprise, who will read messages from President McKinley, the Governors of various States, and the Presidents of South American Republics. This will end the formal ceremonies of opening the Exposition.

On the afternoon and evening of the opening day, all the visiting Governors will be given receptions by

The officials of the fair have promised that everything will be in place, all the machinery in operation, and every detail in every department complete on the day upon which the Exposition opens.

A unique bureau is that which provides chaperones at a reasonable price—the fee for a day being about two dollars—to look after young girls who come to the fair unaccompanied. The entire fair grounds will be illumined on the evening of the opening day. Hundreds of thousands of electric lights will turn the place into a blaze of glory. Every building will have its

In the Plaza the bands will play, and here the distinguished visitors will be given choice seats in which to enjoy the display of light and the feast of sound. Half of the power necessary for the electric exhibit will be furnished by Niagara's mighty plunge, miles away. The Midway, also, will be opened in the evening, in all the splendor of its many attractions and surprises.

VIII. Address all communications intended for this department, Editor The Mail-Bag, The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

These Questions will be Answered June 5

1. In what sense may education be regarded as an obstacle to the spiritual life of an individual or a community?

2. What is the best rule for a business man to follow to prevent the loss of gain from absorbing his attention to such an extent that it prevents spiritual growth?

3. Can a normal man or woman, in a civilized and enlightened community, live a Christian life without reading the Bible?

4. When a legislator and his constituents differ in opinion about some proposed enactment, which was not under consideration when he was elected, ought he to vote according to his judgment, or according to the wishes of the people who elected him?

5. Which is the more desirable—the ceaseless change in dress now imposed upon both sexes by fashion, or a fixed national style, graceful and hygienic, and suited to the climate and the people?

Questions of the Week

1. What changes or improvements, in the line of progress and efficiency, are necessary in our present Sunday School methods, in order to produce the best results?

Some preliminary observations must be made by way of precaution: 1. Sunday School work is a growth, and not a full-fledged creation. 2. Hence, changes and improvements must come through evolution instead of revolution, or good results will be diminished. 3. Methods necessary vary with individual, congregational and ecclesiastical environments. Those which succeed in some places and conditions fail in others. Bearing these principles in mind, the future Sunday School will be more systematic, scientific and intellectual, and less dogmatic than at present, without any diminution of spirituality. The International Committee will continue its work, but will ultimately develop a topical and inductive rather than a textual series of lessons. The Bible will be popularly, as it is now scholastically, known as a library of divinely variegated hue and tone, and not as a single, continuous volume. Each book will be studied with reference to the individuality and specific purpose of its author. The substance of the collection will be more generally appreciated, not alone from a religious, but from a literary and educational point of view. Its substantial truths will be magnified, while its apparent imperfections will be eclipsed and minimized by its inexpressible depth and sublimity. All details of attaining the end through Sunday School work must be left to the judgment of its earnest, progressive, yet conservative workers.

L. B. RUSSELL.

There is a growing conviction that the Sunday School should be on an equality with secular educational institutions, and radical changes in method and personnel are proposed: 1. This scheme contemplates careful grading into kindergarten, primary, intermediate and advanced departments; aims to enlist the entire church; proposes home-study, with promotion for proficiency; and a specially adapted edifice. 2. The superintendents and teachers, selected for fitness, will be fewer in number with larger classes, and use scientific methods of instruction. Specialists will in some cases command salaries. 3. The curriculum will be Bible study, Biblical archaeology, such books as George Adam Smith's Historical Geography of the Holy Land, and cognate subjects, Christian Evidences, and Ecclesiastical History, for advanced classes. For the other departments, International Lessons, with the aid of the best helps, History of the Bible, and original work by teachers.

CHARLES HARRISON.

2. Which is the better for the welfare of a church—a good preacher who is a poor pastor, or a good pastor who is merely an average preacher?

The former. A brilliant preacher will draw outsiders to the church, and in this way be very likely to increase the membership. The work of a good pastor is, as a rule, confined to his own congregation, while a good preacher has work outside of this. People will only go where they hear a good sermon. A poor preacher would not only keep outsiders away from the church, but might, in time, cause his own membership to decrease, and when this happens, a church is truly in a bad state.

L. M. CARKHUFF.

Each fills an important sphere; but usually the qualities of mind and heart characteristic of the good pastor, enable him to do a larger and more abiding work. It is especially true of the preacher that his success depends on still asserts that nothing else can be substituted, then the patient should be urged to comply. The example of Paul (1 Timothy, 5: 23), who advised the use of wine as medicine, would justify the father or husband in giving the same advice.

ERNEST W. EDWARDS.

I honor the person who, impressed with the unutterable woe and misery produced by the greatest curse of Christendom—strong drink,—refuses to partake of intoxicants, even upon the assurance of a reputable medical adviser that doing so would improve her physical condition and increase her chances of recovery. This case, I presume, is one of moral principle on the part of the patient, and not of mere whimsical caprice. The latter deserves no notice whatever, but conscientious scruples deserve every consideration. I firmly believe that fully nine-tenths of the use of ardent spirits in medicine could be safely abandoned, and, looking at it from a moral standpoint, there are grave dangers that should make both doctor and patient think twice before agreeing to its use. After all is said, however, as to the patient's convictions, the care and responsibility for the re-

If it be true that young people are more confident and self-satisfied when beginning a career, than formerly, it is a change for the better. Self-assurance usually springs from knowledge of personal qualification, and, in the present-day beginner, is more self-confident than his ancestor, it implies he is better qualified for his chosen calling. It is fair to assume he is, owing to the better educational advantages now provided and accepted. To argue otherwise is to contend that our present educational system, technical and general, is at fault. While too much egotism is undesirable, its extreme is more easily cured in that of diffidence, so that one who possesses overmuch self-reliance is more fortunate in one who underrates himself. Self-confidence is aggressive. Confidence is a virtue which shapes ambition and begets as well as develops strength. Many young people of natural ability are ordinary mortals to the solely because they lack the iron of self-assertion—they fear to give their natural gifts a trial. An overconfident person may fail where he has, at least, made an effort to win. How much quicker the progress of the world if all had confidence in equal measure than ability!

JAMES BELL MAJOR.

5. What would be the effect of an organized movement by the Christian churches to aid mission workers among the rich who are different to religion, as we now do among the poor?

It would arouse them from their indifference, and the result undoubtedly would be a large ingathering of hearers into the churches. The salvation of souls would follow, and the consecration of the wealth of many to the service of the Master. Of course, many of them might consider the approach an unwarranted intrusion; but that is no reason why it should not be attempted. We are our brothers' keepers, be they rich or poor, and none should have the occasion to say, "no pressing Christian careth for my soul." We have known missionaries who have given special attention to the indifferent wealthy, and their work has been blessed, and the churches have had reason to thank God for accession of rich men and women, who proved to be the most humble of Christians.

JAMES JOHNS.

It would be a waste of energy in the least compensatory of all religious undertakings. "They that are whole need not a physician, but they that are sick," and where the need is greatest, as among the poor and unfortunate. It is rather more true that the rich tend to keep the poor out of the churches, than the reverse and men of wealth are sought and desired by all churches, as their riches are coveted; but of all classes of men the rich are probably the least susceptible to the influence of a self-denying, cross-bearing Gospel of Christianity. The poor have the Gospel preached unto them, and this implies it is they who receive it gladly. Let us work where it pays best in spiritual results.

Miscellaneous Questions

Esra Z. W., Elmira, N. Y. What city or cities are officers in New York State can legally perform the marriage ceremony?

Clergymen, Justices of the Peace, Judges of all courts, Mayors of all cities, Aldermen, Police Magistrates, Recorders, and Justices of District Courts in New York and Brooklyn. Notaries Public have no authority to perform the marriage ceremony.

B. F. 1. From a Christian standpoint, what harm is there in accepting a bracelet, voted to the most popular young lady at a private musical entertainment? 2. Is there any harm in having socials, fairs, or entertainments in churches and for the benefit of the churches?

1. There are, doubtless, some who might consider it in rather doubtful taste to accept such marks of appreciation. It depends altogether on the point of view. There is nothing absolutely wrong in it, either way. 2. Such entertainments are better held elsewhere than in the church building.

J. H. B. On what portion of the "Hall of Fame" are the names of illustrious Americans to be placed?

The plan of the Hall of Fame is in the form of a semicircle, 500 feet long, 15 wide and 70 high, connecting the Hall of Language with New York University with the Hall of Philosophy. Within the colonnade, 150 piers, each 2 by 8 feet, are to be placed, to bear the names of great Americans as selected by the judges.

the attitude of his hearer. The great preacher sways, indeed, by his eloquence and moulds by the force of intellect. But it is certain that the good pastor, having won the reciprocal affection of his hearer by genuine sympathy and personal interest, is heard through an avenue often closed to the most fervid eloquence. A church thus led is stronger, in all the elements of real strength, than that over which the mere preacher presides.

3. If a woman is ill, and a competent physician declares that stimulants would be conducive to her recovery, and she refuses on principle to take them, ought her husband or father to insist on her taking them?

Physicians are, as a rule, too careless in ordering alcoholic stimulants to their patients, being more concerned about effecting a cure than about subsequent results. It would be the duty of a father or husband, in the case described, to inform the physician of the patient's conscientious objection to the use of the stimulant, and to ask him if he has not at command a medicine which would produce the same results without the risk involved by the use of ardent spirits. If the physician covery of the sick is in the hands of others, whose duty it is to be guided by the highest wisdom and governed by best possible intelligence to make the sick well, and as speedily as possible, notwithstanding the objections of the patient. Who shall say that those in charge of the sick are not justified in insisting, and even using physical coercion, in administering any treatment deemed necessary to save life?

WALTER W. HUBBARD.

4. Is the confident and self-satisfied demeanor of young people, beginning their careers at the present day, which has taken the place of the diffidence and modesty formerly inculcated, a change for the better or worse?

A young man should be taught that manliness and independence are distinct from impudence and irreverence. The same idea should be imparted to a girl—that modesty and self-confidence are not inconsistent, and that one's natural instincts of right behavior form the best guide. The world will never come to respect and prize unnatural forwardness, however much it is impressed by true worth and independence. I believe the change is in most cases for the worst.

"CALL off the missionaries in China; the people do not want Christianity." Such is the strange utterance we hear from many lips, at the opening of the twentieth Christian century in this Christian nation, where the very names of the days should make it impossible to forget on any day that we are ourselves missionary converts, whose fathers worshipped the sun on Sunday, and the moon on Monday, following which came Tuiske's day, and Woden's day, and Thor's day, and Freat's day, and Saturn's day. In every Christian home and school the week should be made a missionary rosary by lessons on these ancient idolatries that will make it impossible for any one who knows the story of the days to declare he has "no interest in foreign missions." Why, the chief missionary symbol is the "man of Macedonia," a heathen European who cried to Christians in Asia, "Come over and help us." (Now the situation is reversed, and Asia's need appeals to European Christians for help.) What if Paul had turned back when, in his first European mission at Philippi, his Christian work having interfered with the use of a sorceress for gain, the outcry was made, "They that have turned the world upside down, have come hither also." Those who read the story of Paul's missionary journeys will see on every page that "Europeans did not want Christianity." It is what a people need rather than that we must give them if we are truly Christian.

There are other common things besides the week and the map of Europe that may be made into missionary remembrancers.

I know a lady in this land
Who carries a Chinese fan in her hand,
But in her heart does she carry a thought
Of her Chinese sister who carefully wrought
The dainty, delicate, silken toy,
For her to admire and enjoy?

My lady in gown of silk is arrayed,
The fabric soft was in India made,
Will she think of the country whence it came,
Will she make an offering in his name
To send them the perfect, heavenly dress,
The mantle of Christ's own righteousness?

HELEN A. WALKER.

Into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them. The closing words of the lesson tell us Jesus is with us everywhere and every when, but the opening words remind us that he meets his gathered disciples for more abundant revelations at times and places especially appointed for fellowship with him and with each other. Let "meeting" ever mean to us the appointed time and place to meet him. Many will go for a few hours, and some for days and weeks to the mountains or to the seaside resorts on our coasts in the coming summer. Shall it be to meet him who is Lord of nature that he may impart to us "the strength of the hills" for Christian service? Otherwise our holidays, whether few or many, are likely to dissipate rather than re-create our powers. There are no more joyous mountain days than the Christian summer schools at Mount Hermon and Montezuma and kindred outlooks of blended intellectuality and spirituality. Wesley did not believe in giving up all the good times to the Devil, nor will we turn over to him all the good times. Ours, because shared with him, shall be the "good times that don't go off with the having," "true pleasures that are pleasant to remember."

The meeting of our story was a missionary convention, the first of a series of which the Ecumenical, a year ago in New York, was the latest. What a long triumphal march lies between the two! In contrast to the Bible story in five verses of the convention of the eleven and Christ, all of them from one country, read the two great volumes that report the sequel at the close of the nineteenth century. A glimpse of progress flashes out of the fact that men now gather to hear the Bible in four hundred languages and dialects.

All power is given unto me. The water-mark of the Gospel is "all." It has proved itself to contain all truth and to be all-powerful to transform all creatures in all ages and countries. The ancient Greek mysteries and the Brahmins' privileges were only for the favored few, not for the common people. Even Jewish doctors said the common people could not understand the law and were therefore "accursed." The Gospel is for "every creature." It is both plain and powerful, and so adapted to transform any and all. All religions are much alike in the recognition of human sinfulness. Because of this and many resemblances of words the Buddhists of Japan have recently said, in an address to the world, that the fundamental principles of the different religions "are in all cases essentially analogous." But in power imparted for deliverance from sin Christianity differs radically from all other religions. They leave man as helpless as the botanist who awoke one morning in his tent to find, to his horror, a great rattlesnake coiled on his bosom ready to strike if he should make the least movement. He realized his awful danger and yet was so fascinated, by the eyes of the snake and by his peril that he made no effort to escape. Instead he swooned in a faint. His companion soon discovered the serpent and destroyed it. The sinner in heathen lands beholds the sin in his breast like a deadly serpent, but is helpless and hopeless before its accusing gaze. Christianity sees the peril and provides deliverance through him who said, "All power is given unto me," and who also said, "To as many as received him, gave he power to become sons of God." "He giveth power to the faint, and to them that have no might he increaseth strength." "Not by the imitation of Christ, but by the impartation of Christ we are saved."

Individuals and nations alike the Gospel has power to change. In Pearson's Magazine for January there is a wonderful record of "some work with grasses, which bind the sands and preserve the shore lines." Vast stretches of seashore have been not only worthless, but a source of peril because of their "shifting sands." Holland, after long experiments, has found tough grasses to bind its sands and preserve its dikes. And France has even been able to transform such wastes into fertile fields and forest lands. The New England States protect shore grasses by law, and the United States Department of Agriculture is making a study of "seaside oats" and other grasses that may be used for the protection and development of shore lands. All of which is but a suggestion of the lands transformed from heathen wastes of idolatry and war and slavery and polygamy into Christian nations, such as Hawaii, Fiji and Madagascar. When the Rev. James Calvert was asked to give in one sentence a proof of the success of missions, he said: "When I arrived at the Fiji group, my first duty was to bury the hands, arms, feet and heads of eighty victims whose bodies had been roasted and eaten in a cannibal feast. I lived to see those very cannibals who had taken part in that inhuman feast gathered about the Lord's table."

Rev. C. B. Antidel, missionary of Mukimvika, Congo Free State, Africa, has sent the following story of a similar transformation wrought in his field: At Palabala, even as recently as five years ago, the natives were given to all manner of heathen practices—polygamy, slavery, witchcraft, immorality and cruelty beyond description. They cut off the ears and nose of a man, then further mutilated him in an unmentionable manner, and finally told the victim if he would roast and eat certain parts of his body his life would be spared. The poor fellow seized the last chance for his life only to be brutally killed after complying, a savage crowd hooting and jeering during the whole hideous spectacle. If a person died, some witch was the cause, and whomsoever the witch doctor accused was compelled to drink a poison—"nkasa." If her stomach rejected it she was acquitted; but if the poison killed her it was deemed conclusive proof that she was the witch. Now all is changed. Mr. Harvey has baptized one hundred and fifty converts, and their lives bear witness to the genuineness of their conversion. Fifty to a hundred assemble daily at the chapel for worship. Nor does their Christianity end with song and prayer; they have become honest. Cruelty has given place to kindness, vengeance to forgiveness, hatred and malice to love and forbearance. Benevolence has driven out greed.

As miasmatic marshes have been prepared by drainage to be the sites of healthful cities, so "Christian villages" all over the heathen world have taken the place of savage camps of degradation and cruelty.

Go ye and teach all nations. This does not mean foreign missions only. It is really harder to go to all nationalities in our kitchens and workshops and streets, and make them disciples than to say, "Here's my check; send somebody else to do this work at home and abroad." O! for such a vision as Isaiah had of the Lord of Glory who gives this command "sitting on a throne high and lifted up"—the throne of the world—that we might listen with awe when he cries, in lack of messengers, "Whom shall I send?" and might not dare to answer with excuses, but rather say, "Here am I, send me." Every true Christian must "go and disciple," and must go where Christ wants him to go, whether near or far.

The great commission was expounded by Erskine nearly a hundred years ago when the churches were so blind to its meaning that there were neither missionary societies nor missionary collections; but this commission comes only once in seven years into the international lessons, and as often as that the Erskine story needs to be told for newcomers who have never heard it, as a great historic classic whose moral is yet needed by many who depreciate missions.

Near the opening of the nineteenth century the first famous debate on missions took place in the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. An "overture" came from two presbyteries, imploring the assembly to send the Gospel to the heathen. That proposal was denounced as visionary, fanatical, revolutionary, presumptuous, dangerous, democratic and absurd. Revolutionary and democratic; why these terms? It was just the period of the Reign of Terror in France, and the enemies of missions saw in the proposal something like the revolution which was then brooding over France. The Rev. Dr. Carlyle, of Inverness, rose up and said: "I have sat for fifty years in this assembly; and a more absurd proposal than sending the Gospel to the heathen has never in that period fallen upon my ears." On the table before the moderator lay a Bible, unopened; and, in all the speeches that were made, not one appeal had been made to the Bible. The venerable Dr. John Erskine, a man whose sympathies for the abolition of slavery and revival of true religion throughout the world were fifty years ahead of his time, could remain silent no longer. He rose, with kindling eye and heart of fire, and uttered these memorable words, "Moderator, ratch me the Bible, will ye?" And then, laying hold of the Bible with his trembling hands (for he was upwards of seventy-five years of age), but with strong faith in his heart, he turned to our Saviour's great commission, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature;" then to the promises regarding the inbringing of all nations and the universal spread of the Redeemer's kingdom. The words fell like a thunder-clap on the assembly. The effect was thrilling. The words mark an important era in the history of missions; for the great commission did not much longer lie unheeded.

The great foreign missionary problem at this hour is rolling away the stone that prevents the resurrection of the heathen world, that is, the liquor and opium, which are the chief hindrance to missions. We are now called to "go" to the rulers of Christian lands and do missionary work with them in securing further laws and treaties that will prevent the undoing of the work of the missions by the greedy traffickers who sow the vices of civilization before and after the missionary. In this world lesson, we rejoice to report that the crusade for the protection of native races against intoxicants and opium has recently marched several victorious stages. The great nations of the world have twice made treaties for the protection of Africa. Great Britain is adopting the new policy of prohibition wherever these evils are not developed in her dependencies in the name of conscience and commerce alike. The President and Senate of the United States have declared for universal protection of uncivilized races. Petitions addressed "To All Civilized Nations," asking such protection, should be voted in all Christian churches and societies all over the world, and forwarded promptly to the Reform Bureau, 210 Delaware Avenue, N. E., Washington, D. C.

Our India Famine Fund

ON another page of this issue will be found the audited statement of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD India Famine Relief Fund. It is the exposition of a work of benevolence which stands absolutely without a parallel—a work which has proved pre-eminently precious both to Christian America and heathen India. From the dark visitation of famine and death, far beyond all mere human efforts at mitigation, God has brought a rich blessing to India and its people.

Our readers are already familiar with the story of the inception of the Famine Fund, how, late in the Fall of 1899, yielding to the entreaty of kind-hearted Bishop Thoburn, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD reopened its columns on behalf of stricken India, although it had but lately closed its campaign of benevolence for the famine sufferers of 1897. The response to its appeal was immediate and spontaneous. From all quarters of the Union, and even from other lands, letters poured in, vibrating with sympathy for the afflicted ones. Gifts, sanctified with prayers, came in a shower. With an efficient organization already in the field, the actual work of relief was promptly begun. The rest is history—for the relief stations were opened, the starving multitudes fed and sheltered, the naked clad, the sick tended and succored, and the dying consoled. It is proved by statistics that, as a result of this great Christ-like work of mercy, hundreds of thousands of perishing men, women and children were snatched from the brink of the grave.

As to the material resources employed in this greatest of benevolent campaigns, the official statement is most instructive. The net grand total of the Relief Fund, from all sources, was $641,071.97. This sum represented 258,508 separate remittances, and these in turn represented a much larger number of individuals, as sometimes twenty or even thirty contributors were included in one letter. Receipts were sent to all contributors, involving a vast correspondence, and the necessary stationery and postage, each acknowledgment costing a little over two cents. Many of the letters called for the most careful consideration. On the whole, it is probable that no such immense volume of correspondence was ever before conducted so economically. The average single contribution—exclusive of the $40,000 granted by the United States Government for the charter of the S. S. Quito—was about $2.35. Our own CHRISTIAN HERALD readers are to be congratulated on the fact that they contributed fully one-half of the entire Fund, even including the Government's gift.

Another matter exceedingly gratifying to every one who helped the Fund, is that the value of the Quito's cargo of American corn, on reaching India, was at least double its value here; therefore, the corn transaction, in its purely commercial aspect, was a fortunate one, since India reaped the benefit by receiving in value nearly $100,000 more than can be indicated in the official report.

There are many other points in the Famine Relief Statement in which our readers will find a special interest. One remarkable feature is that an investment of $8,320 for advertising resulted in inducing contributions to the Fund to the extent of $96,991, or eleven times the original outlay. Similarly, an expenditure of $32,700 for circularizing netted the enormous return of $185,462.55 or $152,762.25, of actual profit—equal to nearly six times the amount of the original outlay. Even the little mite boxes, sent out at an expense of $207.27, brought in $6,039.73 or thirty times what they cost. These astonishing results, from the application of new and practical methods in benevolent work, added very largely to the resources of the Fund, and contributed greatly to the splendid success of the relief work as a whole. Of the $32,700 expended for circularizing, fully one-half was for postage alone. It is quite evident that, without the adoption of these plans for reaching the widest public, no equivalent benefit to the Fund could have been secured, and the work would have suffered proportionately in scope and efficiency.

There can be but one sentiment common to all who have shared in this far-reaching campaign of benevolence. With the Missionaries in the field, and the great army of God's people at home who have given of their substance to save dying India, and with all others who have assisted in this gracious work, the Proprietor and editors of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its great family of readers (who are ever at the forefront in deeds of self-sacrifice), unite most heartily in grateful acknowledgment to the Divine Father for the blessing which has been bestowed upon their joint efforts. They are thankful to have been the chosen instruments not only of saving a multitude of lives in India, but of giving to the people of that unhappy and afflicted land such a glorious illustration of practical Christianity as will not be forgotten in many generations.

If thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul; then shall thy light rise in obscurity, and thy darkness be as the noon-day—Isaiah 58: 10.

China's New Calamity

SHANGHAI, April 20.—The famine in Shansi Province is dreadful. Wheat is selling for $10 gold per 150 pounds.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 22.

Famine exists in China in most dreadful form. The centres of suffering are Shensi and Shansi, and starvation spreads over a large territory adjacent to them in the region southwest of Peking and bordering on Mongolia. Months ago the probability of famine was rumored, and weeks later details of the actual starvation of the inhabitants were reported to the allied military authorities at Peking; but in the disturbed condition of China, and amid the international diplomatic complications, little of this news reached the outside world. Official confirmation of the suffering in Shansi and Shensi was given by the Chinese Minister, Wu Ting Fang, to-day, when the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage called on him to make inquiries on behalf of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

"There is a dreadful famine," Minister Wu told Dr. Talmage, "and it spreads all over a great area. A vast multitude are suffering for food—so many thousands that we cannot number them. The population is very dense."

"Are immediate measures of relief practicable?" Dr. Talmage inquired.

"Yes," the minister replied, "there is much food stuff in nearby districts which could be purchased and sent to the famine district, if the means were available. These regions are accessible through Shanghai and other ports. Rice is the principal food of the inhabitants, and probably it could be secured in large quantities for distribution. Flour and other provisions also could be bought and distributed."

Minister Wu gave Dr. Talmage further information regarding the famine of which the civilized world knows so little. It appears that some slight measures of relief were taken some time ago by Chinese officials in various countries, who know of the suffering of their people; but naturally these measures were circumscribed and inadequate. If anything is to be done to meet the real necessities, it will have to be on a scale commensurate with the famine, something such as has been done in India.

C. M. PEPPER.

These despatches give to the world a glimpse of the new horror that has fallen upon prostrate China. The great contiguous provinces of Shansi, with its 14,004,210 and Shensi with over 10,000,000, are apparently the centres of suffering. Letters from missionaries for months past have contained ominous forebodings of the famine, which has now doubtless seized in its grasp in these and adjoining provinces a population equal to from one-third to one-half of that of the United States.

During all of the recent troubles in China, our own nation has occupied a peculiar attitude toward that unhappy people. We alone have stood squarely upon the principle of international helpfulness, insisting that China should be succored and not despoiled. We wanted no territory. We entered upon no campaign of conquest. We believed that the true way to impress upon China the advantages of a new and enlightened civilization was to heal her wounds, restore her self-respect, and set her securely in her own seat of judgment, from which she could administer her own affairs. No nation, save ours, credited China's professions of a sincere purpose to put down the rebellion and to punish the offenders. The result has shown her absolute sincerity. China trusts the United States because we first trusted China. She regards us as her truest, if not her only friend, among the nations. It is not surprising then, that in the presence of the awful visitation of famine, China should turn to America for aid. Our benevolence in India and elsewhere has been an object lesson to the Asiatic races.

There is another reason why China's appeal should not be allowed to pass unheeded, should further investigation show that she needs our help. At this time when our devoted missionaries are being so unjustly maligned and misrepresented, it is well for Christian people to stand by them and give them the most cordial support and encouragement in their self-sacrificing labors. Deeds, not words, are the best answers to the maligners. Our missionaries in India, as every one knows, rendered, in the late famine, noble humanitarian service, which won them the applause of the whole world. Our missionaries in China, should the situation call for similar action, would doubtless demonstrate equally to friends and foes alike that they, too, are true, self-denying followers of Him who "went about doing good."

China needs our prayers. If she should need our help also, she should have it—and quickly.

A Strange Law

IN the Arkansas State Senate, a bill has been passed making it unlawful for any person to drink intoxicating liquors as a beverage, unless such person shall first have obtained a license as a dram-drinker. For a license to drink intoxicants, a fee of five dollars a year is charged by the State.

Such a law is certainly a novelty, and its operation, assuming that it will pass in both legislative branches, and escape the gubernatorial veto—will be watched with unusual interest. It seems incomprehensible to any sane and reasonable man, knowing anything of the inglorious history of the whiskey traffic, and its fruitful record of moral and physical destruction, could be proud of the possession of such a badge of ignominy. Most men would be ashamed to own the holding of a license to use poison or to carry a pistol; yet the dram-drinker's license would be a worse menace to society than either. Possibly it is the object of the Arkansas legislators to make tipping and guzzling odious by compelling the drinkers to be the publishers of their own shame. Will they be "tagged," like the dogs at wear their license number on their collars; or will we permit take the form of a button to be worn on a lapel, where all the sober, cynical world may see? Of course, the holder of such a distinction will be a privileged person up to a certain point, but where will the privilege end?

It is not to be supposed that the purpose is to grant immunity from arrest and punishment to drunkards and disturbers of the peace; yet if there is no such immunity wherein lies the licensee's advantage? And how can the State of Arkansas logically square its attitude with justice, if it grants men permission to buy and consume alcoholic drink and then punishes them for becoming intoxicated? Is it wise or humane to bind the poor slave with the badge of his own shame, and even to make his degradation a source of revenue to the State? There are those who will see in such a measure a bad precedent—a beginning of a system of licensing social vice which, once fairly started, would condone almost any sin against society, provided the offender wore a tag and paid a license fee to the State.

Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand and his arm shall rule for him; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him—Isa. 40: 10.

World-Wide Encyclopedia

What It Is

THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA is regular stock, not old nor antiquated, but brought right up to date with the story of the Spanish-American War, the Annexation of the Hawaiian Islands, together with elaborate articles on Cuba, Porto Rico, the Philippines, the Gold Fields of Alaska and the Klondike. The World-Wide Encyclopedia is a Universal Educator, treating of every subject, great or small, within the range of human knowledge. It is a great compendium of Geography, History, Science, Biography, Art and Literature, and is specifically designed to supply in readily accessible shape all the valuable information contained in the encyclopedic literature of the age.

The Scholar, the Student, the Professional Man, the Business Man, the Mechanic, the mother, the wife, the Housekeeper, will all find it a ready prehouse of world-wide knowledge, a treasury of facts, a mine of information.

The World-Wide Encyclopedia answers every question however difficult or obscure. A digest of all knowledge from the earliest times is contained within its 10,000 pages, and no person, however untutored, provided he can read, need look for full information on any subject within the scope of human knowledge when once he is the possessor of this great work of universal interest.

The World-Wide Encyclopedia contains 96 accurate and artistically colored Maps showing every Country in the World, with a separate Map for every State in the Union, revised to date.

We are glad of this renewed opportunity which enables us to offer a boon to this to the millions of commendably ambitious men and women, who are literally hungering and thirsting for knowledge, to whom we may now open up this treasure-house of useful and accurate information, and bid them revel in its riches to their heart's content.

The World-Wide Encyclopedia is very handsomely and durably bound in modern silk-finished cloth with genuine gold stamp. The twelve large octavo volumes, aggregating nearly 10,000 large pages, make an imposing array, attractive enough to ornament the largest and costliest library in the world. No other encyclopedia can make a better exhibit on the book shelves, and the ownership of this great work, a complete library in itself, ranks its possessor among the intellectually progressive men of the day.

The World-Wide Encyclopedia has the "Christian Herald" Imprint, which is a guaranty of the excellence and reliability of the work. We know it thoroughly and recommend it unhesitatingly. It is regarded as standard in "The Christian Herald" Editorial rooms.

The publication of this great work is a response to the universal silent prayer of young men for some means of educating themselves. Such an opportunity has never before been offered, and the eagerness with which it is being seized shows both the great need and the great appreciation.

A Home Business College

Without commerce, agriculture and manufacturing would be like a body without arms and legs. Commerce is the connecting-link between nations and between men. It is the instinct of barter and sale that has built the roads, railways and ships which make communication possible between all parts of the world. The man who enters trade must not be content to study price-lists, but must widen his grasp of affairs by a comprehensive study of all the machinery of business. He cannot gain a personal experience of it all—life would be too short for that—but he can study its principles in books; and nowhere but in the World-Wide Encyclopedia will he find them all brought together, convenient to his hand.

In any branch of business the man who, by persistent self-culture, has gained a general knowledge, perseverance, resolution, and an accurate realization of his own powers and his own limitations, will be able to far outstrip his competitor who has neglected self-culture. Let the merchant or the young man just starting in a business career study the World-Wide Encyclopedia's article on "Commerce," and follow it up by a study on the other subjects in the following list:

General Commercial Studies

Acceptance, Account, Address, Forms of, Adjustment, Advertising, Arithmetic, Assets, Average, Banking, Bankruptcy, Banks, Bills, Bookkeeping, Broker, Building and Loan Associations, Bullion, Business Colleges, Calendar, Carriers, Chambers of Commerce, Check, Clearing-house, Coinage, Coinage Laws, Coins of the U. Healthful Recreations

THERE are scores of healthy amusements which, when indulged in to a rational extent, are of actual benefit to the worker by relaxing his mind and strengthening his body. When one's occupation is sedentary, as that of a student, a professional man, or many artisans, active exercise is needed daily to keep the body in trim for its work. The World-Wide Encyclopedia is as complete in this direction as in all others, and gives descriptions of many sports which can be indulged in to advantage by the student. Following is a partial list:

Games, Sports and Pastimes

Angling, Archery, Athletics, Athletic Training, Backgammon, Baseball, Bicycling, Bowls, Calisthenics, Canoe, Chess, Cricket, Croquet, Draughts, Football, Games, Golf, Gymnastics, Legerdemain, Lacrosse, Magic, White, Quoits, Rowing, Shooting, Skating, Swimming, Tennis, Wrestling, Yachting.

Self-made Men

Some of the most successful leaders in every profession and every industry have been what are called "self-made men," because they had no advantages of early training and no one to give them a start in life. Henry Wilson, who became vice-president of the United States, was a poor boy whose parents apprenticed him to a farmer when he was ten years old. And yet, in spite of the hard work of the farm, Henry Wilson found time before he was twenty-one to read a thousand books and lay the foundation of the ripe learning that gave him power and prominence in public affairs.

The young man who decides to purchase the World-Wide Encyclopedia need not fear that after years of study he must shun comparison with the graduates of schools and universities, with those whose means and leisure may have enabled them to employ expensive tutors. He who possesses a copy of that great work, and utilizes it for careful and intelligent study, need fear no comparison with the product of expensive university training. He will have levied tribute on the brightest minds of the age and of all ages. The concentrated learning of the centuries will be placed at his disposal—the ripest thoughts of all philosophers, the tenets of all theologies, the principles of every science, the rules of every profession, and the practical details of every industry. The world will be his curriculum, and its brightest and best thinkers will be his instructors. The rise and fall of nations, the triumphs of statecraft and diplomacy, the influence on action and thought of great discoveries in science, will all be laid bare to his delighted view. The growth of the arts, the latest improvements in handicrafts, the principles of law, of medicine, of commerce, and of agriculture will be unfolded in their due and proper order before him. The wealth of the world will be his, from which to pluck the jewels he admires the most to set in his own crown of knowledge.

Think of it!—an up-to-date Encyclopedia for only $15—on monthly instalments of only one dollar each. Had we not purchased 5,000 sets for members of "The Christian Herald" family in sheets and then had them beautifully and substantially bound, saving all middlemen's profits, nothing short of double this figure could have secured a set.

This Home University

is open, and all are welcome. There is no bar of age, sex or condition. Man is never too young nor too old to learn. Dr. Priestly was 40 years old when his attention was directed to the peculiar action of gases escaping from a beer vat, and he began the studies which resulted in his important discoveries in chemistry. Socrates learned to play musical instruments in his old age, and Cato was eighty when he studied the Greek language. Izaak Walton was ninety when he wrote his immortal work, The Complete Angler, and thousands of other men have done their best work late in life. Genius sometimes blossoms late in life, and no man should let his years discourage him from learning.

"Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime,
And, departing, leave behind us
Footprints in the sands of time."

Longfellow's familiar stanza may well recur to the student who peruses the life histories of renowned persons contained in the World-Wide Encyclopedia or any considerable number of them. Very few of them had any exceptional advantages to start with. What marked them as men set apart from their fellows, the millions who have gone to their graves leaving no monuments of great achievements behind them, was chiefly their fixedness of purpose and the untiring energy with which they carried it out; in other words, their willingness and capacity for work. "Genius is infinite capacity for taking pains," according to one definition; and if the reader can learn from these biographies the lesson of perseverance and also of patience, he will be well on the high road to success. He, too, may leave behind him footprints in the sands of time.

The World-Wide Encyclopedia is a Standard Work of 12 Massive Volumes, Containing nearly 10,000 large pages—Numerous Illustrations—96 Accurately Colored Maps, all brought down to date, including the Spanish-American War, and is elsewhere sold at $30. Our price is just half—$15 on monthly instalments of One Dollar Each, or 10 per cent. discount for cash.

Readers of the gentler sex need not be told that some of the most noted names in history have been those of women, who, as artists, authors or rulers, have by force of genius attracted and held the world's attention. In the World-Wide Encyclopedia will be found the biographies of a galaxy of noted women who have won renown by their intellect, or reverence and love by softer, diviner qualities.

"What Man Has Done Man Can Do"

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Abraham Lincoln at twenty-two simply knew how to read, write and cipher. Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, NEVER ATTENDED SCHOOL. His wife was his only teacher. She taught him to read and write. Hiram Sibley, formerly President of the Western Union Telegraph Company, learned on his father's farm at fifteen to learn a trade. After having given away $1,000,000 of dollars during his life time he died worth many millions more. Peter Cooper, whose name will ever be cherished in the heart of every young man and young woman who graduated, free of expense, from the Cooper Institute, himself never had more than one year of schooling. Now if these men, under such unfavorable circumstances, could achieve fame and fortune by dint of industrious application to study and work, why should the tens of thousands of young people, who have in them the making of great men and women, despair of their ambition with such an opportunity as this, placing within their reach everything necessary for a liberal education?

Sound Advice to Artisans

FARMING is the keystone of civilization and manufacturing is the corner-stone. Without the artisan there would be no comforts in life, no luxuries, and not even what we have grown to look upon as necessities. Mankind would still be wearing skins of animals and sleeping in caves. The artisan, the man who works with his hands to fashion or help fashion the endless products of the inventive skill of the ages, occupies a position of importance and dignity. He is a producer in the literal sense of the word. He can take to his heart the words of Daniel Webster: "Labor is one of the great elements of society, the great substantial interest on which we all stand."

A good artisan, a skilled mechanic, has something to be proud of; and the more skill he has, the greater success he will achieve, the greater advancement. What the artisan should carefully avoid is the danger of plodding in a single groove, of becoming a mere machine. Study of the principles on which his work is based and of the tools and forces with which he is operating and the materials he is using will enable the mechanic to become more than a mere machine. Intelligent study and self-culture, joined to the practical knowledge which comes from his actual labor, will increase his earning capacity as well as his satisfaction in his work. Such study will enable him to develop into the foreman, the inventor, the contractor, the employer, the manufacturer. He may emulate or surpass the Whites, the Stephensons, the Franklins, Watts, McCormicks, Edisons, Bessemer, and their like, who were not satisfied with the repetition of a daily task, but were constantly striving to improve old machines or invent new methods.

The artisan will also find that a study of the lives of inventors and mechanicians will stimulate his ambition, and that his knowledge cannot be too wide or too minute to aid his ambition. Self-culture will be to him a stepping-stone to success.

In aiding the artisan, ambitious of self-culture, there is nothing to approach the World-Wide Encyclopedia which will furnish him with information on every conceivable subject connected with his trade. The dyer, cooper, foundryman, printer, miner, carpenter, mason, can all find plentiful stores of knowledge in its magic pages. We have room here only for the lists of studies that have been arranged for workers in wood and workers in metals.

Many of the hundreds of biographies contained in the World-Wide Encyclopedia are character studies of the strongest kind which no young man can read without being deeply impressed by their lessons. A good character is as valuable a possession as great learning.

Valuable Suggestions

The World-Wide Encyclopedia is an inexhaustible mine of wealth to the earnest student, into which he may delve at will for the bright nuggets of the gold of wisdom. It is an endless orchard in which he may wander, plucking from every variety of the tree of knowledge the ripe fruit nourished by the work and thought of all the sages of the world.

A continued course of reading in the World-Wide Encyclopedia will strengthen the student, be he young or old, for the battle of life which is yearly growing more difficult because of the increase of competition in every field of endeavor. He will realize to the full the truth of the saying that "Learning is wealth to the poor, an honor to the rich, an aid to the young, and a support and comfort to the aged."

The great advantage of the World-Wide Encyclopedia is the prodigality and thoroughness of its resources. The student of law or medicine, the embryo architect, artist, botanist, farmer, mechanic or merchant, can not only find here the principles that will fit him for the prosecution of his chosen line of endeavor, but can acquire the broad culture given by general knowledge that will sharpen his faculties and increase his strength in his special field.

Are you discouraged because you have not yet achieved success? Take courage and read in the World-Wide Encyclopedia the life of Robert Bruce, who, after years of failure to free Scotland from English rule, being hunted for his life, lay in hiding in a cave, where he saw a spider trying to clamber up the bare wall. Six times the spider renewed the task, each time falling back to the ground, but the seventh time it succeeded. Bruce, who had in despair determined to flee from his country, took the lesson to heart, made one more effort, and won.

Formed on the best examples, ripened on the best learning, the possessor of the World-Wide Encyclopedia will have a magnificent outfit for his life-work. Facility will come with labor, and the principles he has learned will become more thoroughly his own when he is putting them in practice. Let him not forget, either, that the Encyclopedia never graduates its students. Its curriculum is as long as life itself, for there is always more to learn; and the home will always remain the ideal place for learning.

Self-culture is not a meaningless phrase, but a living, breathing reality. It enlarges the ideals, elevates the thoughts and ennobles the labor of its possessor, no matter how commonplace or humble that labor may be. It gives a zest to life, a joy to the daily round of labor, which nothing can give so well as the constant intercourse with the great minds of the past and the great thoughts and intellectual movements of the present. Be he poor in all else, the possessor of self-culture can count himself rich in the best of all riches.

A Word to Farmers

All wealth comes originally from the soil. The farmer bears the weight of the world upon his shoulders. He is the keystone of civilization. To be successful he must be something of a naturalist and something of a chemist; he must know what soils are suited to the production of different crops, and what fertilizers are best adapted to aid in the cultivation of each crop. When the farmer is intelligent and knows how to produce the best results without exhaustive labor, farm life is the healthiest and most vigorizing in the world. The time passed when farming can be successfully conducted without keen intelligence and a thorough scientific knowledge, and the World-Wide Encyclopedia is rich in information which will enable a man to become a scientific farmer. Brains and ability are fully as necessary in farming as in any other pursuit.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

Decay in a Famous Edifice

SOME surprise was caused last week by the news that the most famous religious edifice in London—Westminster Abbey—has fallen into decay, so seriously that one of the pillars has fallen, and another one has been prevented falling only by shoring up. The Abbey is in the shape of a cross, 511 feet long. The centre shaft, called the nave, is 79 feet wide, and across the arms is 203 feet. The part in which the pillar has fallen is a chapel on the northeast corner, the chancel, which contains the monuments, and, in most instances, the tombs of many famous men. One of them is that of Lord Norris, a distinguished soldier who flourished about two hundred and fifty years ago. His monument was near the pillar that has fallen, and it is shattered to pieces. The monuments to Sir John Feklin and Sir Humphry Davy are near, but they are untouched. The Abbey is composed of buildings of various dates, the oldest, probably being the one known as the Pyx House, which was built 836 years ago. The chief parts of the Abbey were built in the reign of Henry III., 680 years ago. The remainder of the interior was finished in the reign of Henry VII., and is over four hundred years old. It has been the burial place of the English kings for over three hundred years. It has also been the edifice in which they were crowned, and preparations are now being made in it for the coronation of King Edward VII. and Queen Alexandra. The coronation chairs always stood there, the seat of the King's chair containing the famous stone brought from Scone by King Edward I., which tradition, without any valid reason, says is the stone with which Jacob used as a pillow (Gen. 28:18). The most eminent of English statesmen and warriors are buried within the building, and in Poet's Corner lie the remains of the most illustrious of the English authors of the past few centuries. The fall of the pillar last week is an unpleasant reminder of the consequences of neglecting the repair of an ancient edifice which is the pride of the nation. It will doubtless lead to a thorough examination, and an extensive work of renovation. It is well for us that in that great temple composed of living stones, in which Christ is building, no such catastrophe can ever take place, for this promise is sure:

Forasmuch as that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out (Rev. 3: 12).

Dangerous Toy

Some stupid person in New York, who deserves severe punishment, recently gave a large, unexploded cartridge, from the military tournament, to some boys. They took it into the back yard of the house in which one of them lived, to experiment with it. After playing with it for some time, the idea of smashing it was hatched. One of them held it upright between his feet while another pounded it with a big stone. There was no effect for a few minutes, so they tried the other end of the cartridge. Afterwards, the first blow told. There was an explosion which prostrated the children, and shook the house. Several persons ran to the scene, and seeing the condition of the children, called an ambulance, in which they were sent to the hospital. They were all hurt more or less seriously, but it is hoped that they will recover. The imprudence of giving children so dangerous a thing to play with is generally recognized, even by people who, by example and influence, impart a bad example to children which may produce disaster much more deplorable.

Who shall cause one of these little ones to stumble it were better for him that a great millstone were hanged about his neck and he were cast into the sea (Mark 9: 42).

Manicuring an Elephant

A difficult and dangerous operation was performed last week in the elephant house in Central Park, New York. The keeper of the two large elephants, Julie and Tom, has noticed for some weeks past that his charges have been lame. Examining their feet, he found that their nails were five inches long, and there were thick horny growths on their feet, which were very painful. He decided that an operation must be performed. He had a rasp made, and with this worked on the nails till they were of normal length. Then, with a sharp knife, he cut about two inches of skin away. Great care was necessary, for the elephants were restless and nervous, and could not understand what was being done to them. In their wild life, they wear down their nails, but in captivity they do not have sufficient exercise for the purpose. The keeper said that if he had accidentally cut too deep the elephants would have killed him. After the operation, warm water and oil were applied, and the elephants then were evidently relieved and walked easily. It would be interesting to learn if animals so intelligent, connect their increased ease with the operation that was so disagreeable to them. Perhaps not, for even human beings, though they may be Christians, are often restive under trials that are designed for their welfare.

No chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby (Heb. 12: 11).

An Unexpected Fortune

A press dispatch from Omaha, Neb., tells the story of a sudden and unexpected acquisition of a fortune. A and one of them won her heart. Her father, however, disapproved of the match, and in order to break up the acquaintance, her mother took the young lady on a trip to Europe. During her absence her lover died, and soon afterward she lost her father, grandfather and her brother, who was then a student at Yale. On her return to this country she lived with her mother in California, where the mother died, and the girl was left alone in the world. She came to New York and hired a room in a quiet neighborhood, where she spent the remainder of her life. She had no visitors and paid no visits, but would occasionally take a walk accompanied only by her little dog. She grew utterly indifferent to the world, neglecting her dress and social conventionalities. No one knew who the gloomy, sad-visaged, shabbily-dressed woman was, or had any idea that she belonged to one of New York's historic families. A few weeks ago she was taken ill. The owner of the house where she lived, waited upon her, but no relative or friend came near. She died in utter loneliness. The bulk of her wealth was left to nephews and nieces who were strangers to her. One curious bequest was contained in her will. It was that of ten thousand dollars to an old servant, on condition that she took care of her little dog. What a pity it was that the shadow that darkened her life was not illuminated by the faith that would have filled her years with content and with active service among other burdened souls.

Who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God (II. Cor. 1: 4).

BRIEF NOTES

Dr. Barnardo's Homes for the waifs of the London streets, received 2,879 children during 1900, of whom 68 were crippled, and 257 babies in arms.

In twenty-seven years 17,910 in-patients have been treated at the London Temperance Hospital, and in only forty-three cases was alcohol used in any form.

Bishop Bond, of Montreal, has been elected Metropolitan of Canada, in succession to Archbishop Lewis, who resigned recently on account of ill-health.

A carriage-way is in process of construction between Jerusalem and Nazareth. Hitherto a stony path for horses and camels has connected these two places.

The new Lord Mayor of Dublin, James P. Pile, is not only a Protestant, but also a pronounced temperance advocate, the first man of that kind to hold the civic chair in Dublin for many years.

Dr. Ingram, the new Bishop of London, says that from the time he left home for school to the present time, a period of thirty-two years, there has never been a week in which he did not receive a letter from his mother, and every one was promptly answered.

The church bell cast by Paul Revere in Boston, 1792, which formerly hung in the belfry of the Second Congregational Church, Boston, corner of Hanover and Richmond streets, has become the property of St. James Episcopal Church, Cambridge, of which Rev. Edward Abbott, D.D., is now rector.

Christianity is making rapid progress in the kingdom of Toro, west of Uganda. Only four and a-half years ago the first baptism took place in Toro. Last year 292 persons were baptized, and 356 men and women confirmed. There are already 126 native teachers, who receive no salary from foreign sources; 1,000 people meet daily for instruction.

The Madison Square Presbyterian Church, New York, of which Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst is pastor, has recently acquired the services of Rev. William W. Coe, as an assistant pastor to help in the aggressive work in which the church is now engaged. Mr. Coe has an excellent record as a pastor and will be a most valuable accession to the working force of the church.

The Second Presbyterian Church of Pittsburg, Pa., the pastor of which is Rev. S. Edward Young, had a notable service on April 14, when ninety new members were received. Of these, eighty-five were on profession of faith. Although the church is a downtown church, it has recently cleared its debt and doubled its income besides largely increasing its membership.

The death of Dr. Justin D. Fulton, the well-known opponent of Roman Catholicism, took place at Somerville, Mass., on April 16. Dr. Fulton was seventy-three years of age, and had been forty-eight years in the Baptist ministry. His assaults on the doctrines and practices of the Roman Catholic Church had frequently placed his life in peril, and had caused him some severe injuries.

The Jacob A. Riis House of the King's Daughters' Settlement, in New York, needs second-hand clothing, plain articles of underwear, shoes, hats, stockings and bedding, as the stock of these things has been exhausted during the winter, and a large supply is desired for the summer work. All packages should be sent with express charges prepaid. Friends desiring to assist this philanthropy may address Miss Charlotte A. Waterbury at 48-50 Henry Street, New York.

At a recent meeting the Archbishop of Canterbury gave a notable testimony of his own experience of total abstinence. He said that although he was nearly eighty years of age, he could do as much work as ever, and he doubted if there were many men of his age who worked harder. He was over fifty when he became a total abstainer, but he had not experienced any of the ill-effects popularly supposed to attend a change of a habit that had been continued for many years.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY, THE SCENE OF THE RECENT ACCIDENT

merchant of that city learned about a year ago that a man who owed him six hundred dollars for goods was living in a distant part of the State. The account had been standing so long that it was outlawed, but the merchant believed that his debtor would not repudiate the claim. He therefore went to see him. The debtor said that he had always intended to pay, but had never been able. He had no money then, but he offered his creditor a number of shares in a mine. "They are not worth a cent on the dollar," he frankly explained, "but some day they may become valuable. In any case I will give them to you, as I have nothing else." The merchant accepted them and laid them aside and forgot them, until one day recently he noticed in a newspaper the name of the mine, and the statement that gold had been found there. The price of the shares had mounted by leaps and bounds. He examined the shares in his possession and found that they were worth $75,000 in the market. His astonishment may be imagined, for he had regarded them as worthless. The day is coming when such surprises will be universal. Some who are accounted rich will find themselves poor in heavenly riches, and some who were despised for their poverty will find themselves heirs of a kingdom.

I know thy works, and tribulations, and poverty (but thou art rich) (Rev. 2: 9).

End of a Saddened Life

A romantic story is told of a lady who died a few days ago in New York. She was the daughter of a distinguished lawyer well-known in the city fifty years ago. In her childhood she was the playmate of the children in New York's most famous families. As she grew to womanhood her personal charms attracted many suitors,

An American Visits Menelik

Abyssinia's Ruler and his Unique Court Interestingly Described

IN a most instructive article in the March number of the National Geographic Magazine, Mr. Oscar T. Crosby gives an account of a visit to the Abyssinian Capital and a meeting with the renowned Negus, Menelek. He writes:

Of the Abyssinians, Menelek is the greatest, not because he is the king, but he is the king because he is the greatest. He is emperor of the Abyssinians by virtue of having conquered a great many difficulties, most of which yielded only to the sword or rifle. He is not of that pure Semitic stock which some thousands of years ago seems to have come over first and to have later received reinforcements, from time to time, across the Red Sea from Arabia, and even from Judea. His father was of a kingly family that professes to trace its ancestry to a union between Solomon and the Queen of Sheba. His mother was a woman of low origin, and it may be that this cross-ancestry, while depriving him of the pure, finely chiseled facial type which many of his nobles have, and giving him the negroid face instead, may have added something of vigor, since we know that to be too pure-blooded means sometimes to be thin-blooded. One may fairly say that, while having the advantage of noble paternity, Menelek has fairly fought his way to power. He is eagerly curious to see all new things that Europeans have painfully brought up to his court, five hundred miles by caravan; yet, of course, he cannot make use understandingly of more than a few. I remember when first presented to him, as he sat in a doorway of the largest room in his residence, a rather confused mass of presents; Sevres vases from the French Government, photograph boxes, sextants, and such objects were piled up behind him. I had with me a few gifts to present to His Majesty, who had sent me goats, bread, and tej. Two large volumes, with illustrations of scenes of our own country, of its cities, mountains, waterfalls, etc., I offered in the hope of making known the land of the free. Through the very excellent interpretation of a young Abyssinian attached to the British agency, I endeavored to explain the geographical relations of the United States to the rest of the world, but am sure that I did not make a brilliant success. The difference in time between New York, which I mentioned as being our largest city, and Addis Abeba seemed to interest His Majesty very much, but not understandingly.

Menelek is a hard-working ruler, rising at three or four o'clock in the morning to receive reports that have come in by mule courier from various sections of his empire and to dictate responses. He is said to be unable to write. Till nine o'clock in the morning he is busy with his dispatches, and conducts business with Harar, his most important town, about 200 miles away, by a telephone. After nine o'clock Menelek is ready to receive those of his subjects, great or small, who claim access to him, and also the occasional European who travels to this strange mud-hut capital.

Except when dealing with the black tribes whom he has subjected, Menelek carries on the business of his government by written orders in the Amharic language, the common spoken medium. It is of Semitic derivation, as is also the language of their holy books, now extinct save in some remote parts of the province of Tigre. This ancient language is known as Geez, and in it those books of the Bible with which they are most familiar are preserved. It is to be remembered that these people were Christians when our forefathers were painted blue and worshipped Thor and Wodin. A shipwrecked priest from Alexandria made a convert of the reigning king about the year 330 A. D. The country is dotted with big round mud huts, which are churches. The priestly order, although vastly ignorant, is not without power. They inculcate, doubtless in good faith, many superstitions, but with it all are firm believers in the principal tenets of the Christian doctrine. I found by inquiring of a priest in a small far-away village that he was unable to read the sacred books which he sold to me. He said that was the business of the high priest.

Menelek is indeed at the parting of the ways, and all the while is earnestly seeking the betterment of his people as well as his own glory. I believe he is leading them to the brink of destruction. Such are the ways of the Omnipotent in bringing about the spread of what we call civilization, to drink of whose cup is to the barbarian to drink of poison. What will happen when Menelek dies, nobody knows. If some strong man of the "Abyssinians" variety can grasp the reins, the autonomy of the country may yet be maintained for a long while, and together with it the ignorance of the people.

Germany's Great Theologian

Prof. Adolph Harnack and his Methods—A Profound Thinker's Views

ONE of the most interesting and important personages in the learned world is Adolph Harnack, Professor of Church History, and at present the Rector of the University of Berlin. Prof. Harnack is about five feet eight inches in height, has the pallor and leanness of a scholar, and possesses an energy that seems as tireless as that of the Emperor. He has eyes that flash and express appreciation of wit and humor, as they twinkle behind his glasses, and his whole appearance betokens high intellectual and spiritual fervor. He looks like an ascetic and is perhaps the most abstemious man in Germany. In his class-room, instead of sitting to read his lectures, is the custom of the German professor, he stands, more about, sometimes puts one upon his chair, and at times becomes so active that on the row platform. When pierced the very heart of an opponent, he is prone to lay his finger upon the point of nose, and it is then that his eyes behind the glasses indicate in their merriest twinkles.

In his regular class in Church History, Prof. Harnack has an average attendance of 1,000. In his special lectures given last year on "The Essence of Christianity," he had an attendance of 1,000. Some years ago, he told the writer that he would permit a woman to come to his lectures; he would resign his chair; that he did not believe in emancipating women. But it has come to pass, that the movement for the higher education of women has even affected the professor so much, that for the last four years he has had a ladies' class in his Church History.

He has distinguished himself by the multitude and variety of his labors in the domain of church history. His "History of Christian Dogma" is a book of vast learning, and his "History of New Testament Literature" an epoch-making book. Some years ago, Dr. Harnack published his pamphlet on the Apostles' Creed, which made a great sensation, and was a work of destructive criticism. For this he was put, for a time being, under the ban of the Church; but in later years he has grown more conservative, and his book on the Literature of the New Testament is conservative enough to satisfy even a Presbyterian Assembly. He appeased the authorities of his church, and its pulpits have been opened to him again. He is an able and eloquent preacher, and is especially eloquent on the subject of foreign missions, and advocating better days for work-people. He is often present at those conferences, where aim is the improvement of relations existing between capital and labor, and to present them upon a Christian basis. When he has time to accept an invitation to a social gathering, he is one of the most genial of men; but he is not enjoyable when one has to share alone in a two-handed conversation. The writer has sometimes enjoyed that privilege.

Dr. Harnack expresses regret that German students are so indifferent and listless regard to the subject of foreign missions, while the American and Scottish students are always ready to volunteer for the foreign field. One of their students, a case was presented where there was an audience where there was not more than thirty are present. Harnack said, "Yes, one has only his day, his day of opportunity, his day of getting a hearing, and the night cometh, the night of infirmity, the night of old age, the night of weakness, the night of unpopularity!" Taken all in all, Prof. Harnack is a mighty power for good throughout the German Empire. He has outlived the days of his youthful radicalism in theology, and is working, with heart and soul, for the uplifting of the German Church and the German people.

Occupations for Women

III.—The Teacher of Sewing

AMONG the professions where there is not only room at the top, but also freedom from overmuch crowding as yet on the lower rounds of the ladder, may be mentioned the avocation of the sewing teacher. With the general use of the sewing machine, some forty years ago, or possibly a little less, the beautiful and womanly accomplishment of sewing by hand suffered temporary eclipse. Many other things were thought requisite, if not indispensable, that little girls no longer worked samplers, nor did a daily stint in overhanding and hemming, nor learned the delicate art of hemstitching, and fine plain sewing became a reminiscence of the past. When recently we began to see that dainty sewing was the peculiar gift of a lady, and that in learning to sew, children turned to pay attention to others, to be neat, to be painstaking, and to utilize time and material, it was found well to introduce sewing as a part of manual training in our public schools. Thirty young women are now employed in this teaching in Manhattan and the Bronx, and the course they give, which is extremely thorough and scientific, occupies three years of a pupil's school time. The teacher commences at the foundation, shows a child how to thread and hold her needle, how to wear her thimble, how to take care of her work. Hemming, overhanding, backstitching, felling—every sort and variety of needlecraft is taught with the utmost fidelity, and when the course is completed, the pupil can cut and make a girl's waist.

The knowledge gained by these little learners in the public schools will be of incalculable benefit to them in days to come, when they are wage-earners, to whom money spent on clothing will be a matter of necessary forethought, or when they have the charge of their own households.

Many of the lessons are illustrated by the teachers with drawings and charts. There is room for the display of real talent and much versatility in the teaching. The young woman who attempts this role must herself be a fine sewer, and must understand how to cut and make her own garments. Besides this, she must have pleasant manners, the ability to impart what she knows, the most wonderful perseverance and patience, and a sincere respect for and genuine pride in her department.

One teacher will have at least four schools in her charge, and may attend to sixty or seventy classes a week, going from class to class, starting the work, and leaving it in the hands of the regular teacher of the room; inspecting and criticising it on her return, and assuming its responsibility. She is probably herself a graduate of the Normal College, and also of the Teachers College or of Pratt Institute, if her field of labor is in New York or Brooklyn. Her emolument is equal to that of the ordinary grammar-school teacher.

A few years ago, a woman found herself widowed, with the care of a little group of children. She was penniless. She was not learned. She had no influential friends and no well-to-do relations. The single thing she could do perfectly, so perfectly that she felt it might be a bread-winning weapon, was sewing. Acquaintances shook their heads pityingly when she said, "This little needle of mine shall feed and clothe my children, educate them, and be our means of livelihood for the next ten years, please God."

Never have I seen such beautiful work, stitches so fairy like, articles so dainty, as have come from that wee cottage on Long Island. The very poetry of needlework! To-day, the brave mother has orders beyond her own ability to fill, and has been compelled to engage several assistants. She is building up a very remunerative business. Trousseaux and layettes, guimpes, filmy neckwear, handkerchiefs, are ordered by women of wealth, who prize elegant lingerie, and in the homes of millionaires, the little lady's work is shown with complacency and worn with satisfaction. Only hand sewing, but it has built a barricade between the family and the prowling wolf. It has made a demonstration of what a plain woman, with energy, common sense, and grit, and real ability in a special direction may do, unaided and alone.

To return to our teacher of sewing, She has, with all other working women, a distinct advantage, if she may

Mothers and Daughters

STRANGE to say, no relation is more intimate and none should be more sympathetic and more confidential than that of mothers and daughters, yet they often misunderstand one another. The daughter is jealous at the amiability her mother displays to the young girl across the street, to whom she is always polite and whom she never reproves. Why should she? There can be no conflict of wills where there is neither authority nor responsibility, and where each woman shows the other her very best side. Mothers complain of the lack of yielding on the part of daughters. They overlook the fact that the little girl of yesterday is now a woman grown, with her own ideas, her own outlook, and her own problems.

Where there is deep, true, and enduring affection, the passing difficulties will smooth themselves away.

To daughters who complain that their mothers are trying, I commend the remembrance of all their mothers have borne for them in the early years, and I advise them to reflect on the possibility that the mothers in their experience of life may know better than the girls possibly can. Sometimes the most tenderly loving people misunderstand one another. The similarity of temperament may be to blame, or one may be self-willed and the other imperious. But affection and right principle will bring peace in the end. When a mother has young people around her, almost-grown up, and at the same time has little ones in the nursery, her interests are somewhat divided. She must brood over her babies. There are women so constituted that they lavish caresses and tenderness on infants in the cradle, but are undemonstrative to their older children. Yet this is not from lack of love; it is only that they are shy of bestowing the petting and the fondness on any but the wee ones. In such a home the older sister should share the mother's gentleness and vigilance; should help all she can, and bestow so much attention on the little ones that the mother's burden will be lightened. Good manners are a wonderful barrier against hard feelings, a marvelous preventive of quarrels. Whatever we may feel, we should always speak with politeness. We may keep our tones even, and our looks kind. Often the effort to do this will bring about the gentleness which is desirable, being first pure, then peaceable.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—EMILY. Your vase can be mended. But it will be a costly process, as it is only to be done by experts.

—K. C. The question must be settled by the individual according to her conscience. No one can advise her.

—ETHEL. Cigarette smoking will inevitably harm your young brother. Use your influence to break him of the habit. Do not smile at it.

—DOLLY R. I cannot advise you about your hair. Gray hair is often exceedingly becoming to a young face and is really a great distinction to a pretty woman under thirty.

—INDIGNANT FRIEND. The young lady is well rid of the perfidious man, who disgraces his profession, but she will be much more dignified quietly to accept the situation than to make any public protest.

—SISTER-IN-LAW. Does it not seem as though the young people had a right to go quietly to the minister's house and be married, if that is their preference? Unless they select another minister and a friend opens her house, I see no other way for them in the circumstances.

If she must board, she will do well to seek a place near her work. In a future paper some suggestions will be given as to agreeable substitutes for boarding.

The profession of the seamstress is as honorable as that of the artist, or the journalist, or the doctor, or the lawyer. I repeat, it is not overcrowded. You can find in any city a dozen stenographers to every seamstress, and as many representatives of almost every other art. The woman who can do fine darning and renovating and remaking of old gowns, can earn a generous livelihood in any city or town of our great country.

LOVE ME, THY CHILD

LOVE me, thy little child, my Father,
And keep me very near to-day;
Though dark temptations round me gather,
Thyself shall be my strength and stay;
I ask not wealth or ease, but rather
That I may love thee all the way,
And thy dear love may with me bide;
So that I cling from day to day,
As child to parent, to thy side.

CYNTHIA WESTOVER ALDEN

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Sunshine Branch of the International Sunshine Society was formed in time to be eligible for representation at the annual reception to be held at the Hotel Savoy, in New York City, on the afternoon and evening of May 2. Invitations have been issued by the President General, addressed to State Presidents, Branch Presidents, and Members-at-Large of the International Sunshine Society, cordially inviting them to be present at the Annual Convention. Each branch is entitled to two delegates. It is hoped to make the reception a representative gathering in the broadest sense, and to this end every President may have as many member's tickets reserved for her branch as she desires. All members of the Society will be heartily greeted. Escorts are included in the invitation, and tickets for them will be provided immediately on application. Delegates from a distance will be entertained, so far as possible, at the homes of the New York or Brooklyn Branch members. In order to make suitable arrangements for those intending to come, it is necessary to send names to the President General, 96 Fifth Avenue, New York, at least one week in advance of the Convention.

If you have not time in which to apply to me for membership tickets, they can be obtained at headquarters, or at the hotel in the credential room any hour during the afternoon and evening of May 2.

I am glad to see that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Branch is going to be active, and now since we are banded together agreeing to send in our reports every month, I feel sure that in this union we will find new and great strength. Circle No. 1 has already met, and two suitable delegates have been appointed to attend the business session.

Among those members who are forming circles are Miss Georgia S. Holmes, of Dairyland, N. Y.; Miss Lily A. Cox, of Saginaw, Mich.; Miss Mary E. Sullivan, Burlington,
N. J.; Mrs. Isabella Phares, of Oxford, Ind., and Mrs. Ella Hoyman, of Ponca City, Oklahoma Territory. Just as soon as these leaders send in their list of ten or more names the circles will receive their number and instructions for work.

There are so many things I want you to do.
Of course, your main work is to spread good cheer in your own neighborhood; and until you get well started, I wish you would help me scatter a little sunshine among our individual members. I mean the members who live far away from anybody, in parts of the country where it is difficult to form a circle.

First, I would like you to lend a hand to a member who lives five miles from a town, and is obliged to forge the Arkansas River to get to church or Sunday School. Oftentimes the river is high and she does not leave home for weeks at a time. This lady lives with her mother, and both are fond of reading matter.
Who is willing to send a book or paper or letter of good cheer? Please let me know and I will furnish the address. Such an offer will entitle the sender to membership in our society.

Mrs. J. L. Smith, of Augusta, Montana, has paid her dues by offering to pass on THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to one of our active members who cannot afford to subscribe, but pays her fee by visiting the sick.

An opportunity for someone else to divide sunshine, comes in the shape of a letter from an invalid of eight long years' standing. She says THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is loaned to her by a friend. Let me quote from her letter:

"We used to take a great many magazines, but my long illness has changed all that. We have lost our home, and are only just able to procure the necessities of life. We are living in the mountains, shut in from the outside world by the Great North Woods. My husband gets a small salary by working in a mill. We have three dear little children, and with very little money pay our rent and provide food. There are only forty houses here, and one store. I get very lonely and discouraged sometimes, and for that reason would like to be active in the sunshine work.
If there is anything that I can do to brighten anybody's life, please let me do it. A letter telling me that I have done something will make me most happy. I long to get in touch with the outside world. Just a book or a paper, please, now and then, if it is not too much trouble. I do so much miss good reading. We can't subscribe for even one paper now. I am too weak to talk much even if I have visitors, but I can read. Do please send me some word of cheer, if only to tell me that I have not overstepped my rights in the society."

Here is another member I must tell you about. She has been confined to the house for eleven years, with two old people, giving her life entirely to their care. A few days ago these two beloved charges passed away.
My correspondent says that she is lonely and worn out, mentally and physically, but begs not to be forgotten by the society. The winters where she lives are long and dreary, and she asks for an occasional greeting from those who are living in the sunshine of success and happiness.

A very dear sweet little woman, who has been sick for thirty years, prays that we will not forget her sister, who has been her guardian angel all this time. "Just send us a few kind words now and then," she says, "to cheer us up. If you knew how it breaks my heart to have the mail carrier go by day after day and not stop at my house, you wouldn't mind, I am sure, sending us a postal card now and then, telling us just a little bit of what is going on in the world."

Now, who will answer my first call for good cheer? Tell me what you have to pass on, and I will tell you where it will be most appreciated. All are welcome to help in this noble work. Address Miss Susan Parsons,
President of CHRISTIAN HERALD Branch
I. S. S., 92 Bible House, New York City, for full particulars.

If you are in doubt and do not know what to send as your dues, do as one young girl has planned. She is going to send ten cents a week, so that five letters can be written to members isolated, who, perhaps, have no other recreation than watching for the occasional greeting brought through the Rural Delivery.

Send me the selections that you have clipped from papers and have found comfort in. Let me "pass them on." Form your circles and make your report, so I can announce the result in my next letter. Don't forget that the eligibility to membership consists in only being able to perform kind and helpful deeds. Furnish some suggestion that will carry abroad sunshine. For five cents you can get the International Song set to music, and also the Constitution. Another five cents will furnish you the badge. Everybody ought to know the words of our song by heart. I will give them to you, but be sure and send for the music, so you can all sing it.

SCATTER SUNSHINE

In a world where sorrow ever will be known,
Where are found the needy, and the sad and lone;
How much joy and comfort you can all bestow,
If you scatter sunshine everywhere you go.

CHORUS

Scatter sunshine all along your way,
Cheer and bless and brighten every passing day.

Slightest actions often meet the sorest needs,
For the world wants daily, little kindly deeds;
Oh! what care and sorrow, you may help remove,
With your song and courage, sympathy and love.

When the days are gloomy, sing some happy song,
Meet the world's repining, with a courage strong;
Go with faith undaunted, through the ills of life,
Scatter smiles and sunshine, o'er its toil and strife.

The First Steamboat

A. S. H., Columbia City, Indiana, writes:

In THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of April 13, 1901, I see that one who signs himself H. M. P., claims it as an undeniable fact that the first steamboat made her first voyage from Greenock to Glasgow, on the Clyde in Scotland, in 1801, and that it was the production of a man named Symington. Now I wish to make this statement. In the book called Rambles in the Path of the Steam Horse, by Ele-Bowen, published in 1855. On page 243 I see that "in 1784 an interesting and successful experiment to navigate the Potomac River by steam was made by James Rumsey, of Virginia, and in the year mentioned made a practical experimental trial of his boat on the Potomac near Sir John's Run. A number of distinguished spectators were present, among whom was General Washington, who also gave him a certificate in favor of the experiment in question. The boat is described as having been fifty feet in length. Thinking that he could not secure complete success in America he resolved to go to England. He procured patents of the British Government for steam navigation; these patents bear date in the beginning of the year 1788.
The American Congress, some years since, voted a gold medal to his only surviving son, James Rumsey, Jr., commemorative of his father's services."

Luther's Triumphant Death

A Valuable Letter Describing it Found in the British Museum

It was a striking coincidence, that at the time when the Christian world is engaged in erecting a great memorial to the memory of Martin Luther, the Founder of Protestantism, there should have been discovered, in a remote nook of the British Museum, a long-worn and faded letter of unquestioned authenticity, which gives the details of the death scene of the great Reformer. These details are altogether new, in the sense that they have never before been disclosed to the public, and they lend added dignity and beauty to the spiritual character and Christian fortitude of Luther. The writer of the letter is Dr. Joannes Aurifaber, and the missive, which in Latin, is addressed to Dr. Pfeffinger, of Leipzig. As translated, it says:

"Grace and peace from God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, I announce to you, most reverend sir, the saddest tidings. The great Doctor Luther died early in the morning of February 18, at 3 o'clock.

At one o'clock in the morning he rose from bed and called his servant, telling him to send for Doctor Jonas, who, on arriving, inquired after his state. "Dear Doctor," answered Luther, "I shall remain at Eisleben," adding that "he was attacked again by his complaint." He then asked that clothes should be warmed for him, with which he rubbed himself.

Dr. Jonas in the meantime had secured the attendance of two doctors, who were able somewhat to ease his pain. Count Albert came also with his wife, and a number of doctors, in whose presence he earnestly lived.

When actually dying he offered this petition: "Almighty God, Father of my dear Lord Jesus Christ whom I have learned of and known, whom the world has persecuted and smitten, have mercy upon me and receive my soul into thy hands." And then, while citing some comforting passages from the Scriptures, as, for instance, "God so loved the world," etc., he passed away in the faith of a good God.

I write this to you, reverend sir, out of the paths of my grief; more I might have said I not the sorrow of my heart prevent. All at I have here given has already been re-ported by Justus Jonas to Frederic, the elector of Saxony, who to-morrow will give instructions as to the funeral. I commend myself to you in the Lord. Dated Eisleben, February 18, 1546.

D. JOANNES AURIFABER.

Aurifaber (the Latinized form of the name Goldschmidt) was a Lutheran pastor and a warm friend of the Reformer, one of whose works Dr. Aurifaber edited. Dr. Aurifaber, who was born in Weimar about 1519, was educated at Wittenberg, where he had an opportunity of hearing Luther lecture. He was a field preacher and chaplain in the war of 1544. Afterward he dwelt with Luther as his private secretary, and was present at his death in 1546. He experienced many vicissitudes: as imprisoned in 1547, and was court-martialed at Weimar in 1566. He published Eisleben a number of Luther's writings in 1564, his Letters in 1565-1566, and his able-talk in 1566.

The popular interest increases in the movement for a Luther statue—the gift of American Protestants—to occupy the central position in the entrance of the magnificent new cathedral at Speyer. Contributions of one dollar are solicited for this purpose. Every dollar contributed will receive by mail, from the Luther Memorial Committee, a large and finely executed engraving of "Martin Luther and His Family," after the famous painting of Spangenberg. The plate measures 2 1/2 by 16 1/2 inches, and will be sent carefully rolled and postage prepaid. SWEET SURPRISES

HOW often into all our lives,
In simple, homely ways,
The joy-light falls with sweet surprise,
Brightening the passing days.
The Father for his children still Heaps treasured goodness up,
Then drops an added sweetness in
The overflowing cup.

Success we had not counted on,
A blessing all unsought,
A strain of music midst our toil,
The listening ear has caught.
The sentence that we heard or read,
Holding for us far more
Of help and cheer than e'er was dreamed
By one who kept the store.

The morning picture beautiful,
Lighting the onward way,
The burst of sunset glory bright,
Closing the busy day.
Glad words of cheer, of courage, hope,
Most grateful, freely given,
Sweet sympathy in sores need,
Coming like balm from heaven.

The friend so dearly loved afar,
For whom the fond heart yearns,
In a glad hour of rarest joy
Unto the home returns.
The Father's daily, constant thought,
Descending from above,
The overflowing of his grace,
For us his gifts of love.

Saving Lost Women

THE eighteenth anniversary of the Florence Crittenton Mission, held at the "Mother Mission," Bleeker street, New York, was a most interesting occasion. The address of the evening was delivered by General O. O. Howard.

Rev. F. H. Jacobs, the evangelist singer, and his wife, together with Miss Zetti Kennedy, sang beautiful Gospel songs; Mrs. Barrett, Superintendent of the National Florence Crittenton Mission, spoke; and there were many inspiring testimonies. The most significant feature of the programme, however, was the report read by Mrs. Flora Freeman, matron of the Mission, for it showed an extraordinary amount of good work accomplished for unfortunate women and their helpless infants.

During the past year 111 girls and women have been permanently cared for, permanent employment being found for 86; 1,905 temporarily lodged; many babies were provided for; 32,285 meals were served; attendance at night meetings was 34,878. Not one of the 111 girls have been discharged for misconduct. A remarkable record this is, showing that lives of over 2,000 women have been touched. Many of these women, utterly wretched and broken-hearted when they entered the mission, are now helping to save others.

In her report, Mrs. Freeman said that of the many girls sent forth from the Mission to make an honest living, not one had failed to pay back to the Mission the money advanced to them on their departure as a loan. This, of course, applies only to girls who have remained in the Mission long enough to feel its influence upon their characters.

Answers to Prayers

L. I. writes:
I have noticed a column in your paper giving requests answered by prayer. I have been praying for six years to find my brother, and the 28th of January I received a telegram from him. The night before a friend prayed that I would find him.

Mrs. T., St. Mary's, Ga., writes:
I prayed for the conversion of a dear one, and while I was "yet speaking" God heard and answered. Praise his name!

K. M. S., Lanes Mills, Pa., writes:
God has been very good to me. He has brought a brother into the fold that I have prayed for for years. Thank God for his goodness to me.

LOSS OF A DEVOTED WORKER

Death of Rev. C. E. Wyckoff, Secretary of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip

FROM Irvington, N. J., comes news of a bereavement which will be severely felt in many parts of our land. The Rev. Cornelius E. Wyckoff, pastor of the Reformed Church in that town, and General Secretary of the Order of Andrew and Philip, is dead. His death was very sudden. Only a few days before it occurred, he dictated a letter to this journal calling attention to the recently issued report of the Order in which he took so deep an interest, and inviting our readers to send to him for its literature. It was but two days that he was laid aside from his active work. In his case, however, the suddenness of the blow is not to be deplored. It was probable that one so earnest and indefatigable would prefer to go from his labor to his reward without any long interval of suffering. Preparation for the change was not needed, for his life had been so permeated and inspired by the Spirit of Christ that to enter the presence of his Master was only to enjoy the fuller development of the principles of his earthly service. It is not for him that the people mourn; he knew that, like Paul, for him the change would be far better. The sorrow is that the Church and the young people, whom he so wisely and faithfully served, must be deprived of the help he so gladly rendered.

REV. C. E. WYCKOFF

Mr. Wyckoff was only thirty-five years of age. He was the son and grandson of ministers of the Reformed Church. After graduating at the Theological Seminary of New Brunswick, N. J., he was installed pastor of the Reformed Church of Carleton, N. Y., and afterwards of the Bethany Reformed Church, Brooklyn, N. Y. His best and most influential service has, however, been rendered since 1896, when he settled at Irvington. The Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip attracted him strongly, and he gave it loyal service. He had a firm belief in the efficacy of individual service, and he had the happy faculty of enlisting the allegiance of energetic workers. Through his efforts many a young Christian has become a missionary to a circle of friends and has won recruits for the Master's cause.

Rev. George Edwin Talmage, of Schenectady, N. Y., who was one of his classmates in college, writes of him: "Mr. Wyckoff's death will be a severe loss to the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip. Only a month ago he prepared a service for Brotherhood Day, which takes place May 5, on the subject of 'The Last Will of Christ.' The subject was deemed too funeral, in its title, although it was rich in its provisions. A more cheerful topic has been suggested, but the entire Brotherhood will feel the sadness in reality, which was almost hinted at by the direction of the thoughts of our good brother and fellow-worker. Mr. Wyckoff was only a young man, having reached about one-half the allotted term of life. I recall the sadness of sixteen years ago, when he left college, as was expected to die of consumption, and the surprise and pleasure when he came back three years later to take the Seminary course, having recovered his health, and prosecuted his studies in the retirement of the mountains. After his graduation he filled three pastorates, and in the last he has worked most ardently, although giving a great deal of his time to the work for young men throughout our country. For four years he has been the General Secretary, doing his work with practically no recompense, and oft-times advancing needed means out of his own pocket. Two months ago a Finance Committee was appointed, to raise funds to liquidate all debts, and to push the work on a larger scale. We owed Mr. Wyckoff over $400, but he was one of the first to subscribe $50 toward the Forward Movement Fund, and to make a payment on his subscription. At that first meeting of the committee we spent an hour on our knees in prayer, none, perhaps, with greater faith and hope than our departed brother. I recall how he said, 'I have faced many financial difficulties, and have seen them dissolve in answer to prayer.' His was a faithful, persistent and laborious service, and I doubt not, but it has broken down his system, so that it could not stand the attack of the disease which carried him off in two days. Who will take up the burden, and carry it with equal zeal?"

Godliness in Business

NOT long ago, while attending a local prayer-meeting, our minister asked the meeting if they had ever considered why so many business men fail? I wonder if many people have ever seriously considered that question? The business man of to-day starts out in life with one great object in view—to make money. This is the ruling passion, the one great end to be desired. And is this not the false foundation, which being builded on leads to certain ruin? If we start in business we must follow certain rules, obey certain demands. We must first take God into our venture as a partner, else how may we hope to succeed. We must then determine to hang the sign "Honesty and fairness" above our door, but the sign availeth nothing unless we live honestly and deal fairly. We should measure our thoughts and deeds more carefully than our laces and silks, remembering that there is a day of inventory when he shall write the list, and good deeds shall count for more than all the gold of earth. We should strive to make each day one of service for the Master and one of real gain for ourselves, that in the end we may hear the welcome, "Well done, good and faithful servant," and know the joy of everlasting life. Is not the reason for many business failures this: Men strive to win gold and forget that greater things exist? Men seek the success of to-day and forget the great to-morrow which shall have no end. Men forget that Christ has a share in all their business ventures and remember when it is too late. Let us then tear down the old sign of greed and selfishness and erect the new one of the real business man, "Justice, love and honesty."

J. BERTRAM EVELINE.

A NEW HOME FOR JESUS

A MARRIAGE HYMN

LORD, on this sacred union
Of heart in heart now turned,
Life's interests in communion,
May each thy blessing find;
May each in purpose holy,
In loyal life for thee,
In years for Jesus solely,
By oneness strengthened be.

Lord, in the home created
By sacred nuptial tie,
At family hearth and altar
Vouchsafe thy presence bright,
All incomplete without thee;
But honored and most blest
The home the Saviour hallows
As first and constant guest.

Thy presence in the dwelling,
Was noised abroad of yore,
And to thy love excelling
Flocked sick, and maimed, and poor,
So in this home abiding,
O Lord, thy glory show,
That from its favored portals
Thy healing power may flow.

PROFESSOR D. V. TOWNER is one of the best-known of all those who have sung the Gospel in great revivals of religion in this country. His long association with Mr. Moody, and his relation to the Moody Bible Institute in Chicago, have given him a wide and growing constituency. No one ever hears him sing, without feeling that the song to him is as much a message from God as is the sermon of a thoroughly consecrated and devoted preacher. He has been greatly blessed of God in form, and figure, and with a voice as sweet as it is large, but, after all, these would not avail to work the results which come from Towner's singing, were it not for the Divine blessing which rests upon his work. The story of his conversion will be interesting to multitudes.

He made a confession of Christ when he was about thirteen years, and was happy in the Lord for about three years; but bad associations in his school life influenced him to such an extent that he became a backslider, and while he was never guilty of outrageous sins, yet he was still in the "far country." Though having no joy as a Christian, and though constantly tormented by his conscience, yet he would not fail to champion Christianity whenever occasion presented. About this time he was called to the bedside of his only sister, who was dying. She was a beautiful Christian girl, two years his senior. She reminded him of the former days, when they had started together in the Christian life, and asked him to promise her that he would return to the Lord, and to his first love. He promised with the greatest sincerity, but time passed, and he did not make good his promise. He was waiting for a "convenient season." Within a year his father died. Calling his son to his bedside, he reminded him of his pledge to his dying sister, and said: "My son, promise me that you will give your heart and life to Christ." The young man promised, and received his father's dying blessing. Again, he did not keep his pledge. Like so many others, he was all the time expecting that some favorable opportunity would present itself.

Finally, he was married, and his wife was an earnest Christian, who was faithful in the performance of all her religious duties. He watched her very carefully, and after awhile he noticed that she began to get lax about her regular worship, and that she would occasionally retire without prayers. Though he himself did not pray, this worried him. He said: "Is it possible that I am the cause of this neglect of prayer on the part of my wife?" Still, he did not start. One night, when his wife had retired without prayer, he was so greatly troubled that he could not sleep. She had been sleeping for sometime, when he roused her, and asked if he were the cause of her neglect of prayer. She parried the question, and would not charge him with it, but he felt guilty, and knew in his own heart that he was the cause. It gave him great remorse, and after a hard fight with the tempter, who tried to persuade him to wait until he should be in some meeting before he took the stand, he made up his mind that he was exactly like the prodigal in that he was far from his Father's house, and that he would arise and go to his Father.

When Towner had reached this decision he began the greatest fight of his life. It seemed as though he could not get out of bed, and when he had, by what seemed to him a superhuman effort, gotten on his knees, he seemed dumb, and positively could not pray. He remained upon his knees, however, until he got the courage and power to say, "My Father, I want to return to thy fold." At the very instant he began to pray, Satan's power was broken, and a peace such as the repentant suppliant had never known before filled his soul.

When morning came, he wisely determined to be a bold soldier and to confess his Lord everywhere. Before breakfast he confessed Christ to the family where he and his wife were being entertained. From that day till this he has never let go his hold on God. Some years later, after he had begun his work with Mr. Moody, Mr. Towner received a great blessing in the "baptism of the Spirit for service." Writing about it, after these many years of joyous Christian experience—years that have been greatly blessed of God in the winning of souls—Professor Towner says: "I can see now that my trouble was a stubborn will. When I had the consent of my will the blessing was ready for me. I believe that many a man is walking in darkness because of a stubborn will. If a man can, by God's grace, conquer that will and bring it to Jesus, he will bless him and give him a place in his kingdom, and make him an heir of glory."

"I Have Called Thee"

Editor Christian Herald: In your issue of March 20, is a delightful incident in the life of my old friend Stephen Merritt, whom God used to turn into the light John G. Woolley. There is an error, however, in quoting from that magnificent forty-third of Isaiah. It gives it, "I have called thee by my name, etc." Now, while it is true that he gives us "a new name," the thought here has always been to my mind one of rare richness, bringing me familiarly close in a personal contact! "I have called thee by thy name, thou art mine!"

The Master called Peter, John and Andrew as you or I would single out a friend, and so he calls you and I by our own names. Is it not a grand thought? I once was passing, at some little distance, the headquarters of Gen. Grant at City Point, Va. I was just in from the front, dust-be-grimed and, as I thought, well disguised. I was startled indeed when Gen. Grant called out: "Hello, S—, come in here!" I felt it no small thing, with so little claim to recognition, to be called by my name by such a man! What must it be when the King of Kings condescends to call me by my name, and, more than this, to claim me as his very own! If one could for the nonce be inspired to wield the potent pen of a Talmage, what an uplifting, Heaven-reaching and—far better—service rendering, would come from the elaboration of so glorious a theme!

A Church in a Court-Room

Several months ago, the little church in Farmville, Va., of which Rev. W. H. Lee is pastor, was destroyed by fire. Everything belonging to the church was consumed, and the congregation were left out of doors and without a place to worship. Later, they were allowed to meet in the court-house, where they are still holding services every Sunday. With a small fund which this little colored congregation has scraped together, by great economy and rigid sacrifice, they are endeavoring to rebuild, but help is needed, if they are to have a church home again. Any reader who may wish to aid them, can address Pastor W. H. Lee, Farmville, Va.

HE LOVED THE BOWERY MISSION

Many Mourn for Bright Young Ellsworth Inness

ONE of the saddest meetings ever held in the old Bowery Mission was that of Thursday, April 18. On this, the regular night for the "Mother of the Bowery Boys" to talk to the great family of unfortunates who every evening fill the hall, the meeting became a memorial service for young George Ellsworth Inness. When Mrs. Bird arose she said:

"Boys, two weeks ago to-night there

sat on this platform with us a young man who loved to come among you and who was ever thinking of some kind deed he could do for you. He was his mother's only son; he had never given her a moment's anxiety; life was full of fair promise for him. In his youth and his strength and his beauty death came to him suddenly. Early this morning his mother called me over the telephone; she said: 'Don't let your faith falter; don't let your trust waver; it's all right; but my Ellsworth is dead.'

"Boys, she knows where her boy is to-night. While we remember the pure young friend who loved you so, and his mother, who, even in his death, sorrows not without hope, may we not pray for the poor mothers who do not know where their boys are to-night? How many of you want us to pray for your mother?"

A then a host of hands went up.

Dr. Donald Sage MacKay, Mr. Ellsworth's pastor, told of his piety, gentleness and faith. "I went to comfort his mother this morning," he said. "She met me at the door, a smile upon her face. 'Why should I sorrow as one without hope?' she said. 'If my religion cannot help me to-day, when I have lost my only son, what is it worth to me? When you speak about him to the boys at the Bowery Mission to-night, I want you to tell them that we are praising God because Ellsworth has gone home.'"

Ellsworth Inness, though only nineteen, had been for several years an active church member. He was a bright, happy, athletic young fellow, and at the time of his death was a student at the Hotchkiss College Preparatory School, Connecticut. Wednesday afternoon, when he was out rowing in a high wind with his friend, Otis Sawyer, on Lake Wononscopowac, the canoe capsized. People on land saw Inness holding his friend, who could not swim, upon the boat. Then he struck out for the shore, but went down quickly. He was a good swimmer, and but for his effort to save his friend, might perhaps have been able to save himself. As it was, both lads perished. The day before, Otis Sawyer's mother and sister had sailed for Europe, leaving the boy happy and well. The day after, and ere the body was recovered, his father started across the water to break the sad news to them.

Mrs. George Inness, Jr., mother of the dead youth, has been a kind friend to the Bowery Mission and a most generous helper of the Gospel Settlement, as readers of this journal are aware. They may recall, too, a sketch published some time ago of her mother, Mrs. Annie Ellsworth Roswell-Smith, who sent the first message over the first telegraph line in this country, the message reading: "What hath God wrought." To her father, Hon. Mr. Ellsworth, "Father of the United States Patent Office," is due the establishment of that first line. Young Inness' surname as well as his Christian name, is famous in American history, for no painter of this country has achieved greater distinction than his grandfather, George Inness, the mantle of whose gifts and accomplishments have fallen upon the father of Ellsworth, George Inness, Jr., one of the foremost painters of the day. Wealth, friends and high social position belonged to Ellsworth Inness, yet he was ever ready to forego the attractions of his beautiful home to go down among the poor and destitute on deeds of ministry and mercy.

REVIVAL WORK GOES FORWARD

A Notable Revival at Newark N. J.

A deep work of grace has been in progress in the Clinton Avenue Reformed Church, Newark, N. J., since the first of the present year. The pastor, Rev. Dr. Daniel H. Martin, began special services. Each Sunday morning he has preached to church members, arousing them to a sense of responsibility for the unsaved, and on Sunday evenings he has made direct appeals to the unconverted, following each service with an after meeting. During the three months two hundred and eighty persons have declared an interest in their personal salvation, and at the Easter Communion Dr. Martin gave the right hand of fellowship to one hundred and ten new members. A great congregation witnessed the impressive ceremony. Nearly all the new communicants were adults, and many young men and several heads of families were among the number. During the last two years Dr. Martin has welcomed nearly three hundred new members. The total membership now numbers nine hundred and fifty-five.

A Work of Grace at Norfolk, Va.

A very precious work of grace has been enjoyed at the Park Avenue Baptist Church, Norfolk, Va. The pastor, Rev. J. J. Hall, D.D., was ably assisted by Evangelist R. D. Garland. Some twenty-five have been received into the church. The people worshipping there built, a few years ago, a beautiful stone church, and God has greatly blessed them by many additions and an earnest band of workers.

Souls Won at Flackville, N. Y.

At Flackville, N. Y., M. E. Church, Rev. W. H. English, pastor, special services have been held with gracious results. Sinners were converted, believers quickened, the Lord's cause strengthened, his church built up, and his name glorified. Thirty were taken into the church. The pastor was his own evangelist.

REVIVAL NOTES

Blue Ridge, Mo., is praying for a much-needed revival.

At Drundee, Ills., union revival meetings of the Congregational, Baptist and Methodist Churches, assisted by the Y. M. C. A., began March 17. The people ask prayers that many may be brought to Christ.

Evangelist Harrison Prescott, of Lincoln, held a three weeks' meeting in the M. E. Church at Phillips, Neb., with good results. Christians have been quickened and a number of sinners have accepted Christ.

The M. E. Church at Chili, Ind., has just closed a series of very successful revival services. Rev. Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Hermiston, evangelists, assisted Rev. J. M. Baker, the pastor. Over forty joined the church on confession of faith.

SENT TO WIN SOULS

A Duty Incumbent on Every Christian

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

EVERY converted man or woman can be, and ought to be, a soul-winner. "He that gathereth not with me scattereth," says our Lord (Matt. 12: 34); there is no neutrality. And in point of fact, wherever a true believer has the Holy Spirit within him as "a well of water springing up unto everlasting life" (John 4: 14), out of him do "flow rivers of living water" (John 7: 38); and, as with the river in Ezekiel 47: 9, everything lives "whithersoever the river cometh." But too often the river-bed is choked up with "the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things entering in" (Mark 4: 19); and the living water cannot flow. No other gift than the Holy Spirit is needed in order that the natural instinct of a living soul should manifest itself in seeking the salvation of sinners. No one who is born of God is in a normal or healthy state who has no anxiety for the souls of the unsaved.

Before his ascension, our Lord, during their stay in Galilee, appeared to the eleven disciples, who were then all together, having assembled "unto the mountain where Jesus had appointed them?" (Matt. 28: 16). "And when they saw him they worshipped him, but some doubted." These were they who had not been present when the miraculous draught of fishes, and the events recorded in our last issue, took place. They had missed an interview with Jesus and were unprepared for their next meeting with him. He reiterated a truth which he had already taught them in somewhat similar words (Matt. 11: 27). "All authority hath been given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all the nations" (Matt. 28: 19, 20). Mark reads: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to the whole creation" (Mark 16: 15). The Gospel of Luke 24: 46-48 says, practically, "Go ye." And the Gospel of John he had said to them on the resurrection evening, "As my father hath sent me, even so send I you" (John 20: 21). Again, it is, "Go ye." "God so loved the world." His own children have the privilege to share this love of God to the world which has rejected Christ, and which hates his people. The world would not have Christ, but he sends his representatives, if, perchance, some will believe and be saved. "As my Father hath sent me." "The Son can do nothing of himself," and "Apart from me, ye can do nothing" (John 5: 19; 15: 5). "The Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works" (John 14: 10). Paul testifies, "Not I, but Christ liveth in me, and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me" (Gal. 2: 20). Our beloved Lord took, in taking upon himself our fallen nature, the very position of dependence which we fallen but redeemed creatures have, at he might not only die for us, but also make a way by which we might carry on that which he "began both to do and to teach" (Acts 1: 1). So truly as his Father sent him—under the very same conditions—he sends us. Nothing, and yet able to do all things, through Christ dwelling in us by his spirit, which strengtheneth us (Phil. 4: 13).

The hindrances in the way of the salvation of souls are so great that only the power of Omnipotence can overcome them. The ground we have to deal with is human hearts at enmity with God, already preoccupied by his great enemy, "the god of this world, who hath blinded the minds of the unbelieving, that the light of the Gospel of the glory of Christ, who the image of God, should not dawn upon them" (II. Cor. 4: 4, R. V.). More than this, they have no instinct for God. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned" (I. Cor. 2: 14). We go with a message which, if received, calls upon men to accept a salvation which must humble them to the dust, and to a vocation which adds them into suffering and contempt among men. Added to this, the majority of those who surround them mock at it and repudiate it. How, then, expect to succeed in such an undertaking? Because the Almighty God is on our side. We go, sent of God; we go not on our own charges; all the resources of God are at our disposal for the work. And he who is sent us is with us, yea, in us, to love, to pray, to speak. When the hardness of the hearts, the difficulties of the circumstances, the utter want of response we meet with, discourages us, it is evidence that we have expected something, either from ourselves or from those to whom we go; our expectation is not been solely from the Lord.

God is with us. "All authority hath been given unto me," "Go ye, therefore," "and I am with you all the days, unto the consummation of the age" (Matt. 28: 18-20, R. V.). Go, and make disciples. Disciples receive Christ and leave all for his sake, or they are not disciples (Luke 14: 25-27, 33; John 8: 31). his does not mean a superficial work, a ringing up of people to the penitent-form who have not yet really been searched in their inmost hearts, and who simply yield to pressure which, when taken off, leaves them where it found them. Disciples are those who are in very deed born of God, and from the first there is something of God about them. They are begotten of incorruptible seed, even of the Word of God, which liveth and abideth forever (I. Peter 1: 23); and they cannot live without the Word. "Make disciples of all nations, baptizing them [out of the name of sinner] into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things, whatsoever I have commanded you." Such is the charge as recorded by Matthew, the kingly charge of Israel's true King. Make disciples, and teach them, not a part, but the whole of my commandments. In the Gospel of Mark, which always enters into detail, the great commission, while in itself a command, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to the whole creation," speaks of the result of the reception or rejection of it. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." Life or death, salvation or future judgment, shall be the consequence of believing or disbelieving.

He Helped the Needy

Death has again claimed all that was mortal of one of the members of the great family of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, writes Mr. Herbert A. Jones, of the passing away of Mr. John H. Plattman, of Bellona, N. Y. "Mr. Plattman," he says, "was born in England in 1827, and came with his parents to this country when only a lad, and has lived in nearly the same place all his life. He was a constant reader and student of the Bible; he had strong convictions of duty, and it became a pleasure to him to bring the subject of Christian conduct and obligation into all his business or social relations. He was affectionate and tender in his home, kind and considerate with his neighbors, fair and liberal in the support of those in need, a generous giver to the church. For years he had entered zealously into relief work for the destitute and suffering, as conducted by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Yearly, too, he had the paper sent to others, thus giving away several subscriptions, together with Bibles and other good books. His good works live after him."

The Best of all Testaments.

Dear Editor.—We are greatly pleased with the "Red Letter New Testament," and would be unwilling to part with it, if unable to obtain another. The limp cover, the exceptionally clear type, and the index separating so plainly the gospels and epistles, render it unusually attractive, while the words of the Saviour printed in red letters, furnish an added interest, and make the entire volume more precious to us than ever before.

Genuineness of a change of heart

PERHAPS the Apostle John was asked, as ministers often are in these days, how a man may know that he is a Christian. It is a question that has caused many people days and nights of acute anxiety. Generally it is asked by people who have no need to be distressed about it. The Pharisaical man, who is sure, and the worldly, who is indifferent, do not give it any consideration. It is the man who yearns for holiness and fellowship with Christ, and who has really given his heart and life into the Lord's keeping, who is concerned about his standing. He goes over again the experiences of his conversion, wonders whether his repentance was sincere, whether he really has saving faith, and whether regeneration has taken place. Sometimes, if he is of a gloomy temperament, he will dwell on some act of backsliding, or some unholy thoughts that have passed through his mind, and draw the distressing inference that he is still unsaved, and possibly that he has committed unconsciously the mysterious sin against the Holy Spirit and is doomed to perdition. It is therefore a most important service that John has rendered, in describing authoritatively the evidence by which any man can satisfy himself as to his position. "We know," he says, "that we have passed from death unto life." It is the emphatic statement of one who has no doubts, or distressing uncertainty. He knows, and then he proceeds to state the grounds for his belief.

It is worthy of notice that he does not find the reasons for his assurance in any past experience or in his past performances. He had been called by Christ; he had been pre-eminently the disciple whom Jesus loved; he had been in the inner circle of discipleship; he had witnessed the transfiguration and the agony in the garden; he had stood by the cross in the hour of solemn passion and had received Christ's dying commission to care for the Virgin Mary; he had done much and suffered much in his Master's cause;—but it is not because of any or of all these reasons that he feels so sure of having passed from death unto life. He knows it because of his disposition. He feels in himself a love for others which must have come from a change of heart. It is so to this day. One of the surest signs that a man is really converted, is that hatred and enmity and malignity have gone out of him, and in their place has come a sweet forgiving disposition, a kindness and loving helpfulness which show that he has received the spirit of Christ. The story is told of a noted duellist, who was known as a sure shot and a skilful fencer, that after his conversion he became so gentle that he was ridiculed by his former companions. One of them, to show his contempt for him, offered him a deadly insult. "The time was," he remarked to his assailant, "when only your blood would have wiped out this stain, but now I have the courage to forgive you." Yet that same man, who was forthwith dubbed a coward, had the courage a few days later, that none of his old friends had, to face a howling mob in defense of an innocent man whom they were intent on lynching.

It is wonderful when we come to analyze it how much of Christianity is comprised in that one word, love. If a man really loves Christ, he may safely be set free from all law, because he will have such a dread of offending him that he will shrink from doing the things condemned by law. Love, as Paul says, is the fulfilling of the law. Numbers of young men, whom no restraint would keep from transgressing, have been held to the right by the love of mother or of wife. Who has not seen a mother leaving her babe with perfect confidence in the care of a nurse? Is it because she pays the nurse a good salary, or because she knows the nurse will dread losing her employment? Neither of these would give the mother the confidence that comes from a conviction that the nurse loves the babe. Love is a mighty force, and it will yet transform the world. How long would the relations of capital and labor be a problem, if the capitalist loved his employees and showed it by his concern for their welfare? On the other hand, how different would the relations be if the employee loved his employer and always sought his interest! How long would there be wars if the nations loved one another? Love is the great solvent, the force which subdues evil and overcomes opposition. Perhaps the time will come when even poverty will disappear in the love that will lead the rich, not so much to give to the poor, as to study their condition and remove the causes which produce poverty. In the meantime, if individual Christians would practice love, they would practice Christianity. They would produce around themselves such an atmosphere of peace and kindness that all who know them would take knowledge of them that they have been with Jesus.

From the Bombay Guardian, March 23, 1901:
The marvelous benevolence organized by Dr. Louis Klopsch, of the New York CHRISTIAN HERALD, has now undertaken the support of five thousand India orphans. Already $50,000, or 1,510,500 rupees, has been received in India for the support of these little ones. This money has come in two instalments of $25,000 each, this being the amount of four months' support for the orphans adopted by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers.

(Since the above paragraph was published a third check for $25,000 has been sent.)

From the India Witness:

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Famine Relief Committee has decided to employ one agent, whose business it shall be to look after the famine orphans, visit from school to school, keep the books, and be a general medium between THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its thousands of orphans in this land. For this purpose a young man has been chosen. A sphere of great promise is open before this brother.

An Englishwoman Helps Starving China

Dear Sir:—I herewith hand you a check for five pounds, seeing from your Herald you are willing to distribute the same for the famine in China. Please acknowledge in your paper as from "An English Woman," and may the work in China be blessed and prosper as has your work in India. I congratulate you heartily upon the building of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Mission Hall in India. It is indeed a noble monument, not only to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD but to the Christian religion.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

The usual five new questions are omitted this week; in order that other letters to "The Mail-Bag," many of them long delayed, may receive attention. Hereafter, once a month, the entire page will be devoted to this class of letters.

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

Mrs. F. W. A., Miami, Fla. When and by whom was the Smithsonian Institute founded?

James Smithson, an English philanthropist and a scientist of high repute, bequeathed his property, £120,000, to his nephew, on condition that should the latter die without heirs, the estate be "left to the United States, for the purpose of founding an institution at Washington to be called the Smithsonian Institution, for the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men." He died in 1829. The nephew died 1835, without heirs, and the property, amounting to $508,318.46, came into possession of the United States. The system under which the establishment was set to work was organized by Joseph Henry, the first Secretary, 1846-77. James Smithson's gift has been swelled by subsequent additions.

Reader. Suppose an unconverted husband persists in commanding a Christian wife to stay home from meetings, should she obey him?

No; her first duty is to God, and anything that stands between her and that duty should be put aside. But she should do this without anger, and by her patient example and her earnest prayers, she may ultimately win her unbelieving husband over to the Lord's side also.

Old Subscriber, Ashland, Va. I come to you in great perplexity. If grave charges are made against the pastor of a church, he being aware of it, and neither denying nor affirming the charges, but, continuing to fill his pulpit, although many members have left the church, is it right to listen to him or not?

The proper method is to present the matter formally to the Church Session, or governing body, and have the pastor summoned to appear. He should not be condemned unheard, but afforded every opportunity for explanation. Probably the charges have never taken any more substantial form than mere gossip, which, of course, he could not answer. Ordinarily, we should say that members would do well to have the matter fully investigated, before making up their minds to leave the church.

Mrs. A. B. DeV., Annapolis, Ind. Why do the world's famous artists represent Christ and his disciples in a sitting posture at the institution of the Lord's Supper, when all sacred writers say it was customary in those days to recline at the table?

Artistic conceptions have certainly varied greatly in the treatment of this subject. Some painters have apparently discarded Oriental forms and customs, in order to produce a picture that would be less strange, yet no less impressive in the eyes of their own countrymen. A few, like Tissot, have adhered closely to the Eastern standards. Italian painters have given us the Last Supper as a classic Italian scene, and German, Dutch and English artists have each given their own national interpretation of the subject. They painted for their own time and their own people, and unless they had had the advantage of travel and study in the Orient, they could not have done otherwise. Strict accuracy was apparently held as of less importance than a noble and beautiful ideal.

H. S. R., Rabson, W. Va. If a cannon was discharged, and there was no one within hearing, would there be any sound or report?

All the conditions which produce sound would be present and active. The existence of sound is not dependent upon the presence of an auditor, any more than the existence of light is dependent upon the opening or closing of our eyes. If all New York's population were to shut their eyes at high noon, that fact would not produce darkness.

S. A. M., Union Grove, Wis. Please answer through the Mail-Bag the following questions: How many National Soldiers' Homes are there in the United States, where are they, and how many soldiers find homes in them?

There are branches of the National Home for disabled volunteer soldiers at Dayton, O.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Togus, Me.; Hampton, Va.; Leavenworth, Kan.; Santa Monica, Cal.; Marion, Ind.; Danville, Ill.; with an aggregate of about 27,000 inmates. The United States Soldiers' Home in the District of Columbia receives disabled soldiers of the regular army. Besides the National Homes, State Homes for disabled volunteer soldiers are provided by California, Colorado, Connecticut, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, N. Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Dakota, Vermont, Washington, Wisconsin and Wyoming. For further information, address War Department, Washington, D. C.

W. J. B., Toronto, Can. Was it right to misrepresent and deceive, as General Funston did, or did the end justify the means used?

War, and all its train of evils, including killing, deception, stratagem and spoliation, are all wrong and sinful, from the Christian view point. On the other hand, according to the recognized rules of modern warfare, General Funston was justified in employing strategy and deception to accomplish his purpose.

School Boy, Plainfield, N. J. 1. How many Presidents of the United States have been farmers? 2. How many were merchants? 3. From what occupation were most of our Presidents chosen?

1. Two, Washington and Harrison, went from their occupation into the White House. Lin-him, he suffered the consequences of his simplicity: if he prudently opened the bag to make examination, the cat jumped out and the trick was exposed. 2. It is supposed that this story is a sort of allegory, and that the famous "cat" was a medieval vessel known by that name which brought fortune to Whittington. 3. Hugues, builder of the Bastille and its first prisoner; Perillus, inventor, at the will of the tyrant, Phalaris, of the Brazen Bull, and the first to be roasted alive in it; Phalaris also died in it; Cowper Coles, inventor of the turret-ship, in which, with 482 out of 500 persons, he perished when it was capsized; the Bishop of Verdon, who was shut up in the iron cage which he had invented for the torture of others; Ludovico Sforza, inventor of the Iron Shroud, died in it; Robert Morton, inventor of the Maiden, a sort of guillotine, was beheaded by it; Marigni was hanged on a gibbet of his own designing; a like fate to that which overtook Haman, when he died on the gibbet meant for Mordecai. 4. The shoe was in ancient times a symbol of authority, used in marriage and other ceremonies to denote transference of government; the ing, should be shunned by anyone who desires spiritual growth and a "pure heart."

M. J. W., Carthage, So. Dak. 1. What is the meaning of the word "Pan" in Pan-American? What is the meaning of the word "Tammam"? 3. Who is or was Herr Most, and is he still living? 4. Is it right for a church to raise money by selling chances on an article, the lucky number at last drawing the quilt, and if a church does so, should Christian people buy such chances?

1. It means "all" or "universal." 2. A political society founded in 1789, and named after Tamenund, a chief of the Delaware Indian nation, who lived in the seventeenth century. 3. A noted German Anarchist writer and agitator, still living and in the United States. 4. Lotteries, raffles, auctions and all such schemes are vulgar and in execrable taste, connection with church work. In the church itself they should be excluded by Christian people as altogether inadmissible.

Subscriber, Avonmore. We have just completed a new parsonage, with between two and three hundred dollars debt on it. A number of people who never attend the prayer services, and seldom the regular Sabbath service, propose giving entertainments, to pay off this debt, a hall which is used at other times for a ball-room. The programme consists of a "cane contest," dialogues of courtships, comic songs and recitations. Their committee meetings and prayers are on the regular prayer service night. What is your opinion of these methods of raising money for church purposes?

Such methods are detrimental to spiritual growth, and, if persisted in, will seriously impair the church's usefulness. They will be found especially harmful to young members.

Mrs. B., Osage, Ia. The old-fashioned family worship—the head of the house leading in Scripture reading and prayer—becomes monotonous, and the children tire of it. Can you suggest something wherein the family can take part? It seems to me that for each one to recite a verse of Scripture, and all together repeat or sing a hymn-prayer, would be helpful.

You will find The Church at Home, by E. Vincent (Eaton & Main, publishers, New York), a great help. Do not give up the personal petition for the household; and whenever aid you may take from other sources, you should never fail to adapt the prayer to the needs of your own circle. The simple, broken utterance of the heart, rising to the lips, is better than all you can find in printed prayer-books.

C. M. B., Florence, Tex. 1. Will electricity supply steam on railways? 2. When was Christ first celebrated?

1. Very probably; it is supplanting it rapidly, although up to the present time it has not been found profitable to make long runs with electricity. 2. The first certain traces of Christmas as a festival of the Christian Church are found about 180 A. D., in the time of the Emperor Commodus. In the 4th century, he heard that a multitude of Christians were assembled in the church at Nicomedia celebrating the birthday of Jesus, upon which he ordered the doors closed and the church fired. These worshippers at the first Christmas of which we have any considerable detail, perished in the flames.

H., Two Taverns. An old Sunday School superintendent, who has the spiritual welfare of his school at heart, has unwittingly antagonized some of the consistory and church members on the subject of church accommodation for scholars, the pastor standing neutral. He regards the opposition as wholly unjust. Should he resign as superintendent and withdraw from membership, to apply his energies elsewhere, or should he continue in his field of labor?

As superintendent, he might say what he thought essential for the welfare of the school in the matter of church accommodation, and condition his continuing in office upon the requirements being met. His church membership has practically no connection at all with the matter.

Subscriber, Beacon, Ia. Avoid it altogether; it is a delusion and a snare.

Reader, Marysville, Ga. The conduct you describe is selfish and un-Christian.

M. K. M., Cameron, Va. Write to the Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

O. C. C., Belleville, Ill. 1. Nothing wrong at it. 2. Law, medicine, navigation, engineering, architecture.

R. F. G., Princes Bay, N. Y. 1. The best pay is to pay, and then avoid repeating the experience. 2. Inquire of P. O. officials.

H. F. R., Seattle, Wash., writes this note of warning: "I wish you would use your influence to abate the rush of poor people, or people with a little money, to this section. It is overcrowded now with all classes of workers unable to get work. There are from fifty to a hundred applicants for every vacant place."

custom of throwing old shoes after a bridal couple for good luck is a merry survival of grave old customs.

Nona E. D., Elkton, Md. Is it recorded anywhere in the Bible that there were thirteen at table, and one dropped dead? If so, will you please tell where?

The superstitious belief in the unluckiness of thirteen at table is doubtless based upon the fact that thirteen sat down at the "Last Supper," as related in the Gospels. There is no other instance recorded in Scripture.

A. B., San Francisco, Calif. Is it right for a Christian to joke with his fellow employees?

Innocent mirth is not a sin, nor should it be confounded with wicked levity or godless conversation. If your fellow employees are non-Christians, their mirth will probably be of the latter sort, and should be avoided. There is a good-fellowship and whole-heartedness which is pleasant and agreeable, and many very good people are noted for their wit and humor. But mere worldly merriment, vain and empty conversation, and, above all, that species of wit which is low, coarse and debas-

...THE UNIQUE SPIRITUAL EXPERIMENT OF A CHRISTIAN EMPLOYER

A DAILY MORNING SERVICE IN HIS FACTORY BRINGS THE GOSPEL TO THE WORKERS.....

THE question of how to induce laboring men, high-class mechanics, and machine workers to attend divine worship, and so receive the benefits that accrue from a practical Christian life, is one that has engaged the attention of Christian men who are large employers of labor. Mr. L. H. Creager, of the little city of Washington, Ind., employs in his factory about one hundred men in the manufacture of bent-wood products. Everything that would seem to add to the comfort and well-being of his employees, Mr. Creager has added to his establishment. The question, "Am I my brother's keeper?" has always had a peculiar significance for him, and he has evolved an answer which may serve as an object-lesson for others.

Mr. Creager himself has experienced the practical benefits of the Christian life. It became a matter of concern to him that when he employed six days in the week did not meet with him at the house of God on Sundays. He was personally acquainted with every one of them, and knew much of their affairs. The homelife of almost every one of them was a familiar subject. He knew them to be men of sense, many of them men of refinement, and all capable of receiving and appreciating the truths of the Scriptures, and he earnestly wished they might also receive the refreshing and renewing which he experienced at the Sunday worship. He knew that without that respite his own life would soon become a weary round—perfunctory and uninteresting.

He spoke to some of his men about their non-attendance at church—not exhorting, but in a brotherly way. He ascertained, to his astonishment, that many stayed away from church because of the social distinctions which prevailed in that remote little city of less than ten thousand people. Mr. Creager, at first, fancied this an unjust assumption, and hardly a sufficient excuse. He began an investigation, and soon discovered such facts as led him to believe his men were probably right, and that the churches may become too aristocratic for a man in poor clothes to attend. No special effort had been put forth by the churches to reach the laboring classes, who were the most numerous part of the population.

If this belief, whether it be justified or not, causes men to remain away from the church, men who need the divine spark in their bosoms to be occasionally blown into a flame by a breath from the imperishable Gospels, this condition must be met and dealt with as it is. Mr. Creager did not argue with his men as to the justice of their position. In a practical way he set about to supply them with the spiritual food which he believes is required for mental and physical well-being.

He consulted with the men, and plainly told them that he wanted their lives to be cheered and their hearts lightened by contact with the influence of Jesus Christ. If he could not prevail upon them to go to the churches, it was within his power to bring the teaching of the Gospels to them, and he decided to do it. He ascertained all, without an exception, would welcome an opportunity to hear practical truths from the Bible discussed by a minister in the factory building, every morning before beginning work. The plan was adopted at once. Next Monday morning saw the Rev. J. J. Gorby, a pastor of a leading church in the city, enter the factory building just before seven o'clock, and take his place at the end of a long room in which every man employed about the place was congregated. For fifteen minutes Rev. Mr. Gorby spoke upon the subject: "Things to think about." Every man present gave the closest attention. There was no exhortation or pleading; simply a plain Gospel talk. At a quarter after seven, the surprise me to hear of manufacturers all over the country following this example. It is something the employer owes to the employee, and ministers will favor it, because it affords them an opportunity to do a great amount of good."

Mr. Creager is a good judge of human nature, and his philosophy is far-seeing. The main purpose of the daily meetings he has inaugurated, is to clear the minds of the men from false premises, and set them thinking aright. When that is thoroughly accomplished, there is little doubt that the men will find some consistent church home, where they will attend divine worship on the Lord's Day.

Nor is this all that may with confidence be expected to result from these services at Mr. Creager's factory. The church people will also become awakened to their duty and shun the show and tinsel which keeps earnest, honest, industrious people away from association with them in Christian fellowship. Already the effect of this is plainly felt in Washington, and Christian belief and Christian desire are becoming the hallmarks which distinguish church members, rather than silk and broadcloth.

Mr. Creager does not pose among his men as a reformer. He does no urging, no pleading. All the time he is a man of business. He simply puts the proposition before his employees that Christianity and right living pay. Instinctively, but without any intention of practicing it, he uses diplomatic yet straightforward methods, just such methods as are effective with hard-headed, clear-thinking mechanics.

Whatever means may present themselves to advance the welfare of his fellow-workmen in his business he lays hold of. Almost every man in his employ has signed a pledge, and every one who has signed it has kept it. In every instance, the "Token Dollar" is handed to the signer of the pledge, and that particular and identical dollar is kept in a safe place and regarded as a sign of the faith their employer reposes in his men. The pledge is as follows:

"My pledge. God helping me, I hereby solemnly promise to abstain from the use of all intoxicating liquors as a beverage. I also promise to refrain from visiting all places where such intoxicants are sold. When I feel justified in breaking the provisions of this pledge, I hereby promise to return to Mr. L. H. Creager the Token Dollar received from him. Name—, Date—"

Mr. Creager is enthusiastic over the result of his efforts to induce others to forsake evil and do right. The result is manifest in the men themselves. They are brighter, happier and more cheerful, and the future for them has assumed a golden glow where before appeared a dreary gloom.

machinery commenced to whirr, and every man sought his place with a different feeling in his heart, and with better thoughts in his mind than usually found lodgment there. Every morning since then—and that was several months ago—at the blowing of the whistle, the men gather in the largest room of the establishment. The minister has never been late, and no employee has ever been late at the early service. Plainly, the seed sown in these early morning services has taken root, and is sure to come to harvest, for the early morning impressions are not disturbed or effaced by other associations throughout the day. Every man is paid at his regular wage rate for the time he puts in listening to the morning address. The minister, also, is on the factory pay-roll, and every week receives a check from Mr. Creager for his services.

The Best Weapons

TEXT, I. Samuel 21: 9:
"There is none like that; give it me"

AVID fled from his pursuers. The world runs very fast when it is chasing a good man. The country is trying to catch David, and to slay him. David goes into the house of a priest, and asks him for a sword or spear with which to defend himself. The priest, not being accustomed to use deadly weapons, tells David that he cannot supply him; but suddenly the priest thinks of an old sword that had been carefully wrapped up and laid away—the very sword that Goliath formerly used, and he takes down that sword, and while he is unwrapping the sharp, glittering, memorable blade, it flashes upon David's mind that this is the very sword that was used against himself when he was in the fight with Goliath, and David can hardly keep his hand off it until the priest has unwound it. David stretches out his hand toward that old sword, and says, "There is none like that; give it me." In other words, "I want in my own hand the sword which has been used against me, and against the cause of God." So it was given him. Well, my friends, that is not the first or the last sword once used by giant and Philistine iniquity which is to come into the possession of Jesus Christ, and of his glorious Church. I want, as well as God may help me, to show you that many a weapon which has been used against the armies of God is yet to be captured and used on our side; and I only imitate David when I stretch out my hand toward that blade of the Philistine, and cry, "There is none like that; give it me!"

Scientific Weapons

I remark, first, that this is true in regard to all scientific exploration. You know that the first discoveries in astronomy, and geology, and chronology were used to battle Christianity. Worldly philosophy came out of its laboratory, and out of its observatory, and said, "Now, we will prove, by the very structure of the earth, and by the movement of the heavenly bodies, that the Bible is a lie, and that Christianity, as we have it among men, is a positive imposition." Good men trembled. The telescope, the Leyden jars, the electric batteries, all in the hands of the Philistines. But one day, Christianity, looking about for some weapon with which to defend itself, happened to see the very old sword that these atheistic Philistines had been using against the truth, and cried out, "There is none like that; give it me!" And Copernicus, and Galileo, and Kepler, and Isaac Newton, and Herschel, and O. M. Mitchell came forth and told the world that, in their ransacking of the earth and heavens, they had found overwhelming presence of the God whom we worship; and this old Bible began to shake itself from the Koran, and Shaster, and Zendavesta with which it had been covered up, and lay on the desk of the scholar, and in the laboratory of the chemist, and in the lap of the Christian, unharmed and unanswered, while the tower of the midnight heavens struck a silvery chime in its praise.

Worldly philosophy said, "Matter is eternal. The world always was. God did not make it." Christian philosophy plunges its crowbar into rocks, and finds that the world was gradually made, and if gradually made, there must have been some point at which the process started; then who started it? And so that objection was overcome, and in the first three words of the Bible we find that Moses stated a magnificent truth when he said, "In the beginning."

Worldly philosophy said, "Your Bible is a most inaccurate book; all that story in the Old Testament, again and again told, about the army of the locusts—it is preposterous. There is nothing in the coming of the locusts like an army. An army walks, locusts fly. An army goes in order and procession, locusts without order." "Wait," said Christian philosophy; and in 1868, in the southwestern part of this country, Christian men went out to examine the march of the locusts. There are men right before me who must have noticed in that very part of the country the coming up of the locusts like an army; and it was found that all the newspapers unwittingly spoke of them as an army. Why? They seem to have a commander. They march like a host. They halt like a host. No arrow ever went in straighter flight than the locusts come—not even turning aside for the wind. If the wind rises, the locusts drop, and then rise again after it has gone down, taking the same line of march, not varying a foot. The old Bible right every time when it speaks of locusts coming like an army; worldly philosophy wrong.

Worldly philosophy said, "All that story about the light 'turned as clay to the seal,' is simply an absurdity." Old-time worldly philosophy said, "The light comes straight." Christian philosophy says, "Wait a little while," and it goes on and makes discoveries, and finds that the atmosphere curves and bends the rays of light around the earth, literally "as the clay to the seal." The Bible right again; worldly philosophy wrong again. "Ah," says worldly philosophy, "all that allusion in Job about the foundations of the earth is simply an absurdity. 'Where wast thou,' says God, 'when I set the foundations of the earth?' The earth has no foundation." Christian philosophy comes, and finds that the word as translated "foundations" may be better translated "sockets." So now see how it will read if it is translated right: "Where wast thou when I set the sockets of the earth?" Where is the socket? It is the hollow of God's hand—a socket large enough for any world to turn in.

Travel and Exploration

Again, I remark that the traveling disposition of the world, which was adverse to morals and religion, is to be brought on our side. The man that went down to Jericho and fell amidst thieves, was a type of a great many travelers. There is many a man who is very honest at home, who, when he is abroad, has his honor filched, and his good habits stolen. There are but very few men who can stand the stress of an expedition. Six weeks at a watering-place has ruined many a man. In the olden times God forbade the traveling of men for the purposes of trade, because of the corrupting influences attending it. A good many men now cannot stand the transition from one place to another. Some men who seem to be very consistent here, in the way of keeping the Sabbath, when they get into Spain, on the Lord's Day always go out to see the bull fights. Plato said that no city ought to be built nearer to the sea than ten miles, lest it be tempted to commerce. But this traveling disposition of the world, which was adverse to that which is good, is to be brought on our side. These mail trains, why, they take our Bibles; these steamships, they transport our missionaries; these sailors, rushing from city to city all around the world, are to be converted into Christian heralds, and go out and preach Christ among the heathen nations. The Gospels are infinitely multiplied in beauty and power since Robinson, and Thompson, and Burckhardt have come back and talked to us about Siloam, and Capernaum, and Jerusalem, pointing out to us the lilies about which Jesus preached, the beach upon which Paul was shipwrecked, the fords at which Jordan was passed, the Red Sea bank on which were tossed the carcasses of the drowned Egyptians. A man said, "I went to the Holy Land an infidel; I came back a Christian. I could not help it."

I am not shocked, as some have been, at the building of railroads in the Holy Land. I wish that all the world might go and see Golgotha and Bethlehem. How many who could not afford muleteers, now easily buy tickets from Constantinople to Joppa. Then let Christians travel! God speed the rail trains, and guide the steamships this night panting across the deep, in the phosphorescent wake—of the shining feet of him who from wave-cliff to wave-cliff trod bestormed Tiberius. The Japanese come across the water and see our civilization, and examine our Christianity, and go back and tell the story, and keep that empire rocking till Jesus shall reign

Where'er the sun
Does his successive journeys run.

So it has also been with the learning and eloquence of the world. People say: "Religion is very good for aged women, it is very good for children, but not for men." But we have in the roll of Christ's host Mozart and Handel in music; Canova and Angelo in sculpture; Raphael and Reynolds in painting; Harvey and Boerhaave in medicine; Cowper and Scott in poetry; Grotius and Burke in statesmanship; Boyle and Leibnitz in philosophy. The most are all aglow with holy Scriptural allusions. Through senatorial speech and through essayist's discourse, Sinai thunders, and Calvary speaks, and Siloam sparkles.

Samuel L. Southard was mighty in the court-room and in the Senate Chamber; but he reserved his strongest eloquence for that day when he stood before the literary societies at Princeton commencement and pleaded for the grandeur of our Bible. Daniel Webster won not his chief garlands while responding to Hayne, nor when he opened the batteries of his eloquence on Bunker Hill, that rocking Sinai of the American Revolution; but on that day when, in the famous Girard will case, he showed his affection for the Christian religion, and eulogized the Bible. The eloquence and the learning that have been on the other side come over to our side. Captured for God! "There is none like that; give it me!"

So, also, has it been with the picture-making of the world. Much of the art of the world has been in the possession of the vicious. What to unclean Henry VIII. a beautiful picture of the Madonna? What to Lord Jeffries, the unjust judge, the picture of the "Judgment?" What to Nero, the unwashed, a picture of the baptism in the Jordan? The art of the world on the wrong side. But that is being changed now. Christian artist goes over to Rome, looks at the pictures, and brings back to his American studio much of the power of these old masters. The Christian minister goes over to Venice, looks at the "Crucifixion of Christ," and comes back to the American pulpit to talk as never before of the sufferings of the Saviour. The pious tourist goes to Rome and looks at Raphael's picture of the "Last Judgment." The tears start, and he goes back to his room in the hotel, and prays God for preparation for that day when Shriving like a parched scroll,

The flaming heavens together roll.

Our Sunday School newspapers and walls are adorned with pictures of Joseph in the court, Daniel in the den, Shadrach in the fire, Paul in the shipwreck, Christ on the cross. Oh, that we might, in our families, think more of the power of

Christian Pictures

A sketch of Samuel kneeling in prayer will mean more to your children than twenty sermons on devotion. The patient face of Christ by the hand of the artist will mean more to your child than fifty sermons on forgiveness. The art of the world is to be taken for Christ. What has become of Thorwaldsen's chisel and Girlandajo's crayon? Captured for the truth. "There is none like that; give it me."

So, I remark, it is with business acumen and craft. When Christ was upon earth, the people that followed him, for the most part, had no social position. There was but one man naturally brilliant in all the apple-ship. How many of the merchants in Asia Minor befriended Jesus? I think of only one. Lydia, how many of the castles on the beach at Galilee entertained Christ? Not one. When Peter came to Joppa he stopped with one Simon, a tanner. What power had Christ's name on the Roman Exchange, or in the bazaars of Corinth? None. The prominent men of the day did not want to risk their reputation for sanity by pretending to be one of his followers. Now that all changed. Among the mightiest men in our great day to-day are the Christian merchants and the Christian bankers; and if to-morrow, at the Board of Trade, any man should get up and malign the name of Jesus, he would be quickly silenced or put out. In the front rank of all our Christian workers to-day are the Christian merchants; and the enterprises of the world are coming on the right side. One of the finest ever built, was built for the express purpose of publishing infidel tracts and books. Now it does nothing but print Holy Bibles. I believe that the time will come when, in commercial circles, the voice of Christ will be the mightiest of all voices, and the ships of Tarshish will bring presents, and the Queen of Sheba her myrrh, and the wise men of the East their myrrh and frankincense. I look off upon the business men of this land, and rejoice at the prospect that their tact, and ingenuity, and talent are being brought into the service of Christ. It is one of the mightiest of weapons. "There is none like that; give it me!"

Now, if what I have said be true, away with all unheartedness! If science is to be on the right side, and the traveling disposition of the world on the right side, and the learning of the world on the right side, and the picture-making on the right side, and the business acumen and tact of the world on the right side—then, O Lord, is the kingdom! Oh, fall into line, all ye people! It is a grand thing to be in such an army, and to be such a commander, and on the way to such a victory. If what I have said is true, then Christ is going to triumph for himself out of this world every thing that is worth any thing, and there will be nothing but the cum left. We have been rebels, but a proclamation of amnesty goes forth now from the throne of God, saying, "Whosoever will, let him come." However long you may have wandered, however great your crime may have been, "whosoever will, let him come." O that this hour I could marshal all the world on the side of Christ! He is the best friend a man ever had. He is so kind—he so loving, so sympathetic. I cannot see how you can stay away from him. Come now, and accept his mercy. Behold him as he stretches out the arms of his salvation, saying, "Look unto me, all ye ends of the earth, and be ye saved; for I am God." Make final choice now. You will either be willows planted by the water-courses or the chaff which the wind driveth away.

...HE ASKS AMERICAN AID FOR THE SHANSI FAMINE SUFFERERS....

LI HUNG CHANG APPEALS TO US

... 11,000,000 STARVING — HUMAN FLESH EATEN FOR FOOD ...

FROM his seat of government in Peking, Li Hung Chang, the foremost statesman in China, and the real head of affairs in that unfortunate nation, has cabled through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a message to the American people, which cannot fail to awaken universal sympathy. It reveals the sad condition of affairs in the famine-stricken provinces, and appeals, in the most urgent manner, for American aid in behalf of the starving millions whom China, devastated and impoverished by war, is herself powerless to help. This is Earl Li's message:

Government, Peking, April 25.
Editor, Christian Herald, New York.
Very serious famine spreads over whole Province Shansi. Over eleven million population affected. Urgent relief necessary. Conditions warrant immediate appeal.
(Signed) Li Hung Chang (Seal)

This appeal, which is stamped with the official seal of China, is conclusive evidence of the fact that the Imperial Government, as well as the provincial authorities, have failed to arrest the progress of the famine. Now, as a last resort, they have invoked the aid of their only friend among the foreign nations—Christian America. It is a confession of helplessness that could only come from a nation utterly humbled and forced to the wall by its misfortunes.

Further light is shed upon the condition of the famine stricken, in letters and telegrams received by Chinese officials in this country, as well as in correspondence from missionaries and other American residents in China. Wu Ting Fang, the Chinese minister in Washington, has unqualifiedly endorsed the appeal of Earl Li, and has pledged his active co-operation in any movement looking to relief work. In a recent communication to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, he explained that the famine had been caused primarily by drought and failure of crops, and subsequently by the Boxer uprising and the war. He said:

"The Provinces of Shensi and Shansi lie in the northern part of the empire and together occupy an area of more than 60,000 square miles. The population of Shensi is 10,000,000, and that of Shansi 10,000,000. Shensi was the ancient capital province of China. These provinces are thousands of miles inland. The people are almost altogether farmers. In Shansi the famine is fully as appalling as at Shensi. I have read of the wonderful generosity of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to India during the famine in that country, and while I sincerely trust that the one in China may never be so great as that one; yet I feel very sure that they could do a little for those who are now suffering so terribly, it would be appreciated far more than I can express. It would surely go a long way toward helping the Chinese to realize that foreigners are not their enemies."

Mr. Chow Tszchi, the Chinese Consul in New York, has already received from his fellow-countrymen here some gifts to be sent to the famine sufferers, but the Chinese in New York are exceedingly poor as a class.

EARL LI HUNG CHANG

The Consul says: "The Chinese here, the Chinese at home, our poor people, our nobles, our Emperor, will appreciate any help the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD may send to our starving brothers in Shansi."

A touching appeal has been circulated in China by the Shansi officials. The translation is furnished by Consul Tszchi:

"To Our Own People and Foreigners:—This time the famine is more serious than ever, because in the north are the Allied troops, and in the south we have several places in rebellion. China is very poor now, and the people are in such a straitened position that no very big assistance can be expected from them. Since more than several months now, the famine has been beginning in places in this province. In some villages they are eating human flesh."

"All our brothers in the world should be very sorry for us, and should know how unfortunate we are. We wish all our people to share some of your money which you spend amusing yourselves, and for traveling, and for dressing and for all kinds of comforts, to rescue these poor people. It is much better to save the starving and dying men, women and children here, than to build a pagoda or temple, or even a church—because from ten to twelve million people are suffering to death."

"Signed by the Governor of Shansi, and the Relief Society of Shansi, composed of officers, gentlemen and merchants of Shansi."

The following is a translation of a letter received by Consul Tszchi from a personal friend in Sian-fu:

"... It is a great famine. We have never heard of anything so terrible. The coming of rice from the southern and eastern provinces is expected hour by hour, minute by minute. As you know, we have no railway facilities. The rivers and canals are mostly dry during the winter. The Empress-Dowager and Emperor were good enough to give 100,000 taels to our Relief Society, and from the Viceroy down to the workman, every one is contributing, but we need far more than we get."

"A man just came from a village outside of this city, and described the condition of the starving people, which made me feel as though I was among them. Thirty dollars was the price of a bag of rice. The poor have no rice; they killed everything in sight, if eatable, and cooked even leather boxes or bags, and stewed tree-bark and grass. Some of them were so famished that they were even eating earth."

"On the first day, he saw a number of poor people selling their children for rice. On the second, he saw the same party lying starving on the road, and on the third day about half of them were dead, and their miserable bodies were lying at the mercy of hungry dogs and wolves."

HOW A POOR BOY BECAME A GREAT SOUL-WINNER

William Stuart Witham, Once a Barefoot Lad, now President of Thirty Banks, and a Famous Christian Worker

WHEN a man whose life is full of large business interests and responsibilities gives abundantly of his time and energy to personal philanthropic and religious work, he not only accomplishes results as an individual but he sets the mark of a shining example to others.

One of the most conspicuous men in the South to-day is William Stuart Witham, of Atlanta, Ga. From the time he was a barefooted boy, cutting wood at twenty-five cents a load down in Georgia, to the present, when he is president of thirty banks and ten cotton mills, and actively engaged with thirty-eight boards of directors, Mr. Witham's career has been one of almost dramatic interest in its steady progress and swift advance. His life has been a busy earnest one in other ways than that of mere accumulation of wealth. At present he spends much of his time and efforts in church work. As a Sunday School worker he has a wide reputation in his section. His labors in this direction being characterized by the same zeal and energy that have marked his career as a business man; and he has thus built up what is at once the largest and most unique class of its kind in the entire South. It was in the summer of 1895 that he was invited to take charge of the Bible Class of the First Methodist Church Sunday School, and a little group gathered about him in the rather small ante-room of the church to hear the lesson for the day expounded. Perhaps there was a score or more of men and women. His method of treatment was original; it was considered eccentric by some; but by all it was regarded as forceful, and he so impressed the few that next Sunday they were back again, each bringing one or more friends. In this way his class increased from thirty in number to one hundred and more, when it was necessary to either enlarge this room or to reorganize in the auditorium above. Thus the "Busy People's Bible Class" came into existence and grew, until it is the most notable of its kind in the Southern States. Its membership of over five hundred comprises men and women stooped with age, the middle-aged, the young people of the church and the little children, all equally interested in the teacher's words and his happy illustrations on the black-board. Mr. Witham in his class work is ably assisted by his wife, who is leader of the great choir which this Bible Class forms. Another feature of this Sunday School work is the committee appointed each week to visit the sick and poor, and to make weekly reports regarding them. In this way Mr. Witham keeps in touch with all who have ever had their names enrolled for membership, and his class becomes an effective agency in social and philanthropic work.

His Sabbath School work is not bounded by the limit of this class. He is President of Georgia State Sunday School Association, and to his enthusiastic energy business-like methods are largely due growth of the association. He has personally paid for the education of between seventy-five and one hundred poor boys and girls. The work which has the widest hold upon his heart is the Decatur Street Mission, which is located in the worst quarter of Atlanta. In a big, bare room on the ground floor of a rickety tenement, men and women used to gather weekly to drink, gamble and revel. There was the flick of the cards and dice, and the babel of profane voices in that place. Into all of this turmoil of sin and dirt Mr. Witham and his wife went to preach the Gospel. The work here has been blessed indeed, and very many souls have been dragged back as it were from the bottomless pit of sin. Here, in this place, where sin did once abound, the way of Salvation is made plain to those who were without hope. The families of this locality go to the Mission, which is open day and night, for shelter or food, or aid in finding work. Mr. Witham is their adviser, their friend in need in all things. In connection with the Mission he has established a restaurant, where the hungry are given a meal in exchange for work done in the Mission.

Just beyond the Mission, in the factory districts, this busy man and his wife are at the head of a "Free Kindergarten," established in 1900; and through their influence many of the social women of Atlanta have become deeply interested, giving not only their money but their time towards the maintenance of this institution. Two days of every week there are dinners served to the children by the willing hands of the young society girls, and a certain number of them, from the different committees, visit regularly the sick and distressed in the district.

It is these young women who have established the committee through whose agency the orphan children are taken to the parks on happy outings. Then there is the sewing committee, which meets on special days, where busy needles fly, fashioning garments for the orphan children of the factory district. Besides these kindred activities, the kindergarten includes a day nursery, a library, and bath-rooms for the children.

"How sad this is! Nearly every city, town or village he passed through was deserted, or the houses were occupied by the dead. It is said that in one town the people have opened a human flesh market; but this is hardly credible.

"Now we foresee that in the spring (no snow no rain so far) there will be more trouble for the farm work, and that after such starvation an epidemic may be expected to follow.

"Another friend told me of a family of nine. The mother could not bear to hear the cry of the famished children, so she hung herself. The father became insane and killed all seven children, and finally committed suicide. They were of good family and did not wish to beg for food, nor to sell the children."

These are only isolated cases, but they go to show the intense character of the suffering in Shansi at the present time, and the deplorable plight of the people of that province.

Emperor Kwang Su is deeply saddened by the sufferings of his people, and has declared that he will greatly honor those who come to their assistance. In a recent issue of a leading Chinese journal, The Shunpao, referring to the Shansi famine, it is stated that "for over a thousand miles nothing has been grown"—a most significant fact, when China's dense population is remembered. The native local journals are filled with details of the famine. Beggars abound everywhere; men and women fall in the fields, and are devoured by wild beasts; families sell their children for bread. The two illustrations on preceding page are reproduced from prints in the native newspapers, which were received from China by Consul Tszchi. Still another, almost too harrowing to contemplate, shows groups of people in the fields and by the roadside, huddled up and awaiting the slow death of starvation.

It is surely a terrible picture this, of a people whom we have considered our enemies, sinking helplessly under the deadly grasp of famine, with no succor in sight. Shall Christian America heap "coals of fire" upon the heads of the Chinese, by reaching out hands of rescue? Or, because these poor Chinese farmers, and their wives and children are of the same race as the Boxers, and the men who attacked our missions, are we justified in permitting them to perish?

Let us help China in her extremity. She has appealed to us from her very throne, in the name of our common humanity. Let it be ours to demonstrate that Christianity knows no barriers, when it hears the cry of human suffering. We invite all who desire to have a share in this Christ-like work to join us in an effort to save the lives and win the hearts of the stricken peasants of Shansi, by sending their offerings to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for transmission to our missionary workers, who will act as their relieving agents in the field. Every contribution will be acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

A CATHOLIC CHURCH, NEAR MANILA, GIVEN TO THE PROTESTANTS

PROTESTANT COLPORTEURS SELLING BIBLES IN THE PROVINCES, P. I.

FIRST REVIVAL IN THE PHILIPPINES

FROM A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT IN MANILA

THERE has been unusual interest manifested lately in religious matters. Rev. Mr. Deane, connected with the Y. M. C. A., held a series of meetings which were well attended, and apparently have been productive of much good. The services may appropriately be termed the first revival meeting ever held in the Philippine Islands.

It is peculiarly interesting to observe the boys in khaki in attendance on the meetings, or on the occasion of the delivery of a lecture. A more appreciative audience seldom greets a speaker. Those who gather on such occasions are the pick of the enlisted men of that portion of the army stationed in Manila, and a more intelligent body could hardly be gathered even if the officers and ladies of the army were the audience.

Mr. Deane spoke five evenings in one week, and was announced for three sermons the next week to young men. His congregation was mostly soldiers, though the Protestant communions in the city suspended their usual meetings and gave their countenance to the Y. M. C. A. assemblages. A series of religious meetings will also be held at the Soldiers' Institute under the auspices of the Methodist Church.

Where Protestant Christianity is in active operation among Americans, the Catholics are not idle. An institution has been organized called the "Centro Catolico de Filipinas," the purpose of which seems to be to maintain the Romish faith in the Philippines.

The religious situation at the present time is peculiar. The Filipinos are, with very small exception, Catholic universally, but the Catholic family is not in harmony. The Spanish Catholics hold the Filipino Catholics in contempt; and the Filipino Catholics hate the Spanish Catholics, or, to get at the heart of the whole matter, the Spaniards despise the natives, and the natives hate the Spaniards. The basis of the political, social, and religious situation in the Philippines is racial antagonism. The immediate cause of the formation of the "Centro Catolico" was the organization of a political party termed the Federal party, the professed object of which was to assist us in suppressing the insurrection and the pacification of the islands.

What makes the hostility more intense is the secession of Senor Buencamino from the Catholic Church. Buencamino is an ex-official of the Aguinaldo government, a prominent man in the Federal Party. The profession of Protestantism by this prominent member of the Federals led to the formation of a third organization, known as the Conservative Party, made up of solid, reliable men, who have never engaged in rebellion against Spain or the United States.

The Conservatives appear to occupy a midway position between the Catholic and Federal Parties, the former being established essentially in the interest of the religious corporations under the auspices of the Archbishop, its chief or exclusive object being the maintenance of the ancient faith in these islands.

FROM ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT

ONE of the first things that struck me, on arriving here from India, was the contrast between poor India and these luxuriant isles. It is a marvelous contrast. The poorest Filipino seems rich in comparison. The contrast, too, between the slow reception of the Bible by the people of India, and the eager throngs here, who will spend the last copers to buy a Gospel in their own tongue, is remarkable.

I wish our people at home in America could see the wonders already wrought by "Old Glory" in these islands, simply from the rapid distribution of the Bible.

Go with the missionary here to an open-air service in city or country. To these people, it is a marvelous thing; for never before have they dreamed of a religious service except in a church, with candles and images. Go to the meetings in cock-pits, where hundreds have gathered to see the fowls fight, you now are asked to read God's Word, and to sing Moody and Sankey hymns, to hungry, eager crowds.

Theatres are now filled with throngs to hear the truth, both by week day and on Sabbath. The Federal Party, that is working such wonders, are making their countrymen lay down arms and swear allegiance to the United States. From these enlightened Filipinos has sprung a religious party, whose leaders say to our missionaries: "Explain this Bible to us. Tell us what Protestantism means. We have not been allowed, ever before, to handle or read God's Word. Give it to us."

Was there ever such an opportunity to proclaim God's Word? It is the grandest opportunity a nation ever had to bring 10,000,000 souls into the light. God is using us. We should give at the rate of 50,000 portions of the Bible a year to these people. Our help is needed to publish a Gospel that will change this oppressed, crushed land into a garden.

In the rainy months, when touring into the provinces is impossible (from June to November), we want to invite these young Christians to Manila to attend a Bible Institute. They are to be self-supporting Bible men and women, preaching to the little, earnest gatherings in their own houses. Here is an opportunity for Christian America to do a great work in the Philippines.

Manila, P. I.

ALICE BYRAM CONDUCT, M.D.

HE LED HUNDREDS INTO THE LIGHT

WITHIN the last three years, an increasing emphasis has been placed upon the religious work department of the Young Men's Christian Association. Local and State plans for the better systemizing of Association religious effort have been taken up by the International Committee. Conferences with leaders and experts resulted in the best methods and plans being discussed and set forth in pamphlet form. Thus the basis of a workable literature, rich in suggestion, was laid. Mr. Fred B. Smith was appointed in 1899 as a special secretary for religious work. He entered Association work in 1887. He had already had eight years' experience as Association General Secretary and two years as an evangelist when the war with Spain began, which was followed by the organization of the Y. M. C. A. Army and Navy Department. At Camp Thomas, Chickamauga, Ga., every day for nine weeks, Mr. Smith preached to the soldiers. Five days a week he visited the camp hospitals. After Major Whittle left Chickamauga, Mr. Smith took charge of the evangelistic campaign among the 65,000 men in camp. After the soldiers had been sent from Camp Thomas, Mr. Smith worked in a half-dozen of the Southern camps, and then went to Cuba, where he conducted an evangelistic campaign with the army of occupation, working specially at Havana, Matanzas, and Que Madas. He returned in time to be present at the last international convention of the Associations, at Grand Rapids, June, 1899.

In the fall of 1899, Mr. Smith was asked to enter the service of the International Committee for the purpose of carrying on work in the city Associations throughout the United States and Canada. Nearly two years have passed since he began this work. His duties have included Association centres in more than twenty States and provinces, from Nova Scotia to Oregon. But he is at his best in evangelistic campaigns. His meetings in the Associations are always for men only, and to his appeal there seems to be always a response in the yielding of lives to the mastership of Jesus Christ. A total of more than thirty-one thousand men attended these services during 1900, and fourteen hundred and ten young men professed to accept Christ as their Saviour and declared their purpose to live Christian lives. These evangelistic services were held among college students, city and town men, railroad men, soldiers, sailors, miners and prisoners, the audiences varying in number from thirty to three thousand men. A notable feature of these evangelistic campaigns has been the permanent stimulus given to the religious work of the Associations visited.

Many Associations have asked for such work as Mr. Smith is doing. The International Committee of the Associations desires to secure the financial support necessary to make possible the continuance of this valuable service. It is greatly hoped that a constituency will be found of men and women who will give it their financial and spiritual support. Readers who desire further information should address F. B. Schenck, treasurer, 3 W. Twenty-ninth street, New York.

Earl Li's Appeal

ON another page of this issue will be found a cable message to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from Li Hung Chang, the real ruler of China, and who since the abdication of the Empress-Dowager, has been at the head of the Board of National Administration in Peking. Earl Li appeals to Americans to come to the help of the peasants of Shansi province, eleven millions of whom he declares to be dying of starvation. No sadder message has ever been flashed over the cable than this, which tells of a once great nation, now so wrecked that it cannot find bread enough to save the lives of its own children.

Altogether, the story is a frightful picture of the havoc and desolation wrought by those three dire agents of disaster—drought, war and famine. But we shall not harrow the feelings of our readers by printing in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD all the ghastly details of this visitation, which threatens to engulf millions: nor shall we present in these pages the startlingly realistic pictures of suffering which are only too sure to be sent to us from the centres of distress, by missionary and other correspondents. We shall give, from week to week, an intelligent statement of the famine's progress, and of the efforts that may be made for its alleviation.

What shall be the answer of Christian America to Earl Li's appeal? Is it not a Providential opportunity afforded us to prove to China that we are her friend, though all the world else may be her spoilers? Let each of us take the matter to heart, and inquire prayerfully whether out of the darkness of China's calamity, like that of India, there may not yet come a rich blessing.

The work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance forever—Isa. 32: 17.

Cheer Up

ALMOST every nature, however sprightly, sometimes will drop into a minor key, or a subdued mood, that in common parlance is recognized as the "blues." There may be no adverse causes at work, but somehow the bells of the soul stop ringing, and you feel like sitting quiet and striking off fifty per cent. from all your worldly and spiritual prospects. The immediate cause may be a northeast wind, or a balky liver, or an enlarged spleen, or pickled oysters at twelve o'clock the night before. In such depressed state, no one can afford to sit for an hour. First of all, let him get up and go out of doors. Fresh air, and the faces of cheerful men, and pleasant women, and frolicsome children, will in fifteen minutes kill moping. The first moment your friend strikes the keyboard of your soul, it will ring music. A hen might as well try on populous Broadway to hatch out a feathery group, as for a man to successfully brood over his ills in lively society. Do not go for relief among those who feel as badly as you do. Let not toothache, and rheumatism, and hypochondria go to see toothache, rheumatism and hypochondria. On one block in a city live a doctor, an undertaker and a clergyman. That is not the row for a nervous man to walk in, lest he should need all three. Throw back the shutters of your soul and let the sunlight of genial faces shine in.

There are times when everything seems to go wrong. From seven o'clock A. M. till ten P. M. affairs are in a twist. You rise in the morning, and the room is cold, and a button is off, and the beefsteak is tough, and the furnace smokes, and the pipes burst, and you start down the street, nettled from head to foot. All day long things are adverse. Insinuations, petty losses, meanness on the part of customers. The ink-bottle upsets, and spoils the carpet. Some one gives a wrong turn to the damper, and the gas escapes. An agent comes in, determined to insure your life, when it is already insured for more than it is worth, and you are afraid some one will knock you on the head to get the price of your policy; but he sticks to you, showing you pictures of old Time with the hour-glass, and Death's scythe, and a skeleton, and making it quite certain that you will die before your time unless you take out papers in his Company. Besides this, you have a cold in your head, and a grain of dirt in your eye, and you are a walking uneasiness. The day is out of joint, and no surgeon can set it. The probability is that if you would look at the weather-vane you would find that the wind is northeast, and you might remember that you have lost much sleep lately. It might happen to be that you are out of joint instead of the day. Be careful and not write many letters while you are in that irritated mood. You will pen something that you will be sorry for afterwards. Let us remember that these spiked nettles of life are part of our discipline. Life would get nauseating if it were all honey. That table would be poorly set that had on it nothing but treacle. We need a little vinegar, mustard, pepper and horseradish, that brings tears even when we do not feel pathetic. If this world were all smoothness we would never be ready for emigration to a higher and better. Blustering March and weeping April prepare us for shining May. This world is a poor hitching-post. Instead of tying fast on the cold mountains, we had better whip up and hasten on toward the warm inn, where our good friends are looking out of the window, watching to see us come up.

Woe unto them that are wise in their own eyes, and prudent in their own sight!—Isaiah 5: 21.

Praise for the Missionaries

NO man, however pure his motives, or however consecrated his life, can hope to escape altogether from misrepresentation and disparagement. One would have thought that if there were any exception to this rule, it would have been the Missionary. He leaves his home and native land, gives up the society of people who love him, foregoes the comforts of civilization, and renounces his prospects of fame and fortune to go to a heathen land to preach Christ. There is no prospect before him of gain, for his stipend is of the smallest; he must work hard amid opposition and uncongenial surroundings, and he is often in peril of his life from unhealthy climate, or, as in China, from political outbreaks. The only reward he can ever have, is the consciousness of having spent his life in the service of Christ, and in the hope of his Master's approval. However the heathen among whom he labors may regard him, it would seem certain that his fellow-Christians at home, who know his motives and can appreciate his self-sacrifice, would honor him. Of late, however, there has been in some quarters a disposition to asperse him and undervalue his services. It is therefore especially gratifying that from an unexpected source there comes a spontaneous and disinterested tribute to his character and work.

Speaking recently at a public meeting in India, Sir Harman Singh, a prince of one of the royal families of India, said:

I consider that among the manifold blessings of British rule in India, Christian Missions occupy the most prominent place. Friends and foes, Christians and non-Christians, have from time to time borne testimony to the noble work done by Missionaries in India. They have been the pioneers of education and culture and have been the champions of free thought and enlightened action. They have afforded sympathy to the people in their joy and sorrow, and have stood between them and their rulers in times of trouble and need. The people in all parts of the country keenly appreciate the self-sacrificing zeal with which they pursue the divine work they have undertaken: and who has not been touched by the fact that the Missionaries have done for the people of India during the last famine, i. e., even to the laying down of their lives? Suffice it then to say that the people of India owe a debt of gratitude to Missions and Missionaries.

Such a testimony, coming from a man who has abundant opportunities for knowing the facts, and who cannot be suspected of racial or religious partiality for the foreigner, speaks volumes. It proves how devoted a beneficent must have been the lives of the Missionaries to have elicited praise so unqualified.

Another evidence of the devotion of these Christian men and women is fully described in last week's issue of this journal. It is in the conduct of the Missionaries who were driven from their stations by the recent outbreak in China. These servants of Christ, many of whom had lost all their possessions and narrowly escaped with their lives, instead of sitting down to deplore their losses and brood over their troubles, immediately availed themselves of the opportunity for new service. They preached the Gospel to the officers and crews of the warships in the harbor of their refuge, and with such results that the disasters which drove them thither have been turned into a blessing for hundreds of souls. Men and women who are thus "instant in season and out of season," are the salt of the earth.

More Lay-Workers

AFTER Calvin has twisted us one way and Arminius has twisted us another, and we get our head full of the old Andover and New Haven theological fights about the difference between Anti-Nicene Trinitarianism and Post-Nicene Trinitarianism, it is a luxury to meet some evangelist who can tell us in our common mother tongue of him who came to seek and to save that which was lost.

Let our learned institutions push theological education to its highest excellency, preparing men for spheres which none but the cultured and scholarly are fit for, and somehow let us beat the drum and gather a battalion of lay-workers. We have enough wise men to tell us about fishes, about birds, about rocks, about stars—enough Leyden jars, enough telescopes, enough electric batteries; but we have not more than one man where we ought to have a hundred to tell the story of Christ and the soul.

MR. CARNEGIE AND THE WORKINGMEN

SEE ILLUSTRATION ON FIRST PAGE

IT must gratify Mr. Carnegie to know how deeply interested the workmen of New York take in his munificent gift for the founding of libraries in the city. It was primarily on their account that the project was conceived. They are aware of that fact, and appreciate the motive and the liberality which has made the realization of the project possible. In many a factory, then, as they eat their midday meal, discuss the gift and the benefits it is likely to bring to them. A few are to be found here and there, who wish that if Mr. Carnegie had money he desired to give to the workingmen, he would have given it directly. Every one has some special desires that a few extra dollars would have helped him to gratify. Perhaps debts contracted in sickness might have been paid; or it might have been possible to buy better clothing for the wife and children; or possibly in some cases it might have paid for beer and tobacco. But good sense generally prevails, and it is seen that Mr. Carnegie has acted wisely in providing the means by which a man may become better informed, and may learn from science and history more of the world he lives in than he otherwise could. Every self-observant man is aware that the tendency of his work and unoccupied leisure is to make him sordid and discontented, and if he wishes to avoid that danger, he seeks wholesome and elevating books that will develop his mental powers. Mr. Carnegie has taken a wise course in enlarging such opportunities, and we may hope that the result will be not only an increase of knowledge, but in leading many to seek that blessing which the wise king said was the beginning of wisdom.

The Emperor to Young Men

WORDS of weighty import were addressed by Emperor William of Germany to the students in the University of Bonn, on April 24. The Crown Prince Frederick William, now a young man of nineteen years, had just matriculated, and a grand kommers was given in his honor, at which his father, the Emperor, delivered the chief address. After speaking of the joy that filled his heart at being once more on the scene of his early studies, His Majesty dwelt on the inspiration that must come to every intelligent German from the associations of the famous university. Passing on to the spirit which it should induce, he said: "The future awaits you, and will need your strength, not to squander in utopian dreams or one-sided party tendencies, but to foster the stability of national thought and ideals which the German race, by God's grace, has been permitted to bring forth from Boniface and Walter von der Vogelweide to Goethe and Schiller. They have become a light and blessing to all mankind. We need such men now more than ever; may you all strive to become such men. But how shall that be possible? Who shall help you? Only One; he whose name we all bear. Who has borne our sins and washed them away. Who lived for our example and worked as we should work. May our Lord and Saviour plant in you moral earnestness, that your impulses may ever be true and your aims ever sublime. Then you will be armed against all temptations, and, above all, against envy and envy. Then you can sing and say, 'Wir Deutschen fürchten Gott sonst nichts auf dieser Welt' (we Germans fear God, but nothing else in the world.) Then we shall endure in the world, strong, spreading civilization, and I shall close my eyes in peace if I see such a generation growing up and rallied around its son." It will be well for Germany and for the world if the Crown Prince and the young men who listened to the imperial speech, heed the words of their sovereign, and respond to the prayer offered by the Hebrew prophet for royalty in his day.

Give the king thy judgments, O God, and thy righteousness unto the king's son (Ps. 72: 1).

The Law of Allegiance

At a recent meeting of the Social Science Association at Washington, D. C. Mr. O. S. Straus made an earnest appeal for amendment of the law of naturalization. He quoted the principle laid down by Lewis Cass, who was Secretary of State in 1850, that "the moment a foreigner becomes naturalized, his allegiance to this native Government becomes severed forever. He experiences a new political birth. A broad and impassable line separates himself from his native country." That this radical ground on the subject of naturalization had led to the abuses was, said Mr. Straus, conceded. "No doubt many persons had become naturalized American citizens with a view to returning to the country of their birth and fomenting discord, while claiming the protection of the land of their adoption." Mr. Straus concluded from these abuses, that naturalization effected in the United States without any intent to permanently reside therein, but with a view to reside in another country, especially when such other country was the country of origin, should be treated by this country as fraudulent, and as imposing no obligation to protect such persons. Happily this principle does not apply to those who have abjured their allegiance to the prince of this world. They are encouraged to go into the country of origin, that they may persuade others to come and enlist under the banner of the Prince of Peace. We have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit (John 15: 16).

Training the Soldiers' Eyes

A distinguished military authority calls attention to the necessity of paying special attention to the eyesight of the new recruits. He says: "After some experience in attempting to train the soldier in reconnaissance, the conclusion must have been forced on many officers that the eyes and ears of the class from which our recruits are drawn do not convey the same impression to their brains as they do to those of their officers. After questioning men as to what they can see I have thought that their eyes, through generations of long, unintelligent use, have degenerated and cannot localize things before them. The work of trying to train eyesight that has become dulled from generations of neglect is slow and difficult, and improvement comes slowly. Something in this direction can be done whenever a squadron leader has his men out. Question them as to the names of any prominent features or landmarks in the surrounding country; ask the names of rivers, railways and roads. If a village or town has been passed through, the names over any of the stores or houses, or on the road the number of carts or the description of people and cattle met with. It will often be found that the men cannot answer such questions, and will make the excuse, 'I did not notice.' The excuse is generally perfectly true, but the failure to notice is a serious fault, which may involve a regiment in an ambush, or some other fatal disaster." Still greater reason have religious teachers had to make similar complaint. Even Christ himself was so treated. This people's heart is waxed gross, and their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them (Matt. 13: 15).

Carried Over the Falls

A press despatch from Niagara Falls reports another catastrophe there. Some workmen on the bank of the upper river, about a half-mile back from the Falls, were horrified, a few days ago, when looking across the river from their elevated position, to see a man and a boat caught in the swift current and swept into the upper rapids. When first seen, the craft and its occupant were well out in midstream, the man pulling at the oars in a desperate effort to make the Canadian shore before he was carried to a point where he must lose all hope. Never did man pull harder, but the current swept him onward with terrible rapidity. Over reef after reef the craft plunged, but the man held fast to the oars, until one wave of the rapids, more fierce than the others, lifted the boat high up and toppled it over. Soon the boat was seen to make the plunge over the brink of the is still going on. The statement is made by well-known mining men that the cellar of a shaft of the

FREDERICK WILLIAM, CROWN PRINCE OF GERMANY

Green Mountain Mine, one of the Anaconda properties, has moved about seven feet in ten years. The phenomenon is regarded with interest by scientific men, but no danger is feared from it. Evidently we must not speak any more of the eternal hills, nor use the figure of the mountain as a metaphor of permanence. The phenomenon shows that the convulsion which John saw in his vision of the last days, may prove not to have been a mere figure of speech:

The heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places (Rev 6: 14)

BRIEF NOTES

The International Sunday School Lesson Committee has decided on the lessons for 1902 and 1903. The first half of both years will be given to the study of the Acts of the Apostles. The latter half of both years to the Old Testament, beginning with Exodus and going forward to the time of Solomon.

The Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society has just celebrated its sixty-ninth anniversary. Forty-five persons have been employed during the year in the work of missionary superintendence and in organizing Sunday Schools. The number of schools organized was 455. The financial report was more than usually encouraging.

Mr. J. H. Koenig, now employed as organist in the Lutheran Church, Christopher street, New York, is seeking a position in some high altitude, at a moderate salary. He is a fine musician, can teach the use of almost any instrument and is very energetic. He is twenty-six years old, is married, but has no children. Speaks fine German and English. Applications may be sent care of Sister Magdelene Kasewurm, 300 East Eighteenth street, New York City.

The American Sunday School Union makes an excellent showing of work for the past twelve months. The number of new schools organized was 1874—more than five for every day of the year; the number reorganized was 594, and the number visited or otherwise helped, 3,523. During the year 222 men were employed, from whose labors there are definite reports of no less than 7,882 conversions. In the 2,468 schools organized and re-organized, there are 90,663 members. A regular church work has developed during the year from Sunday Schools established by the Union in 105 instances. These churches are of various denominations.

Moving Mountains

A press despatch from Butte, Mont., reports a singular terrestrial phenomenon. It says that a portion of Butte, believed to embrace the larger part of the big hill upon which all of the Anaconda mines are situated, has made a very perceptible movement southward during the past few days. At the foot of Anaconda Hill the slide pushed the tracks of the street railway line about six inches. As there are no large buildings in that part of the city, no damage was done except to the railroad tracks, and but for their displacement the slide would not have been noticed. Geologists and scientific men say that the entire range of mountains about Butte is constantly moving, and that the sliding process which has been going on for ages and has crushed and mixed the copper veins and bodies in the Butte district and displaced many of them,

THE UTAH GOSPEL MISSION AND ITS ENLIGHTENING WORK AMONG THE DISCIPLES OF JOSEPH SMITH

BY REV. JOHN D. NUTTING*

THE recent attempt of the Utah Legislature to prevent prosecutions for polygamy, and the still more recent death of the Mormon leader who has been the chief-power in the system for many years past, have aroused a fresh public interest in the Mormon question as a whole. To those who understand the Mormon question, it is well known that the rank and file of the Mormon people are better than their leaders. They are mostly simple-hearted and sincere in their beliefs, kind to one another and to strangers, and fairly industrious. There is a great deal of force of character among them. They are a strong people physically. With proper educational and religious opportunities, in a generation or two their young people would equal those of almost any section of the country. Here is the very "best side" of all in Mormonism; in the possibilities of the Mormon young people if placed under Christian advantages.

The Utah Gospel Mission came into being with its face toward the sunrise of these possibilities. The Mission is a union effort of evangelical Christians, without regard to denominational lines. There are probably two and one-fourth times as many Mormons to-day as there were eleven years ago, though most people think that Mormonism is dying out. During this same period Christian work along regular, localized lines has had its greatest activity in Utah. As faithful, earnest work has been done there as anywhere in the world, yet the evil has more than doubled its size and power. Owing to the wicked teaching and espionage of Mormon leaders, Mormons, as a rule, will not come out to hear the truth as presented in Christian church work. These adherents are generally held in the Mormon faith by being thus kept out of reach of the Gospel, and multitudes of new outside converts are decoyed into its toils every year. In Utah alone there are about 240 centres of population sufficient to have a post-office which have no Christian work whatever, and the majority of the Mormons live in such places. Mormonism in the West now constitutes an almost solid mass of fully 250,000 people, chiefly unreached by Christian truth!

The Utah Gospel Mission's methods are threefold: For Western Mormon regions, two lines of work are undertaken: (1) a large wagon colporteur effort, by trained men, reaching nearly every home yearly with the truth by personal work and the printed page; (2) a wagon evangelistic work, preaching the plan and powerful truths of the Gospel in all villages and cities, especially in the neglected ones. Outside of Utah, wherever needed, we endeavor by other methods to secure the widest possible knowledge of the facts concerning Mormonism, so as to hinder the further success of efforts to proselyte people to Mormonism.

The promise of such effort is very great. By these quiet but fundamental methods, reaching the homes and hearts generally, with simple, kindly Christian truth, it is believed that even a decade will witness a revolution of sentiment in Mormon regions, the conversion of very many individual souls and the measurable solution of fied, its basis of historic falsehoods, is receding farther and farther into the dim past, and is becoming harder and harder to disprove to its adherents. Every consideration should impel us to immediate and earnest action.

The work outside of Mormon regions, to counteract the efforts of the Mormon proselyters, depends on the circulation of proper literature by Christian friends wherever such work is needed. Its emissaries will not do this, but the opposite. The Utah Mission has issued literature which gives the Mormon statement of belief as they have been and are taught in Utah and elsewhere by its greatest teachers, given in their own words. Every pastor should see that they are known; wherever Mormon "elders" appear his literature is the antidote. A dollar's worth will supply a good-sized village.

Money is needed with which to carry on the work of the Utah Gospel Mission in these directions. The most of the Mission's workers will be volunteers, trying for a year or more each without salary, the Mission becoming responsible for so much of their actual expenses as may be necessary. To meet these expenses, the cost of wagons and literature for distribution, etc., the Mission will rely upon the free-will offerings of God's people throughout the United States. Each of the Mission volunteers will reach from four thousand to five thousand families per year with the truth, in the most effective way—a mighty opportunity, not equalled by that of many pastors. Many a church individual could support a worker entirely; $75 or less will provide for his literature; $25 makes a donor a life member of the Mission; $5 per year, a supporting member; $1 an annual member, and an amount will help the cause. Many Sabbath Schools, young people's societies and churches could wisely make this one of their benevolent objects. At least a score of workers along these lines should be in the western field constantly—devoted men, trained for the work, and willing to "endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ," for the love of the Master and of his souls. A number of men are ready to go now. The whole Mormon region should be reached this year with the truth. It will be, under God, if the means are supplied.

Thus far, the few have borne the burden of what has been done. Will not the many now rally to the support of this great work? The Utah Gospel Mission is incorporated under the laws of Ohio, and numbers on its Board of trustees and its Advisory Committee over fifty men of nine denominations, residing from California to Massachusetts, among them some very prominent names. Further information, literature, etc., may be had by addressing the Secretary, at 739 Reel street, Cleveland, O., to whom contributions for the work may be sent.

the whole Mormon problem. The writer believes that in this work lies the greatest key to such solution. This problem is far more urgent than most persons imagine. The spread of the evil has been such that probably one-third of all Mormons now live outside of Utah, colonized from Canada on the north down through into old Mexico. The system is daily becoming more unified and solidi-

AMONG THE QVAINT PEASANTS OF BRITTANY

BRETON FISH-BOATS WAITING FOR THE OUTGOING TIDE.

THE VILLAGE WASH-HOUSE IN THE STREAM

ON a Sabbath or a feast day is the time to see a Breton village at its best. The maidens wear their gayest skirts and bodices, their whitest caps and lappets, and instead of the wooden sabots in which they go about their week-day tasks, they have on slippers adorned with bows or buckles. Around their necks hang chains or black ribbons with crosses dependent. There are few Protestant churches in Brittany—very few. Until the fifteenth century Brittany was pagan; and in the practices of the peasants there is now a strange mixture of Roman Catholicism and Paganism. Only in 1840, can it be said that active Protestant missionary work began in this country. The Breton peasants are naturally of a pious spirit; and they have many customs, which though tinged with superstition, are graceful expressions of a reverent mind. Thus, before the cross, which stands where roads meet, and in other public places, they lift their hats, or kneel and pray as they pass. To a funeral procession they pay like tribute. And when the sweet chimes of the bellus ring out, the Breton pauses in his work or sport to bow his head in prayer.

The Breton town or village usually has its public lavoir (wash-house) owned by the municipality, which grants privileges to the washerwomen. These Breton laundresses have an old way of beating the clothes clean with small paddles. The lavoir is a place of social reunion, as well as of labor. The women gossip as they work or rest, and the latest betrothal, marriage, christening or death, comes under discussion over the paddles; matches are made, too.

IN THE MARKET-PLACE AT CONCARNEAU

The market square serves a similar end, in addition to providing housewives with opportunity to replenish their larders. Such a quaint, animated scene it is, with the women in their odd white caps and glistening lappets! Vegetables, fish and fruits are the offerings to the public, and to the fish, there is no limit at Concarneau, where our market picture was taken. Catching pilchards (small herring-like fish) and putting them up as sardines, form the great industries of Concarneau, as of many another town on the coast of Finisterre. The wide quay Ste. Croix, where fleets of fishing-boats come and go at every tide, presents a picturesque appearance when the great nets are being emptied of their shining loads of silvery fishes, while the cork floats hang in idle and graceful festoons from the masts.

The visitor to a Breton home will be surprised to discover to how small a degree salt enters into the cookery. Even butter is used unsalted. Salt is very expensive because of the tax upon it. Old-fashioned spits are employed for roasting fowls. Chestnuts form an important part of the bill of fare, entering into the composition of many dishes. Visits or business journeys are made in very funny-looking vehicles; a big, two-wheel cart, drawn by a diminutive horse or a big-eared donkey, will, at a short distance, give almost the impression of having sails upon it, because of the large caps and lappets of the occupants.

HE MARRIED ONE THOUSAND FIVE HUNDRED COUPLES

In these days, when the institution of marriage is assailed by a certain class of reformers, and when the assertion is made that a large proportion of all marriages turn out unhappily, it is a pleasant thing to see the experience of such a man as the Rev. Mr. Meese, of Auburn, Ind., who holds the record for uniting in the bonds of matrimony, fifteen hundred couples. Pastor Meese has in his life been laboring in the same section of the country, and has had ample opportunities for observing the result of a very large proportion of these unions. It is one of the duties of the pastor to whom he has been married in wedlock, never applied for a divorce; and in no case has the pastor reason to suspect that the young couple (many of them are middle-aged now) regretted their choice of each other as companions.

for the journey of life. This is surely a wonderful record; yet there is no evidence that Pastor Meese's experience is exceptional. Society hears of an occasional family jar or domestic tumult, and is quick to draw conclusions, especially if an unjust critic be at hand to prompt the judgment; but it takes no note of the great multitude of happy homes, of loving wives and husbands and dutiful children, who, in proportion to the homes where discord reigns, are as "the sands of the sea" in number. It is quite within the limits of probability to say that if every clergyman, drawing on his own pastoral experiences, as Mr. Meese has done, could publicly review the marriage record of his ministry, the result would be a showing so conclusive that it would forever silence the cavilers who oppose the sacred ordinance of marriage.

THE ASCENSION AN EXTENSION OF CHRIST'S WORK

JESUS ASCENDS INTO HEAVEN...

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL
LESSON for May 19. Luke 24: 44-53

At the end of school, to which so many young people and their parents and friends are looking forward at this season, is significantly called "Commencement"—the commencement of real life—so the ascension of Jesus, though the end of his visible life on earth was the commencement of his larger work for the world from the vantage ground of heaven. That is the significance of Luke's words in the introduction, or dedication, of the book of Acts: "The former treatise have I written, O Theophilus [referring to the Gospel of Luke] of all that Jesus began to do and teach." The story of Christ's life on earth is, then, only a book of beginnings. The book of Acts is to be Vol. II. in Luke's life of Christ, telling of the "greater things" (John 14: 12; 16: 12) he continued to do and say from heaven. Jesus himself said his larger work would be done after he ascended, and therefore it was better for his disciples that he should go and usher in the new time when out of sight, but ever near at hand, he could do his wider, deeper work (John 16: 7; 20: 29). He ascended not because his work was done, but to do it better from the standpoint of heaven. As George Macdonald beautifully says: "He took himself from before the eyes of those that loved him well that he might hide himself in their very hearts." His work before the ascension had been mostly to teach and heal in Palestine. His work after that was to be world-wide and heart-deep.

Every reason given for the ascension of Jesus speaks of his continued work on earth. He was "exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour; to give repentance to Israel; to fill all things."

The first time the ascended Christ was seen in heaven—at the martyrdom of Stephen—he was not sitting, as if his work was done, but "standing at the right hand of God," keeping guard, as again we see him at Paul's conversion, over his persecuted people. The name, "Acts of the Apostles" is not a part of the Bible. A truer name would be, "The Acts of the Ascended Christ through those whom he sent." The word apostles means those sent, and what they did and said was "in the Name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth," by whom modern Christians are also "sent" to speak and "act" "in his Name."

LESSON OUTLINE

1. In the school of Christ, vs. 2-7.
2. Not teaching only, but spiritual baptism, also, needed to prepare for life, v. 8.
3. Departure from this world to the Christian an ascension, v. 9.
4. The second coming not to draw our gaze from duty, but to cheer us in it, vs. 10, 11.

Wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel? The whole life of Jesus was really a schooling for him and those with whom he mingled. In boyhood, we are told, "he grew in wisdom and in stature and in favor with God and man." Every school should be a child garden to promote such an all-around growth of body and mind, of manners and morals. Like the boys we saw at school in Nazareth, Jesus sat cross-legged on a mat with other boys, with a red fez on his head and rainbow cloth, perhaps, for a robe, and learned the lessons of his time. He had come from heaven as the Son of God, but he had put his robes of glory by and become so truly human that he needed schooling. I think this was partly that he might get near to school children of every country and every time. But in order to make him "perfect through suffering," that is, a perfect sympathizer with men, as well as boys, Jesus lived like other poor boys and men for thirty-three years, all of which was a schooling for his larger, invisible life as the world's Saviour and King (Heb. 2: 10; 4: 15). Jesus, in his last three years, gathered disciples, that is, learners or pupils, in a very informal school of theology, which was more like a Sunday School, only the teaching went on every day in the week and everywhere, oftenest in the fields and hills and by the lake. The opening verses of our lesson to-day describe the last days of that schooling, and there is much in it to encourage seemingly unsuccessful teachers and dull scholars. The principal thing Jesus tried to teach in those three years was that the kingdom of heaven, which he was to bring in as Messiah (the Hebrew word of which Christ is the Greek equivalent, both meaning anointed king), was not a kingdom of bloody spears and golden crowns and beautiful robes, but the living of men with each other according to the Golden Rule and other heavenly laws of Christ. This was all told in the beatitudes and in many a parable, and in plain words in the Lord's prayer, where the petition, "Thy kingdom come," is in the next line of Hebrew parallelism explained to mean the doing of God's will, "as in heaven so on earth," that is, unselfishly, the word "kingdom," showing that it does not mean a man away by himself doing only his duty to God, but a group or company of men doing also God's will to each other in social justice and brotherhood. The promise of such a good time coming is the God-spell, the Gospel, the glad tidings, which gives title to the whole message of Christ (Luke 4: 18, 19). But after Jesus had explained this over and over for three years, the disciples that gathered about him on the Mount of Ascension showed that they still held the error that he was to be their earthly king by their question, when they saw by his face and manner and the promise of the Holy Spirit, which they did not understand, that something great was about to happen. "Wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" Many a teacher will remember some equally surprising remark by which they have suddenly learned that what they have taught long and earnestly is not yet understood by their unspiritual pupils. Let it remind them that they must lead their pupils to Pentecost. Dull pupils should also seek the gift of the Holy Spirit on their own account as the quickener of mind as well as heart. And it will make the brightest brighter. "He shall make him of quick understanding." O! that we might save millions of bright boys and girls in our schools from the harm sin does to body and mind, and make them to see how "the mind of Christ" would strengthen the body and brighten the mind, while it saves the soul!

Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you. Jesus told his graduating class of disciples that even his teaching for all those three years was not enough preparation for life. They should wait for the Holy Spirit to fill their human spirits with power before going out to work and witness for him. The young are often eager to get into life without due preparation. Especially are we all apt to cut short our devotions when duties are urgent. But with the world waiting for the Gospel, Jesus said to his apostles: "Wait for the promise of the Father." There are said to be thirty-one thousand promises in the Bible, but this is "the promise," greatest of all. Character is more than all else among the secrets of success.

Not Education only, but the Holy Spirit also needed to prepare us for life

Force not thy upward growth, but first of all Deepen thy roots, then mayest thou well sustain The rays of sunlight that upon thee fall: And, without withering, all thy strength retain. Plants that have little else but leaf and flower. However bright their hue, live but their little hour.

Jesus knew that when his disciples realized that he had actually left the world and left his great work for them to complete, they would be driven to their knees to seek the divine power needed to do it. A great painter who had been obliged to suspend his work on account of the infirmities of age, while one of his masterpieces was yet incomplete on his easel, called the most skillful of his young pupils and bade him finish the painting. "I commission thee, my son, to do thy best upon this work." The young man had such reverence for his master's talent that he felt unworthy to touch a work the master had begun. "Do thy best!" again said the master. Taking the brush the youth knelt and prayed. "It is for the sake of my beloved master that I implore skill and power to do this work." With suppressed emotion he began to paint, and gained confidence and steadiness and inspiration as he proceeded. Forgetting himself, his mastering genius awoke to the task. The master as borne on a couch into the studio to pass judgment on the result. Before the triumph of art before him he burst into tears of joy, and throwing his arms about his disciple, he exclaimed: "I am no more!" The young artist, Leonardo da Vinci, is now known the world over as the painter of the Last Supper. In that same spirit we shall in the next lesson see the disciples of Jesus on their knees praying for power to complete the work Jesus had begun. In that spirit should every one of us plead for power as we go forth tomorrow to work and witness for Christ, whether at home or Sunday School or day school or school.

Ye shall be witnesses unto me. They were to receive the Holy Spirit merely for their own joyment. Many who seek the gift of the Spirit fail to receive it because they seek it selfishly. God's thought in the gift just be ours, "Power for service." We must seek it in order that there may be a book of ours. Many are telling how to get the power of the Spirit. Another thing needs to be taught—how to keep it. You'll lose it unless you use it. Were not all called to "edify," but we are all called to testify. Whoever heard of a witness refusing to testify in court to save a friend, because he was slow of speech? Surely we can all tell out of our as well as in it what we have seen and heard. The apostles were sent to other lands, where their way would be beset with "perils of waters and perils of robbers," and other perils manifold. The Christianizing of the world, which they and their successors have wrought in the power of the Spirit, has now made travel so safe and easy that a tiny messenger boy, of unusual ability and faithfulness, was recently sent from London, with no other directions than could be spoken to him at the start, to deliver business messages in New York, Philadelphia and Chicago, and he outstripped the transatlantic mails. This may remind us not only of the changes Christianity has wrought, but also that all boys should be messenger boys for God.

There is a good story of a missionary who was sent to baptize and receive into the church in a little out-of-the-way village of India about sixty converts from Hinduism. After he had examined all the older people, last of all a boy came forward who had been sitting in a far-off corner listening eagerly. "What, my boy! do you want to join the church?" "Yes, sir." "But you are very young, and if I were to receive you into the church to-day and then you were to slip aside, it would bring discredit on the church and do great injury to the cause of Christ. I shall be coming this way again in about six months. Now you be very loyal to the Lord Jesus during that time, and if I find you steadfast and true I will baptize and receive you." At this the people all ran to their feet, and one speaking for all said, "Why, sir, it is his that has taught us all that we know about the Lord Jesus." And so the little minister joined the church with the others.

There's room for children's service in this busy world of ours. We need them as we need the birds and need the summer flowers.

When Spring Flowers Bloom

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

BURLEY

The Lost Lamb

I AM often glad that so much of the Bible is associated with the folding of flocks and the care of the lambs and sheep. The peaceful pastoral occupations of the ancient herdsmen, their journeyings to and fro in search of green grass and springs of water, make our beloved Book restful and beautiful to-day amid our crowding business cares. Indeed, the soft ripple of flowing streams, the verdure of mountain-tains clothed from base to summit with leafy trees, the umbrageous closeness of silent woods, and the fragrance of gardens and orchards are in a precious Bible. It begins with the garden of Eden, and it closes with the garden of heaven. In the one, there were pleasant aisles and flowers and trees; in the other there is the tree of life with its manifold manner of fruits, and there are the flowers that never die.

Which of us does not love the melody of the Twenty-third Psalm: "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures, he leadeth me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul." And that wonderful passage in Ezekiel: "Behold, I myself, and I will search for my sheep, and will seek them out. As a shepherd seeketh out his flock, in the day that he is among his sheep that are scattered abroad, so will I seek out my sheep, and I will deliver them out of all places where they have been scattered, in the cloudy and dark day. And I will bring them out from the peoples and gather them from the countries and will bring them into their own land."

Like a deep-toned bell, pealing grandly through the long centuries, comes the answer to this promise: "The noble army of martyrs praise thee, O God!" Away back in the first century after Christ when the flames of persecution burned hotly, when Roman hate pursued the new sect unto the death, in Britain in the third century, when the land ran red with Christian blood, through the dark days of the Middle Ages, and during the massacres and tortures of the Inquisition, down our own period when Armenia and China have seen thousands witnessing a good confession, the Lord has been gathering home his scattered sheep from the cloudy and the dark day.

In the cross of Christ I glory,
Towering o'er the wrecks of time,
Lying in our cushioned pews. There are those who sang it last summer in the pulpit of keen axe and burning brand, and fished it in the immediate presence of the Lord. O land, "thy shepherds slumber," laments Habakkuk, and so the lambs were taken for prey, and the wild beasts reined upon the flock. We remember the youthful David watching his sheep in the fields, and defending them against the lion and the bear. Even so, the son of David exclaims, "I am the good shepherd. The good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep."

Some years ago, in a country place where blueberries grew thickly in the mountains, a party of people went out to pick them, and somehow a little girl wandered away and was lost. From Thursday to Saturday, no trace of her could be found. Men traversed the woods with torches, shouts went up in the hope that she would be found. The whole countryside was aroused and alarmed. At last, when hope was flickering and low, a glad tidings was heard, Found, found, found! The little maid was almost dead with cold, hunger, exposure and fright, but kind hands lifted and bore her to home, and placed her in her mother's arms. There was joy in that village over the lost that was again restored to safety and love and shelter. So, when a soul that has wandered, is brought into right relations with God, is converted and blessed, and redeemed, there are exultant anthems in heaven, and the angels sing praises to the shepherd and bishop of all souls.

May Movings

IN the Scottish romances which have won such wide popularity of late, there is often mention of a roup, which seems to be the name for an auction. When people have to move from home to home, they sometimes wish, here in America, that they might have a roup, or in some other way dispose of their goods and chattels. Furniture, which was most respectable in its proper place, looks wofully disreputable on the van, and is evidently a disgrace to its owners. The carpets taken up from the floors, the familiar rooms are like Sahara in their barrenness and aspect of dreary desolation. Lots of precious things are broken. Brittle glass and delicate porcelain, unless packed by professionals, emerges the worse for wear from the ordeal of transition.

Yet we move. The nomadic instinct stirs in us. We are fain to change our surroundings, in the hope of betterment, often a very forlorn hope, indeed. We do get rid of some portion of the goods which belong to us, old things which have passed into the stage when they are a care, and yet to which we cling for association's sake. And life goes on, and the only removal we really shrink from is that easiest of all, when we shall slip for aye from the tyranny of things, and go to dwell in the Father's house, where they go no more out.

APPLE-BLOSSOMS

A I. I. day in the green, sunny orchard,
When May was a marvel of bloom,
I followed the busy bee lovers,
Down aisles that were rich with perfume.

The one perfect cluster I sought for,
Was not in the orchard for me;
It swung on the edge of a forest
From the bough of a wild apple tree.

A tree that no thrift of the farmer
Had cared in its life to protect,
All twisted and stunted and barren,
The orphan of want and neglect.

There, lone in the lavish spring beauty,
One beautiful blossoming spray,
And that, in its delicate tinting,
The blossom I'd looked for all day.

The soul of the tree in its prison
Had thrilled to the passion of spring,
Had given itself in its answer,
The beggar-maid's yes to the king.

So told me the gray-bearded painter
And showed me the branch that he broke,
Forever alive on his canvas;
And musingly, dreamingly spoke.

About Looking Our Best

Some people seem to fancy that there is a special virtue in being indifferent to looks, that it matters very little how one dresses, and what appearance one makes, if only one's heart is right. But if the heart is right, and the temper even, and the principles of life are built on a foundation of honesty and integrity, then the lesser will be maintained as well as the greater, and neatness will not be neglected. A pretty dress need not cost more than an ugly one, and the hair smoothly arranged and kept in order, takes only a few moments of time, and makes the mother's face more charming to her children than it will be if drawn into a tight knot and carelessly skewered with a pin. All things considered, the teacher who wears a bright tie and clean collar and neat cuffs will have a better disciplined and far more loyal class than she who is negligent of the refinement and distinction of attractive dress. One may be foolishly addicted to the external, and this is not to be commended. But attention to comeliness is a very praiseworthy thing on the whole.

A NAMELESS GIRL HEROINE

An Example for Humble
Christians in Uncongenial Surroundings

HOW much the Bible writers might have done to satisfy our curiosity, had they been writing merely for popularity! We should, for example, have liked to know at least the name of this "little maid." The writer might have told us something of her condition in the land of her birth and also whether the signal service she rendered to her master was rewarded in any way. But on all these matters the narrative is silent, and we must be content with the story as it stands. It may console some faithful, useful persons among us to know that if their work is unrecognized, if their names are unknown, they are at any rate in good company. They are not the first, or the only ones, who have been the means of blessing, yet have died unknown. Many a man has toiled and denied himself to give his children an education; many a wife and mother has proved herself a heroine in her family; many a son or daughter has made life a long sacrifice for the happiness of parents or relatives—and no recognition or reward has ever come. Well, there is a glory in the work and a satisfaction in having been of some use in the world, and it is gratifying to know that life has been disinterested, which cannot be felt by people to whom fame or wealth has come as a reward. God knows such lives. "I know thy works" was the message Christ sent to the churches by his servant John. We may be sure that he never forgets those who work to please him and get no reward from men.

Our little maid, little as we know about her, was evidently one entitled to respect. She shows to advantage in comparison with some Christians whom we know. She was a captive, a prisoner, carried away from her home and friends, and set down in a strange city, where she was expected to work. Perhaps in her own country she may have had little maids to wait upon her; but now she must wait on her mistress, a woman of another race. In such conditions, many would have been sullen and discontented. It is not easy to be cheerful and helpful in uncongenial surroundings. The tendency to deplore our lot, to pity ourselves, and to repine in misfortune, is all too common. There are some people, who, with everything about them to make them happy, fret over a slight, or resent some imaginary neglect, until they become a burden to themselves and all around them. Many people who have no troubles worthy of the name, manufacture misery and groan over paltry vexations that should not cause a moment's perturbation. Yet here was this little maid, in a strange household, all the members probably hostile to her people, concerned about the welfare of her master, who very likely had never given a thought to her existence. How many girls so situated would have cared about his trouble! How many might have even thought that the "Captain of the host," who may possibly have directed the raid in which she was torn from her home, was justly punished by being the victim of the loathsome disease!

The little maid, however, was not of that kind. She pitied her master and longed for his recovery. She knew how he might be cured, and she hastened to impart her knowledge. It is not all of us who are in the position to render such service. Some among us know nothing of the Prophet, greater than Elisha, who can save the people from their sins. They have heard of him, but know nothing of his power. When they see persons around them in the grasp of the liquor habit, or held captive by the gambling habit or some other vice, can make no suggestion or point the way to deliverance. Some again who do know, are restrained by timidity or foolish reticence from praising the power of the Saviour. The little maid was not thus backward. She, also, was in earnest about it. It was no mere statement of a fact that she uttered. There was intense desire in her exclamation:

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for May 19. II. Kings 5:1-4.

"Would God my lord were with the prophet, for he would recover him." How much good might be done in a household in time of trouble if the one Christian in it spoke out so earnestly with a confidence so bold! Everywhere there are the victims of sin, the weary sufferers, the hearts broken by sorrow. Where are the followers of Christ who might have more confidence in saying of their Prophet, "He would recover him?" The word spoken at the right time, how good it is! Many a child has spoken it, many an unknown Christian has thus led to Christ some one who has proved a valiant servant in his cause. How many might have used such an opportunity who have missed it!

Ascension of the God Man

To Become the Source of Spiritual Life to All Who Believe on Him

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

WHAT, then, if ye should behold the Son of Man ascending where he was before?" asked our Lord of his disciples, who were stumbled at his teaching, when he had said, "The bread which I will give is my flesh, for the life of the world. . . . He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day" (John 6: 51-54, 60-62, R. V.). The unbelieving Jews had striven, one with another, saying, "How can this Man give us his flesh to eat?" (v. 52). His disciples had said, "This is a hard saying; who can hear it?" (v. 60). Only one thing could explain it: his coming death upon the cross. Neither the criticising Jews, nor the perplexed disciples, could understand why, at such a moment, he had spoken of ascending where he was before, or why he should have added the words, so significant to us, "It is the Spirit which quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing; the words that I have spoken unto you are spirit, and are life" (v. 63, R. V.).

He had taught them, "I can of mine own self do nothing" (John 5: 30). It was the same truth as was taught in Isa. 40: 6: "All flesh is grass," even the flesh of the Son of Man, apart from the indwelling of the Father (John 14: 10), and of the Spirit (Luke 4: 1). But when his flesh had become the "corn of wheat" which fell into the ground and died (John 12: 24), it became life-giving to the "much fruit," which it germinated through his death. He could impart his nature to those who take their place with him as crucified, and so cease to reckon upon anything in their own nature. "As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father, even so, he that eateth me, he also shall live because of me" (John 6: 57). A life which has all its springs outside itself and in him, is in him that eats his flesh and drinks his blood by receiving as "spirit" and "life" the words which he has spoken to us. But what has all this to do with his ascension? Everything. It is a human Being, who has passed through death, who now sits at the right hand of God—a human Being who is the living, organic Head of that body of which we are members; and we have no life in us, no eternal life, but as we draw in his life, his flesh and blood (John 6: 53).

While our Lord was on earth, a human Being under the same earthly conditions as every other human being, he was still "the Son of Man which is in heaven" (John 3: 13). His person, his word, his will was as powerful in heaven as though his actual presence had been there. The absence of the German Emperor from his country at the time of Queen Victoria's death did not make him any the less to be Emperor in Germany at the same time. His manifested presence was in England, his power was in Germany. And so it was with our Lord when he was manifested on earth, and yet was the only-begotten Son of God in heaven. "No man hath ascended into heaven" (John 3: 13). Enoch and Elijah were both caught up to heaven without dying. God took the one, and sent a whirlwind to bring up the other (Gen. 5: 24; II. Kings 2: 11). But the Lord Jesus, by heavenly gravitation, as soon as his work on earth was ended, in all the dignity which became the Maker and the Lord of the universe, ascended by his own will and power to his place at the right hand of God. Only he could say, "I ascend."

Before our Lord ascended, he prepared his disciples. His last discourse with them before he suffered was full of allusions to his going away. "Whither I go," he said to Simon Peter, "thou canst not follow me now" (John 13: 36). "In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you; I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again, and will receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also. And whither I go, ye know the way" (John 14: 2-4, R. V.). "I will not leave you orphans" (v. 18). "If ye loved me, ye would rejoice because I go unto the Father, for the Father is greater than I" (v. 28). And he summoned up all these allusions to his departure in the clear statements, "I came out from the Father, and am come into the world; again I leave the world and go unto the Father" (John 16: 28). And yet, even after his wondrous prayer committing them to the Father, they could forsake him and flee! They had not understood; only Mary could be trusted with the message after his resurrection: "I ascend unto My Father and your Father, to my God and your God" (John 20: 17).

Probably Luke 24: 44-49 was spoken, as well as Matt. 28: 16-20 and Mark 16: 15-18, not long before his ascension. He said (v. 49): "And, behold, I send forth the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city [of Jerusalem] until ye be clothed with power from on high." They had the teaching, but as yet they had not God indwelling by his Spirit, and the words of Jesus were not yet spirit and life to them. "And he led them out until they were over against Bethany, and he lifted up his hands and blessed them, and was carried up into heaven." It was the last visible act of the Son of Man to bless those who had misunderstood, denied and forsaken him! No parting word of reproach: he went up to heaven blessing. He is there to bless, for he "ever liveth to make intercession for us" (Heb. 7: 25). "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth: who is he that shall condemn? It is Christ Jesus that died, yea, rather, that was raised from the dead, who is at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us" (Rom. 8: 33, 34). Let us adore him, our ascended Lord.

Her Companion in Sickness

Your Red Letter New Testament has been of great benefit to me. When I was confined to my bed, unable to leave it, and while supported with pillows, the Testament was my companion. God in his wisdom saw fit to restore me again. I feel a sweet peace that the world cannot give, and now that I have come back to live a while longer here, my one desire is to be useful in any way that I can. I prize THE CHRISTIAN HERALD very much. I am an old woman of seventy-two years.

The Light Came Suddenly

...HOW MRS. ALICE C. BROWN, PRESIDENT OF THE FLORIDA W. C. T. V. BECAME A CHRISTIAN

BY REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D.

HERE is a leaf out of real life more intense than one may usually read. Mrs. Alice C. Brown, the enthusiastic and effective temperance leader in Florida, was converted to Christ on the second day of March, 1869. I have before me a letter which she wrote to her father and mother the next day. Such a letter has a glow about it, that makes truth not only strange but more romantic and fascinating than any fiction. The young girl writes: "MY DEAR FATHER AND MOTHER: I know that you will be glad when I tell you in good news: when I tell you of the glad tidings of great joy, that I am no longer a lost sinner out of the love of Christ, but that I love him and seek to do his will here everything else. But I must tell you how it came about. All during this revival, I have felt as if I needed nothing. I resisted indeed that I was so awfully impatient, so easily upset, but still I thought, I went through with our hard observations, always felt so, for my daily sin and prayed with more or less eagerness for forgiveness; so I was occasionally to the church though the week-days, and thought I was doing well enough.

But after Mr. Avery came, and I heard him preach some of his searching, conscience-stirring sermons, so blunt and so pointed, I began to feel wicked and ashamed. My cloak of self-righteousness was being pulled off from me, revealing a poor, wretched, mean, miserable sinner, who meant to buy heaven with paltry good works, whose ladder of good intentions could scale the walls thereof and sink in by some other way than by 'the Lord.' Last Wednesday night, I went in came home angry and hardened. I said I should not go again. The next day, Thursday, the pastor, Mr. Holcomb, called on Mr. Avery called. I treated them very rudely so far as their mission was concerned. Other friends called from time to time and spoke to me. I talked freely and honestly, scorned to be a hypocrite, but would 'none of these things.' Sunday night I went to church, and Mr. Avery preached from these words, 'Sirs, ye must I do to be saved?' the question the jailor to Paul and Silas. He made it so clear and plain that, to one who felt guilty and sinful, the only way was to give up opposition to God and make confession as a disobedient child to a good father. The sermon did me good. I wish no one could have heard it. I said, if so easy and plain to be a Christian, I'll be a Christian. I had quite a struggle with my pride for nearly two hours that night, but before I slept I had set it in my own mind that I would yield and confess Christ, whether I was pardoned and made happy or not. My pride was tempting me with various desires. I could probably have to acknowledge before others, and I should have to admit that I was wrong. But finally I succeeded in saying and feeling that I would renounce those things now, that I would try to get right with my God and my soul, and all those things would settle themselves. So I prayed and wept, but so sorely as often before, for I was at last glad that my warfare was either ended, or was coming to an end. In the morning I felt as determined as ever, though I did not see my way clear. But I did, as I said to myself the night before, 'I'll hold on! I'm not going to give up!' I read that day many verses of the Bible, which had to me a new and deeper meaning, and I performed my every duty cheerfully, but still did not feel happy as I had hoped. I think I was not conquered entirely, for on going to church in the evening I shrank from the thought that if the minister should, at the close of the sermon, as he sometimes did, ask those of the congregation who were on the Lord's side to take seats in a certain place, or those who were seeking remission of sins through the Saviour, to come forward, I felt I should deny him and that my pride would keep me back. I was glad when we were dismissed without that test being applied. I prayed for strength that night and resolved to hold on.

"Tuesday afternoon the pastor called. I told him a little of what I have told you in this letter, but I told him also that what troubled me was that I did not love Christ and God any more than I had before. He explained what Christ had done for me, what love was his and the Father's. Although

I thought I knew of all this before, yet I liked to listen to it. I was willing to be taught. Soon after he left me I took the Bible—the one you gave me, father—and opened to the first chapter of Corinthians, and read about the foolishness of preaching and the weak things to confound the mighty. As I got about two-thirds of my way through the chapter, all at once it was as if the sun came out from behind the clouds, and illumined the landscape with a flood of light; his love was shed abroad in my heart, and I knew I loved him. I loved his Word, I loved his creatures, and I loved his chosen ones with a new love. I felt as if I could glory in his name, and that I wanted everyone to know that I found the Lord.

"To-day I feel so thankful that God opened my eyes before it was too late; I wonder at the change in my own heart; I find it is comparatively easy to control my temper; I am constantly thinking of spiritual instead of selfish things; passages of scripture come unbidden to my mind, and the Bible is a new book to me, full of deep spiritual meaning.

"All of what I have written, I would a few days ago have sneered at, covertly, if not openly, in another, but now God has opened my eyes, and, 'whereas I was blind now I see.'"

Surely that is a beautiful leaf out of a girl's life, and in it we have the secret of the strong womanly soul who leads the temperance hosts of Florida.

A Saloon-Keeper Converted.

In a recent issue of the daily paper, Enterprise, of Phoenix, Arizona, I saw the following: "Closed Without Hatchet!" "As a result of the Gospel Meetings, under Major James H. Cole, the proprietor of the saloon opposite the entrance to the Phoenix Park, at the east end of the street car line, has closed up the place, poured out the stock of liquors on hand upon the ground, and says the place shall never be opened up again as a saloon. A revival meeting will be held in the place to-morrow, Tuesday afternoon, at 4 o'clock, under the leadership of Major Cole, to which everybody is invited." St. Louis, Mo. S. C. BUCKINGHAM.

Victoria's School Days*

MEANTIME school work went steadily on. The earliest instruction was given by her devoted mother and the faithful governess, but when she was five years old, the Rev. George Davys, afterwards Bishop of Peterborough, was appointed tutor, and superintended her education from that time, with the assistance of a staff of instructors for special subjects. The child learnt to speak English, French, and German from her infancy, and when she was eleven years old, Latin, Greek, and Italian were added. The Princess became a good mathematician and an able musician, while she attained to considerable skill in painting and etching.

The ready wit of the child was well displayed one day, when the lesson in Roman History told how Cornelia, the mother of the Gracchi, spoke of her sons as "My jewels." The princess remarked, "She should have said, 'My Cornelians.'" On another occasion she was rather inattentive, and when the Duchess of Kent came in to ask if the lessons were going on well, the governess was obliged to reply, "Oh, once she was rather troublesome." The truthful little Princess gently touched her arm, and said, "No, Lehen, twice; don't you remember?"

But it must not be supposed that Victoria was perfect. She had her faults like the rest of us, and perhaps wilfulness was the most conspicuous. On one occasion her music-master had to remonstrate with her, and said, "There is no royal road to music, Princess. You must practice like every one else." Whereupon the angry little lady at once locked the piano, and, putting the key into her pocket, retorted, "There now. You see there is no must about it, after all."

When she was eight years old, the Duke of York, an elder brother of the Duke of Kent, died, and Victoria was one step nearer to the throne. This fact was wisely kept from her. At the entrance of her eleventh year she made her first appearance at Court, at a ball given by George IV., when the child-Queen of Portugal was present. It must have been a pretty sight to see the two little girls—both destined for such high positions—dancing together, but the evening ended in disaster for the little Queen, who fell down in one of the dances, and was carried out lamenting.

We cannot better close this chapter of childish doings than by quoting a letter written by the Dowager-Duchess of Coburg to the Duchess of Kent, on the little Princess' eleventh birthday; a letter which clearly indicates the earnest, pious spirit which governed her early training:

"My blessings and good wishes for the day which gave you the sweet blossom of May. May God preserve and protect the valuable life of that lovely flower from all the dangers that will beset her mind and heart. The rays of the sun are scorching at the height to which she may one day attain. It is only by the blessing of God that all the fine qualities he has put into that young soul can be kept pure and untarnished."

The Influence of Faith†

ALL true faith which implies trust, and by which men act, operates from the heart, so that the larger, nobler, purer and more spiritual the heart, the broader and more influential the life of faith.

Faith is the foundation and bond of

*From The Story of Victoria, R. L., as wife, mother and queen. By W. J. Wintle, author of Armenia and Its Sorrows, etc. This is a sketch portrait of the late Queen, rather than a biography. It illustrates the Queen's personal life and character, and enforces the lessons which her life hold for all who read about her. Pp. 150, cloth, illustrated. Price 50 cents. Published by Thomas Whittaker, New York.

†From Nuggets of Gold, by Bruce Hughes. The venerable Bishop Hughes, of the M. E. Church, writes of this little book, a collection of philosophical thoughts tersely told: "It is well written, and will be useful, especially to young people." Pp. 108, cloth. Price 60 cents. Published by The Irving Company, New York.

family life. Man and woman commit their happiness, life, future, and all to each other because of faith. It fills the cellar and pantry, clothes with comfortable attire, warms the hearth, spreads the table, adorns the parlor. It adds piety, patience, security and sunshine to every home. "It is the principle of family order and happiness, of all filial, and a great part of parental affection." Faith in a mother's love is often the last "cable that holds a youth to his moorings." On life's ocean, amid the chase for pleasure, struggle for gain, aspiration for honor and distinction, surrounded by vice, beaten upon by passion, frowned upon by an envious world, every other stay gives way. Every other anchor drags. But the faith in mother's love begotten in the soul before he left home holds him fast and safe. Thus faith makes the Christian home the soil from which arise social life and activities. Faith, too, is the basis of society. It associates man with man for the accomplishment of their life work; it gives rise to the numerous orders of brotherhoods throughout the world to facilitate intercourse, convenience and comfort. Members of these societies traveling may be entire strangers yet surrounded by hosts of friends. Presenting the proper credentials, they are at once recognized as brothers, receive the right hand of fellowship, and have the best hospitality that kindness can bestow. The Christian Church, for instance, aims at charity for all men. It lives and grows by mutual trust. It says that the only guarantee for truly enlightened society, the right appropriation of the stores of nature, the promotion of happiness on earth, the grandest possibilities of the human soul and fellowship with the society of the redeemed is a true life of faith in the Messiah, the Prince of Peace, the Saviour of the world.

The Early Struggle at Tuskegee*

SOON after securing possession of the farm we set about putting it into a condition so that a crop of some kind might be secured from it during the next year. At the close of school hours each afternoon I would call for volunteers to take their axes and go into the woods to assist in clearing up the grounds. The students were most anxious to give their service in this way, and very soon a large acreage was put into condition for cultivation. We had no horse or mule with which to begin the cultivation of the farm. Mr. George W. Campbell, however, the president of the Board of Trustees, very kindly gave us a horse which was well along in years. This was the first animal that the school ever possessed. On the farm there was an old building that had formerly been used as a stable, another that had been used as a chicken coop, and still a third that had been used as a kitchen during ante-bellum days. All of these three buildings, or shanties, were duly repaired and made to do service as classrooms, dormitories, etc.

We had our first services in Porter Hall on Thanksgiving Day, 1882. Rev. R. C. Bedford, who was then pastor of the Congregational Church in Montgomery, and who has since been one of our trustees and warmest friends, preached the Thanksgiving sermon. This was the first Thanksgiving service, I think, that was ever held in the town of Tuskegee, and a joyous one it was to the people.

By the middle of the second year's work the existence of the school had begun to be advertised pretty thoroughly through the State of Alabama, and even in some of the adjoining States. This brought to us an increasing number of students, and the problem as to what to do with them was becoming a serious one. We put the girls who did not live in town on the third floor of Porter Hall to sleep. The boys we scattered around in whatever places we were able to secure. In order to provide a dining room, kitchen and laundry, to be used by the boarding department, our young men volunteered to dig out the basement under Porter Hall, which was soon bricked up and made to answer its purpose very well. Old students, however, who, to-day, return to Tuskegee and see the large, new dining room, kitchen, and laundry run by steam, are very much interested in noting the change and contrast.

Sometimes during the winter of the second year of the school, we were compelled to put large numbers of young men in shanties or huts to sleep, where there was almost no protection from rain and cold weather. Often during the very cold nights I have gone into the rooms of these students at midnight to see how they were getting along, and have found them sitting up by the fire, with blankets wrapped about them, as the only method of keeping warm. One morning, when I asked at the opening exercises how many had been frost-bitten during the cold weather, not less than ten hands went up. The teachers were not surprised at this. Still, notwithstanding these inconveniences and hardships, I think I never heard a complaint from the lips of a single student. They always seemed filled with gratitude for the opportunity to go to school under any circumstances.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

Mrs. W. H. P., Dallas, Pa., writes:

I want to acknowledge through your paper that God surely and truly answers prayer. And what puzzles me much is, that people try to endure so many troubles when help is so near and so sure. Why will not the distressed ones come to him who is always ready to hear and answer prayer?

F. C., La Grande, Ore., writes:

I wish to thank you for our CHRISTIAN HERALD. It comes like a blessed light to our home. I always first turn to the "Answered Prayers," and feel thankful that you have given us space for acknowledgment of God's love. God has answered my prayers many times.

Reader, De Land, Fla., writes:

I prayed earnestly to God for a special blessing to a dear invalid sister. The answer came speedily, and my request was granted beyond my greatest expectations. All praise be to him who has said in his Word "Before they call I will answer."

Mrs. I. W. R., Lomax, Ills., writes:

I have been a reader of your paper for several years; and so I saw the "Answered Prayers" and I was encouraged in my prayers for my son. Now, God has given me all I asked, and more.

Reader, Oakland, Calif., writes:

I am near fourscore and almost helpless. I was in trouble and the outlook was very dark. I asked help from the dear Lord. He answered my prayer. Praise his name.

Mrs. J. W. B., Columbus, O., writes:

Reading "Answered Prayers," I prayed in renewed faith for my son. My prayer has been answered. God has reclaimed my son.

S. A. L., Carlisle, Pa., writes:

My faith has been greatly strengthened in reading "Answered Prayers." I was in need, and I held on to this promise: "But my God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus." And I wish to acknowledge that God's promises are "yea and amen to every one that believeth."

Mrs. W. H., Mich., writes:

For a few years past I have been having a great trouble. I had such unrest. I prayed God to take it all away and give me peace of mind. My trouble seemed greater than I could bear; but I was able to lay it down at Jesus' feet. My prayer is answered. I am at peace. Thank God for the "Answered Prayer" column.

Teacher, Hamilton, N. Dak., writes:

In desperate strait, I went to God for a personal trouble; my prayer was answered. For a month I prayed earnestly for the salvation of one of my pupils. She is now in the fold. I have been praying for two of my brothers; one has decided to lead the better life, and I feel sure the other will soon come to Christ. Thank God for the blessed privilege of prayer! As soon as I receive my paper, I turn at once to the "Answered Prayers;" and, after reading it, I am compelled to fall upon my knees and praise God.

Mother, Los Angeles, Calif., writes:

I had been praying for loved ones; and was a little discouraged because a precious one, young in years, seemed to be subject to so much temptation in his surroundings, when, without any effort upon our part, he had an opportunity to engage in work where he would be entirely free from such surroundings. I was particularly led to think of this being our kind Father's way of helping my dear one by reading a similar experience in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of a "Brooklyn Mother."

SHE RESCUED 2,000 INDIA ORPHANS

A GRAPHIC story of toil and danger was told a few days ago by Miss J. C. Gow, who called at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office, on her way from India to Scotland. She was in charge of the station in Rajputana of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland, during the famine, and labored for the rescue of the starving people until her health broke down. Her description of the horrors of which she was an eyewitness is truly appalling. Miss Gow rescued about two thousand orphans, for whom she hopes to obtain pledges of support during her travels. She has besides, a number of widows whom she is trying to make self-supporting.

Day by day heartrending sights met her gaze. "A big native of Rajputana," she

A RESCUED FAMINE FAMILY

"came into the compound one day looking for me, wanting to get food. He had been four months without knowing what it was to get enough to eat, and the last three days before he found my house he had nothing at all. When he came in he was not able to speak, but closed his hands to indicate that he wanted food, then sank down to the ground exhausted. He was nursed and cared for until his strength began to return, then he told his story. He was one of two boys who, with their mother, went in search of food and work. They got separated, and this one could go no further, he felt that his strength was gone, so he sought the Mission. In two or three days, when he was a little stronger, he said, now you have given me faith, hope and light, thus something of the love of God seemed to dawn on that man's mind. He seemed to feel that God had led him into that compound, and rescued him and raised up friends for him. When strong enough to travel I was able to pay his passage home to his mother. The money I gave him would keep him until he could either get something to do or sailing in that, I told him he might bring his old mother back to us, but he did not return.

When my rescuers were out one day they brought in two little boys, Tulsio and Bhurio, respectively, about seven and ten years old. They were cared for at the house until I could get them passed on to the boys' orphanage. Meantime a case of smallpox broke out among the little ones I had with me, and they were all put in quarantine. These two little fellows, what was being done, became acquainted with me, and were sent on to the orphanage later on. Their home had been broken up by the famine, there was a mother and mother, an older brother and a younger sister, in addition to the two boys above mentioned. First, they sold all their possessions for food, until the last thing, even clothing, had gone, and there was nothing but to beg or starve. They wandered about in the jungle trying to find food. The father was the first to give in, and he lay down by the roadside and died, then the mother and her four children were left. In the search for food they were separated, but the two little boys kept together. It was just then that the rescuers found the little fellows wandering helplessly about and brought them in. The little ones thought the rest of the family were all dead in the jungle, but one day at the orphanage they heard that the mother, brother and sister were alive, and they slipped away one night to look for them, found them and brought them all the way back to us, and the two little fellows said: 'Our mother—we found her and brought her to you.' Just a little longer and it would have been too late, as the poor mother could no longer stand on her feet. The mother and the eldest boy were saved, but the little girl died, after some weeks of care. The little fellows said: 'Now we give them to you, will you write and ask the principal in charge at the orphanage to forgive us for running away and take us in again?' They would give me no rest until I did this. They took the letter themselves and walked back again to the orphanage. The eldest son has entirely recovered and is now supporting himself and his mother. Afterwards cholera broke out in the boys' orphanage, child after child was swept away, until there was a perfect panic. Tulsio also caught it, and nearly all the boys that I had sent in from Ahjmere came flying back in terror. When Bhurio started to go with the rest, little Tulsio said: 'Are you going to leave me, too?' Bhurio hesitated, wavered just for a second or two and said: 'No, I will stay with you.' And he did stay. You will be glad to hear that Tulsio recovered, and both of these boys are now being trained in our orphanage to become useful members of society."

Miss Gow is anxious to get support for her orphans, and she says that in the district where the orphanage is situated, and with the kind of training they receive, it requires twenty-five dollars a year to support each child.

The Disappearance of the Church

The Closing Scene in the History of the Church on Earth as Revealed in the Apocalypse*

BY REV. JOSEPH A. SEISS, D.D.

WHEN Christ comes, it will be the same with those faithful ones of his that sleep, as with those who may be still alive and waiting for him. There will be no advantage to the one class above the other as respects what is to follow. When the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God, first of all, the saints that sleep in him shall rise. This is plainly taught us in the apostolic messages. And when they have been thus recalled, whatever is further said is the same with regard to them as to those living saints who shall not have died at all.

One very striking statement concerning them, is that they are to be kept out of the hour of temptation—out of that season of trial which is then to come upon the whole world, to try those who dwell upon the earth instead of cherishing a heavenly citizenship. How this deliverance is to be wrought, St. Paul explains. The saints, both living and resurrected, are to be miraculously snatched away from earth to heaven, suddenly, and in the twinkling of an eye. His own unmistakable words are: "Then we who are living, who remain, shall be caught up together with them (the resurrected ones) in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air" (1. Thess. 4: 17).

The Saviour himself has also given assurances to the same effect, where he says: "I tell you, in that night there shall be two in one bed: the one shall be taken, and the other shall be left. Two women shall be grinding together: the one shall be taken, and the other shall be left. Two shall be in the field: the one shall be taken, and the other left. And they answered and said unto him, Where [or Whither], Lord? And he said unto them, Where-soever the Body is, thither will the eagles be gathered together" (Luke 17: 34-37). And to this same marvelous occurrence, which Paul speaks of as one of the great mysteries (1. Cor. 15: 51), do the words of the seer refer. "I saw," says John, "and behold, a door set open in the heaven, and the former voice which I heard as of a trumpet, speaking with me, saying, Come up hither." That door opened in heaven is the door of the ascension of the saints. That trumpet voice is the same which Paul describes as recalling the sleepers in Jesus, and to which the Saviour refers as the signal by which his elect are gathered from the four winds, but which we have no reason to suppose shall be heard or understood except by those whom it is meant to summon to the skies.

Such, then, is the termination of the earthly career of God's elect, for which the saints of every age have waited, longed and prayed.

And such is the next great scene which may now be any day expected. I know of nothing in the prophecies of God, unless it should be the mere deepening of the signs that have already appeared, which yet remains to be fulfilled before this sudden summons from the skies: "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee: hide thyself as it were a little moment, until the indignation be overpast; for, behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity" (Is. 26: 20, 21). Any one of these days or nights, and certainly before many more years have passed, all this shall be accomplished. Some of these days or nights—while men are busy with the common pursuits and cares of life, and everything is rolling on in its accustomed course—unheralded, unbelieved, and unknown to the gay world, here one, and there another, shall secretly disappear, "caught up" like Enoch, who "was not found because God had translated him." Invisibly, noiselessly, miraculously, they shall vanish from the company and fellowship of those about them, and ascend to their returning Lord. Strange announcements shall be in the morning papers of missing ones. Strange accounts shall be whispered around in the circles of business and society. And for the first time will apostate Christendom, and the slow in heart to believe all that the prophets have written, have the truth brought home, that no such half-Christianity as theirs is sufficient to put men among the favorites of the Lord.

Brethren and friends, these are neither dreams nor fables. They are realities, set forth in the infallible truth of God, and as literally true as anything else in the inspired Word. And as you value the prize of our high calling in Christ Jesus, and take this holy book as an unerring guide, be not faithless, but believing. And if you feel yourself unready for such events, do not think of setting them aside by scoffs and sneers. Better bestir yourself to be prepared, with your loins girded and your lamp trimmed and burning. There is chance for you yet to be among these favored ones whom God has engaged thus to keep out of the judgment plagues and sorrows; but that this opportunity shall remain to you for another year, or month, or week, or day, or hour, no living man or angel of heaven is authorized to promise. What you do must be done quickly.

IT was five o'clock on the morning of the eighteenth, the day they expected the ship to arrive, when Margaret was awakened by finding Marjorie standing beside her bed fully dressed for the journey to the city.

"Why, my dearlassie, what in the world are you doing up at this hour?"

"I just couldn't stay in bed another minute. I'm so anxious and so happy. Just think, in only a few hours I shall have my arms right tight around him, and I don't believe I'll ever let him go again," and she clasped her hands eagerly.

"I cannot make the time slip away any quicker, dear; but perhaps it will seem to if I get up and dress."

A few hours later found them at the foot of the gang-plank of the steamer, eagerly scanning the faces of the passengers who were coming ashore. But although love has keen eyesight, it failed to see the beloved object this time, and Marjorie's face grew very white as the flow of people thinned, and Dr. Prior was not among them.

"I'll go aboard and see," said Rodman, "there may be some mistake, and he may not have come up by this ship. But the purser can set me straight."

"Yes, do; and we will wait here," said Margaret.

"Do you think he has missed the steamer?" asked Marjorie.

"He may have done so, for so many things often occur to alter one's plans."

"But I am sure he would have sent some word," said Marjorie.

"He may not have found time to do so before sailing. But here comes Rodman, and now we shall learn all about it."

"Is he on board? Did he come?" cried Marjorie, springing toward him.

"No, not by this ship," he replied, but gave Margaret a quick glance, which told her to ask no questions just then. "You see," he continued, "those people down there are dead slow, and so I dare say, he has missed connections somehow, and we will soon have a letter explaining all."

Marjorie said not one word, but her quivering lips warned Margaret that she, herself, must keep up a pretense of cheerfulness, however great her misgivings were. Her heart ached for Marjorie, but she kept up a steady flow of conversation, and not until they reached the Grand Central Station did she find an opportunity to speak with Rodman privately. Leaving Marjorie while she went with him, ostensibly to purchase a basket of fruit for her mother, she said:

"Now tell me what you learned on board."

"The very worst I could learn: Dr. Prior was booked to sail on this ship, but was taken ill immediately he went on board, and with what was supposed to be the dreaded fever. Indeed, he was so ill that the ship's doctor ordered him taken ashore and placed in the hospital, as he considered it dangerous for him to attempt the journey, to say nothing of the danger of infection."

"Oh, my little girl! my little girl!" said Margaret. "How shall I tell her; how shall I tell her?"

"Don't until we get home. It can do no good, and the good Lord only knows what the effect will be, and only he can help her," and Rodman's handsome face looked as it had looked only once before, and that was when his own father lay as poor Marjorie's was no doubt lying at that moment.

Marjorie received the evil tidings very quietly and made no moan, but from that hour the girl seemed utterly crushed.

Rodman gave up everything in order to learn all that he could concerning Dr. Prior, and telegrams carried messages as fast as electricity would take them. From the ship's purser, they learned that Dr. Prior had seemed ill when he had come aboard, and had grown rapidly worse; so that by the time the ship was ready to sail he was a very sick man. Realizing the danger he was incurring in undertaking such a journey, the ship's doctor had had him conveyed to a hospital, where he could have proper care and skillful nursing.

After learning all he could, Rodman hurried back to Margaret. She listened very attentively, and then said:

"Poor little Marjorie; I will go at once and tell her."

"Marjorie, my dear one," she said, as she took her seat beside her; "listen as quietly as you can and try to believe that I will do all that lies in my power to help you bear this great sorrow. Dr. Prior is ill in Galveston, but how ill we, of course, cannot tell; probably seriously; and I can realize just how hard it is for you to bear this news. But be sure that we will do all we can to keep you and ourselves informed of his condition, and will keep you with us until he is able to return."

Marjorie had not spoken a word thus far, and now said in a strange, hoarse voice:

"Suppose he is never able to come back, Miss Drake; what will become of me? He is all I have."

"We will try to believe that all will end well, dear."

"But he is all alone, and has no one to care for him; and I am so far away."

"My dear girl, he will be well cared for, Dr. Foster assured Rodman of that."

"It is not that, Miss Drake; I dare say he will have every attention, but think what it means; no one to care if he never got well; no one to care what happened to him, and—here Marjorie paused, arose to her feet, and looking at Margaret as one has sometimes seen a wounded animal look, covered her face with her hands, and said with a low cry of intense anguish:

"I cannot bear it; oh, I cannot bear it; Papa Checa, dear Papa Checa, come back to me," and fell at Margaret's feet.

Margaret was thoroughly alarmed, for Marjorie was not an emotional girl, and latterly had lost much of her former nervousness. But when she saw her so utterly prostrated she realized as she had never done before how intense was her love for her father, and how severe was this blow to her.

Consciousness was not quickly recovered, and when at last the girl was herself, she looked weak and ill, as she lay upon Margaret's couch, with the sympathetic girls in attendance, and Margaret offering consolation in every possible form.

When she was somewhat stronger, Margaret sat down beside her and said:

"Try not grieve so, dear one, for I am sure that all will end well."

"But I want to go to him, Miss Drake; I want to go to him. He needs me. No one loves him as I do, and no one can do for him what I can do. Just think! no one there cares anything about him, and there is not a single soul he knows."

"I know it, dear, but he will be well cared for."

"He may be, but he will want me. Please, please take me to him."

"My dear little girl, I wish I could, but you are in no condition to go."

"Yes I am, oh! yes I am; see!" and Marjorie sprang off the couch only to fall fainting into Margaret's arms. Now thoroughly alarmed, she quickly got Marjorie to bed and then summoned medical aid. Before he saw her, Margaret told the physician the circumstances connected with the case and of Marjorie's intense desire to go to her father, and added:

"But neither my mother nor myself think it safe for her to attempt it. Still, we will be entirely guided by your advice."

"So you want to go chasing off to Galveston, do you, little lady? Well, let me see what you have got to travel on. Just smoke this glass cigar for a minute or two, and don't bite the end off," he said, as he slipped his thermometer under Marjorie's tongue and then took her trembling hand in his to count the bounding pulse.

Marjorie's shining eyes never left his,

and the instant he had taken her temperature, she said:

"I may go, may I not?"

"We'll see; we'll see," said the doctor, going into the adjoining room, ostensibly to wash his thermometer. Margaret followed him.

"It is simply out of the question," he said positively, in reply to her questioning look. "Her temperature is 103 degrees at this very moment. Has she been a delicate child?"

"No, but a very sensitive and highly strung one, and until recently her life has been rather an unnatural one for a young girl."

"I thought so. No, she must not undertake such a journey. If she should, I'd not be answerable for the consequences. Keep her very quiet, and don't under any pretext allow her to leave her bed until I give her permission to do so."

After leaving the necessary medicines the doctor took his leave and Margaret returned to Marjorie.

"Did he say I could go—did he?"

"No, dear, he thinks it would be very unwise for you to attempt it."

Marjorie fell back upon her pillow and the tears came into her eyes. Presently she started up:

"Miss Drake, will you go? You can do almost as much as I can, and he is fond of you. Please say 'yes,' oh! please say 'yes.'"

"I, Marjorie! Could I be of use or make you happier by going?"

"Yes, Miss Drake, you could, and I should feel so much easier if I knew you were with him, for you could write to me every day, and I know that you would tell me the truth. Will you go? Will you? I'll die if you don't." And poor Marjorie clasped her trembling hands imploringly.

Margaret took the poor little hands in her own firm grasp, and, looking into the girl's wild, beseeching eyes, said:

"Yes, dear, I will go."

"Thank you, oh! thank you so much," cried Marjorie, as a look of great relief overspread her countenance.

"And now while I go to have a talk with mamma about it, I want you to lie quietly and rest. I will darken the room, and I hope you will be able to sleep a little."

CHAPTER XIV

For Marjorie's Sake

"MAMMA, may I speak to you a moment?" she asked as she stopped at her mother's door.

"Certainly, dear; if my advice can help you in any way, I am only too glad to give it."

They went into Margaret's bed-room, and turning to her mother, she said without an instant's hesitation:

"Mamma, I am going to Galveston."

"You, Margaret, and alone! I cannot permit it; you must be insane."

"No, mamma, I am not insane, only determined to do all in my power for that poor child. Only think, mamma, of her position. She has no one in the world but her father, and she has begged me to go to him in her stead. Miss Carver is powerless to do the first thing for her, and for six months she has looked to me for everything. So shall I fail her now? She has won my love as I never supposed it would be possible for any one to win it. Moreover, Dr. Prior has been more than kind to me, and has reposed the most implicit confidence in me. Everything has been left to my management, and never by word or look has any act of mine been questioned. Indeed, I have received far more credit than I deserved in many cases; for they have both been so grateful for little acts which were plainly and simply a part of my duty."

"Yes, Margaret, I am aware of that, and profoundly grateful to Dr. Prior for his consideration; but can even that demand so great a sacrifice as you now contemplate? Think one moment, my child, you are only a young girl yourself, and will surely encounter much that is, to say the least, unpleasant if you start on such a wild journey as this, entirely alone. No, it cannot be."

"Mamma, please listen to me: I am no longer a child, but nearly twenty-five years of age. I have traveled a great deal, and often alone. Moreover, this is not a savage land, but a highly civilized one, in which a gentlewoman can go anywhere and meet with only the most courteous

A Trained Nurse Discovered Its Effect

No one is in better position to know the value of food and drink than a trained nurse.

Speaking of coffee, a nurse of Wilkes Barre, Pa., writes: "I used to drink strong coffee myself, and suffered greatly from headaches and indigestion. While on a visit to my brothers I had a good chance to try Postum Cereal Food Coffee, for they drink it altogether in place of ordinary coffee. In two weeks after using Postum I found I was much benefited, and finally my headaches disappeared, and also the indigestion."

"Naturally I have since used Postum among my patients, and have noticed a marked benefit where coffee has been left off and Postum used."

"I observe a curious fact about Postum used among mothers. It greatly helps the flow of milk in cases where coffee is inclined to dry it up, and where tea causes nervousness."

"I find trouble in getting servants to use Postum properly. They must always see it before it has been boiled long enough. It should be boiled 15 or 20 minutes and served with cream, when it is certainly a delicious beverage. Mrs. Ella C. Burns, 309 E. 5th St., Wilkes Barre, Pa."

By Love's Sweet Rule

atment. Do you think it will prove exception in my case? But I shall not alone; I shall have Johnson accompany me; he is a host in himself and will own exactly what to do for Dr. Prior, and will look after me with all the solicitude one old hen would show for her one solitary chick. So, mamma, you see that I am not so mad after all, am I?" and she took her mother's face in her hands and looked into the eyes which were so like her own.

"It is so sudden, and so very unusual," said Mrs. Drake, wavering.

"Yes, I am forced to admit that it is so; but the conditions are unusual also, and desperate cases require desperate remedies. If anything should happen to Dr. Prior I should feel that I had failed in my duty when I was most sorely needed. It is a very simple thing to do well when everything runs smoothly, but when a crisis like the present arises, it is a very different matter. Don't say no, mother dear, but wish me God-speed. Take care of my little girl for me, and help me to bring her happiness if I can," and Margaret looked at her mother with a world of song resolve and affection in her beautiful face.

"My dear one, go; and may the dear God guard and guide you," and for a moment Mrs. Drake held her daughter in a close embrace.

"Thank you, mother, I can go with a clear conscience now, and that gives wonderful strength. I shall make my plans once, and Marjorie will be greatly comforted, I am sure."

"Oh! I am so glad! I am so glad!" said Marjorie, when she learned that Margaret would go at once.

"Be sure that I shall bring Dr. Prior to the very moment I can safely do so, and in a day shall pass without your hearing from me; you believe me, do you not, dear?" said Margaret.

"Oh, Miss Drake, what should I do about you; what should I do? You are unsunshiny, and so good to me. You know that I love you better than any one in the world next to papa, don't you?" and Marjorie clasped her arms around Margaret's neck, and held her as though she would never let her go.

"I believe you do, dear; and it is that which is now sending me South, that I may prove to you how greatly I value your affection. Be a brave girl, and try to let mamma fill my place during my absence."

The morning of the twenty-second Margaret and Johnson started on their way southward. Rodman had gone immediately to Mountvale to explain the situation to Johnson, and good as his word, he responded at once. And, as Margaret had said, he was a host in himself. In no time he had gathered together everything it was possible to carry, and with his long service led him to believe Dr. Prior might need. And what that monstrous English "grip" held, no one would ever dare guess, and he felt that he was prepared for a siege.

Rodman was careful to secure tickets sight through, and so they had little to think of.

It was a strange experience for Margaret, and although outwardly calm, she felt many misgivings, and hardly dared herself dwell upon what lay at the end of her journey.

But Johnson saved her any care or responsibility, and in due time Galveston was reached. Going straight to a hotel, Johnson engaged a room for her, and then made instant inquiry for the hospital to which Dr. Foster (the ship's doctor) had told them Dr. Prior had been conveyed. It was some distance from the hotel, but directly she had dined and taken a short rest, Margaret, with Johnson in attendance, set out.

"Yes, such a patient was there, and very ill."

"Could they see him?"

"The attendant would inquire."

With beating heart she awaited the doctor's return. He was accompanied by a kind-faced physician who asked if she was a relative of the patient.

"No," replied Margaret, "but here in behalf of his only daughter, who is very ill, and for whom the journey from New York was impossible. This man has been in Dr. Prior's employ for many years. I beg that you will let us see Dr. Prior."

The doctor looked at her sharply from under his shaggy eyebrows, and said: "Are you aware that you would be incurring great danger?"

"Yes, but we are willing to do so for his daughter's sake; she is his only relative, and so ill that it was impossible for her to come to him."

"Is she the Marjorie for whom he is constantly asking?"

"She is, and I wish with all my heart that she could respond to his call; but, perhaps, I may be able to soothe him, since he will naturally associate me with her. Johnson, I do not wish to influence you, or have you expose yourself to the danger of contagion, if you would prefer not to do so; and you must do exactly as you consider wisest."

"Indade, an' with the doctor's consent, I'll see the dear master as quick as I can; and I've small fear that the faver will lay hold of me."

But the doctor would not consent to Johnson seeing Dr. Prior, and the faithful fellow was sorely disappointed.

She followed the doctor along the corridors and through several wards, till at last they came to a room at the further end of the building where, in a private room, they found Dr. Prior.

It seemed hard to believe that the wan, pallid creature lying upon the bed, could be the same man who had left them eight weeks before, and it was no wonder that Margaret laid her hand upon the table for support as she said: "Poor, poor Marjorie!" for it seemed as though life must already have left that shadow of a human being before her.

Dr. Prior seemed to have caught the name, faintly as it was spoken, and opening his eyes looked around with the unrecognized look of those ill with fever. Then languidly turning his head from side to side he murmured: "Marjorie! Marjorie!"

"You shall see her very soon!" said Margaret, soothingly, as she went to the bedside to lay her hand upon the burning forehead.

THE CHURCH CHOIR ZOBO BAND OF PATERSON, N. J.

This band was organized by the church choir and Organist, Mr. W. F. Miller, as a means of raising money for Church and Missionary purposes. It was a success from the start, and has even participated in Sunday service. The band is very proficient, and is now taking outside engagements. They find it a profitable variation from routine work. Many Church choirs have these Zobo Bands, and find them of value. As a means of earning money for church purposes, a "Zobo Concert" invariably draws full houses. Bands can play any piece of music in all parts by ear or by note as preferred.

Although the Quartette had opportunity for but one rehearsal the effort met unbounded enthusiasm and was voted a great success. We are now considering the organization of a full orchestra for next winter's entertainment, and I write this to ask you to forward me a select list of 12 to 15 instruments."

Wm. J. Siemers, leader of the Beacon Light Zobo Band, Baltimore, Md., writes: "I send you to-day copy of a Baltimore paper, giving a very complimentary notice of the 'Zobo' Concert given last night by the Beacon Light Zobo Band, composed of members of the choir of the Scott Street United Brethren Church. VIII. Address all communications intended for this department, Editor The Mail-Bag, The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

These Questions will be Answered June 19

1. What is the best way in which one can demonstrate his or her true patriotism?
2. What is the origin of the superstitions connected with the horseshoe?
3. When Jacob kissed Rachel and lifted up his voice and went" (see Gen. 29: 11) what was the cause of his weeping?
4. In seeking the conversion of Jews, is it best to employ Gentiles or converted Jews?
5. When a polygamist in a heathen land is converted, should the Christian missionary make it a condition of admitting him to the Church that he put away all his wives but one, and if so, on what Scriptural ground?

Questions of the Week

1. Is it true Christian philosophy to say that "Whatever happens is for the best?"

x. I am not so sure about that; but it is true Christian philosophy to act upon the principle, that "All things work together for good to them that love God." To those who strive to know and obey God's will, he will make all things work together for their good. Even though enemies combine to do us harm, God will see us through, if we trust him and do our duty. Such trials often teach true Christians their finest lessons in discipline and help them to attain a greater eminence in the Christian life, from which they can gain a better view of God's works and realize more of his love, mercy and wisdom. The persons who accept God as their helper can always slay the lion. Afterwards, when viewing the dead lion, like Samson of old, they can always find the sweetest of honey.

J. N. I. TARPLEY.

No. Many things happen which can never be considered for the best. The things often happen because we are wilful, and act without stopping to think of results. God, although he can see the effect, allows our actions, because we are free agents. Take, for instance, the sorrow and suffering caused by war, or a man's life blasted by drinking; can such things be for the best? Think of the conditions without the fighting, without the drinking, and which would have brought forth the greater good? No! Not the best always happens; but when the various things do happen, God, in his goodness, causes all to work for good "to them that love him." The best that can happen under such circumstances does happen. FANNY ASHENDEN.

2. Is it reasonable to suppose that an educated person is better fitted to enjoy heaven than one who is uneducated—assuming that both are equally advanced in the Christian life?

Yes, just as we are convinced that an educated person can find far greater enjoyment upon earth than one who is uneducated, so it would follow that the same experience would be his in heaven. The trained eye of the former sees beauties unseen by his less favored brother. His ear detects harmonies unheard by the other. All his senses, refined and cultivated, find pleasure unknown and undreamed of by the latter. When we enter the realm of the intellect and emotions, through these, as on earth, he will find rarest joys that, to the uneducated man, are "as things that are not"—deep, unspeakable thoughts and feelings, called forth by "all that God has prepared for them that love him." All will be intensified, we believe, and if one is more fitted, more susceptible to enjoyment here, will he not be in far greater degree in heaven? ELLAE JAYE.

There is nothing in the Bible that gives us reasonable grounds to believe that an educated person will enjoy heaven or be more useful there than an uneducated one. When we leave this world we go out of our imperfection into Christ's perfection. If education were necessary to our perfect heavenly life, would not Christ have spent his time in the schools of learning instead of at his father's carpenter bench? No, no!

It is the heart and not the brain That to the highest doth attain.

St. Paul says, "If I have all knowledge, but have not love it profiteth me nothing." Solomon says, "Of making books there is no end, and much study is a weariness of the flesh. This is the end of the whole matter, fear God and morality of the country. It shows a respect for woman hardly known in the Old World and a recognition of her intellectual equality with man. Love and marriage will always be important issues, but pure friendship should not be tabooed between the sexes. The fact that one or both parties may simulate an infatuation for the other, may seem to be against such intercourse, but it is presumed that the young lady in this case is sensible and well disposed. L. T. RIGHTSELL.

Yes, if the gentleman understands that is all there is to it. It would be decidedly wrong to accept those attentions that might mean a deeper feeling than friendship; thus letting him deceive himself, simply for the pleasure or protection of his company. It would be impossible for many young ladies to go out evenings, if they must go only with a father, a brother, or a betrothed, especially in the country. M. E. C.

is an object lesson of much that is good, they are founded upon a belief in the De and that they are to a large degree preparate to entrance into a Christian life. There so many good and pious church members secret societies that I cannot believe they the Church harm. L. T. R.

5. Name something to which Christ, believe Satan and wicked men are all compared?

A lion, a star, a rock and a king. Lion—Christ in Rev. 5: 5: "Weep not; behold the lion that is of the tribe of Judah, Root of David, hath overcome"; and Ps. 3: Believers, Prov. 28: 1: "The wicked flee when no man pursueth, but the righteous are bold as a lion." Satan, I. Peter 5: 8: "Be sober, watchful, your adversary, the Devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom may devour." Wicked men, Ps. 10: 9: "Lurketh in the covert as a lion in his den." Ps. 17: 12: "He is like a lion that is greedy of his prey, and as it were a young lion lurketh in secret places."

A STAR—Christ, Num. 24: 17: "There shall come forth a Star out of Jacob, and a scepter shall rise out of Israel." Rev. 22: 16: "I am the root and offspring of David, the bright morning star." Believers, Dan. 12: 3: "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever." Satan, Rev. 9: 1: "And I saw a star fallen from heaven fallen unto the earth; and there was given to him the key of the pit of the abyss." Wicked men, Jude 12, 13: "These are they who are—wandering stars, for whom the blackness of darkness hath been reserved forever."

A ROCK—Christ, Ps. 18: 2: "The Lord is my Rock and my fortress and my deliverer, my God, my strong Rock, in him will I trust." Believers, Is. 51: 1: "Hearken to me, ye that follow after righteousness, ye that seek the Lord; look unto the Rock from whence were hewn," and Isa. 32: 2. Satan, Deut. 30, 31, 37. "How should two put ten thousand to flight, except their Rock had sold them?" For their Rock is not as our Rock, even our enemies themselves being judges. We are their Gods, the Rock in which they trusted." Wicked Men, Ezek. 26: 4, 14. "A I will make thee a bare Rock, for I will have spoken it." Also Isa. 31: 9.

KING—Christ, I. Tim. 6: 15: "Who is blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords." A GREAT SERMONIC LIBRARY

Over 8,500 Pages of Sermons by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage

WE are pleased to announce to our readers that, after nearly three years of arduous labor on the part of Dr. Talmage and a large corps of CHRISTIAN HERALD assistants, and at an enormous outlay of money, the Entire Set of Twenty Volumes, comprising Over Five Hundred of Dr. Talmage's Sermons, was recently completed, and have since taken an honored and well-deserved place in many a home. The publication of twenty volumes of sermonic literature is truly an event extraordinary, unique and unprecedented. In this remarkable work every volume contains more than 400, and the complete set, 8,571 pages. Each volume has an illuminated title-page, is handsomely bound in maroon silk-finished cloth, with gold-stamping and gilt-top, and the paper is deckle-edged. Volume I. contains a fine, full-page portrait of Dr. Talmage. We are confident that the host of readers of his sermons will hail with unbounded enthusiasm this opportunity to secure for themselves a set of these priceless volumes, containing over 500 sermons, abounding in spiritual helpfulness, matchless eloquence, valuable anecdote and sublime pathos. Within their pages there is consolation for the sorrowing, an uplift for the fallen, hope for the despairing, an arousing for the indifferent, and a glorious course indicated for the zealous and devoted Christian.

One cannot read the sermons contained in these volumes without gaining a vast amount of knowledge, increased vocabulary and improved diction.

The large and legible type used (long primer), is a feature seldom found in any publication of this magnitude. Too much emphasis cannot be put upon the value of the index, which consists briefly, as follows: The 500 texts of sermons; twenty pages of Titles and Texts; forty-four pages of Anecdotal and Historical Illustrations, and 235 pages of Index to Subjects. The index is in compact and convenient form and the type used is nonpareil.

Each volume measures 5½ x 8½ inches when closed, and the twenty volumes require shelf space 32 inches long. Their combined weight is about thirty-five pounds. The price of the Complete Set is Twenty Dollars. The entire set will be sent securely boxed, either by freight or express, charges not prepaid, on receipt of only one dollar down and one dollar a month until paid. Ten per cent. discount will be allowed when the purchaser pays spot cash. All orders for this great Sermonic Library should be addressed:

and keep his Commandments; for this is the whole duty of man." In Rev. 7: 14 we are told, "These are they which came out of the great tribulation, and they have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God; and they serve him day and night in his temple." The one who loves God most, and is most unselfish, will enjoy heaven most. My observation among the higher schools of learning is that they do not develop godliness. It is hard for one who has a good place in this world to realize that the soul of the veriest tramp is just as precious to God as the soul of the most refined and highly educated person. I have read that Lincoln used to say "That God must love the common people, for he made so many of them." Yet the higher education is out of the reach of most of them. MRS. M. E. CRAVATH.

3. Is it right for a lady to accept the attentions of a man as escort, simply and solely because she wants to attend church, concert, lecture, or literary society?

It is perfectly right, provided she does not use the opportunity for flirtation. Let her have it understood that her motives in accepting his attentions are free from thoughts of love making, and that she will not accept favors involving a pecuniary outlay, except on rare occasions and when offered purely in the spirit of friendship. In America, and especially of late years, this sort of intercourse between the sexes has become quite frequent and is a healthful sign as regards the ethics

4. Are secret societies a hurt and hindrance to our churches?

As oath-bound secret organizations of any character whatever are a blow at individual liberty, a menace to our free institutions and antagonistic to the spirit of Christianity, they are decidedly a hindrance rather than a help to the Church. To many of its adherents it takes the place of the Church, and by some are claimed to be better than the Church. Christ said "In secret have I said nothing," and it is difficult to conceive how men can take a solemn oath to forever conceal and never reveal things of which they are at the time ignorant. Secret societies cause men to neglect their homes and their Church for associations and surroundings far from being conducive to their best good, and thus they miss both the highest duties and privileges that fall to the lot of man, and thereby they miss God's "best." WALTER W. HUBBARD.

There are two sides to this question which has so often been discussed. In favor of the affirmative, it may be said that secret societies make demands upon one's time that might be given to the Church, that they have workings which are so attractive as to powerfully influence those who love ritualistic ceremonies, that they attempt a greater social development than the Church, and that they draw from members the means that would otherwise go to the Church. In favor of the negative, it may be said that they influence greatly for good and philanthropy those who care nothing for the Church, that their symbolism

R. J. A., Southwold, Ont. There being no authentic portrait of Christ, is it right to make and publish imaginary pictures of him?

When the artist, consecrating his powers, puts on canvas his highest ideal of the Saviour as he looked when on earth, there can be no impiety or irreverence. The sacred then of the earthly life and ministry of Jesus has inspired the greatest painters of the ages and their works, displayed in the public places of highest honor, have helped multitudes to a better understanding of the Gospel narrative.

E. C. B., Joppa, Md. Are all poor persons worthy of charity?

Not all, although it is sometimes very difficult to discriminate. "The deserving poor" is an expression commonly used to distinguish that class from the undeserving. Drunkards, spendthrifts, gamblers, and those who will not work cannot be regarded as equally deserving with those who have become poor through sickness or misfortune. Still, where there is a doubt, it is best to give the claimant the benefit of the doubt.

A FARMER'S GREAT WORK FOR HUMANITY

The Illinois Manual Training School Farm at Glenwood, the Fruit of One Man and Woman's Sacrifice

WHAT the gracious habit of giving grows with our times few can doubt who have kept themselves informed of the magnificent generousities of the past quarter of a century, and in particular of the past decade. Rich men, with a stroke of the pen, toss off millions for "sweet charity's sake." The middle classes stint not themselves in doing good, according to their incomes; and the very poor will not be prevented from casting their pennies into the Lord's treasury. It does not frequently occur, however, that a wealthy man and woman, in their passion for creating humanity, surrender during their lifetime what represents almost their all, that evil may be prevented and the general good be served. About twenty years from Chicago, a great institution, doing a magnificent work, bears witness to such nobility of spirit and deed on the part of Milton George and Alice, his wife, who, in the year 1889, conveyed to the Illinois Industrial School for Boys, their farm and its improvements, worth $100,000, representing their home and the larger part of their possessions, on condition that the corporation should provide was led to speak of the history of the institution which he founded, he said:

"Chicago, like all large cities, has its waifs and strays; I believe it has more dependent children than any other city of its size. Years ago it became a serious matter as to what should be done with them. Under the old court system—which has recently been replaced by the excellent system of the Juvenile Court, of which you have published an account—a child who had committed a petty offence, or possibly no offence at all, might be brought up for trial along with hardened criminals and sent to the Bridewell in their company, the inevitable into the world branded, as it were, with the stigma of having been an inmate of a house of correction. A term on the Illinois Manual Training School Farm carries with it instead of reproach, the distinction that should go with a certificate from a first-class educational institution. Its purpose, too, is to direct the energies of youth into agricultural and pastoral pursuits, and thus accomplish for our country what the public schools and the colleges are not doing—swell the number of intelligent tillers of the soil, the number of those who plant orchards or who raise flocks and herds. The Farm School at Glenwood saves city waifs from becoming habitual criminals, and bridges the gap between the farm and the agricultural colleges. Hundreds of our boys, after receiving a reasonable degree of training and fitness, are placed in good country homes, with a fair start in an enlarged vision for future growth and opportunity which insures their capability for filling, in the near future, many very important positions in life.

Mr. George, who had made his money at farming, is an enthusiastic agriculturist and philanthropist. His residence in Chicago during his editorial management of The Western Rural, then one of the leading agricultural papers of the country, gave him ample opportunity to observe the life of the boys of the street, and he became deeply concerned with the problems presented. They affected the boys themselves and as they would affect the nation when these boys should become men. On the occasion of a recent visit to this office, when he

About seventeen years ago, I began to devise a way for taking care of juveniles, vagrant or dependent, for whom there was no better place than the streets or a prison, and finally succeeded in founding an institution for that purpose. We determined that its very name should remove it, as far as possible, from the construction of being a penal institution. It is not such. It is purely formative, and not punitive or reformatory in its character. We are careful to have it understood that we are taking a class worthy of respect, and so we do not send our boys out Since then the work has grown so rapidly in public favor that many large sums have been subscribed. $50,000 was invested in the main building, $13,000 in a receiving hospital and cottage, and a number of cottages have been erected at a cost of $7,000 each. Dr. Gunsaulus, who takes a great deal of interest in the institution, raised the money for one of these—the Plymouth Cottage.

SUCCESSFUL HUNTERS

TEXT, Genesis 10: 9:

HE WAS A MIGHTY HUNTER BEFORE THE LORD

IN our day hunting is a sport; but in the lands and the times infested of wild beasts, it was a matter of life or death with the people. It was very different from going out on a sunshiny afternoon with a patent breech-loader, to shoot reed-birds on the flats, when Pollux and Achilles and Diomedes went out to clear the land of lions and panthers and bears. Xenophon grew eloquent in regard to the art of hunting. In the far East people, elephant-mounted, chased the tiger. Francis I. was called the father of hunting. And Moses, in my text, sets forth Nimrod as a hero, when it presents him with broad shoulders and shaggy apparel and sun-browned face, and arm bunched with muscle—"a mighty hunter before the Lord." I think he used the bow and the arrows with great success, practising archery.

I have thought if it is such a grand thing and such a brave thing to clear wild beasts out of a country, if it is not a better and braver thing to hunt down and destroy those great evils of society that are stalking the land with fierce eye, and bloody paw, and sharp tusk, and quick spring. I have wondered if there is not such a thing as Gospel archery, by which those who have been flying from the truth, may be

and heaven. The Lord Jesus in his sermon used the art of angling for an illustration, when he said, "I will make you fishers of men." And so I think I have authority for using hunting as an illustration of Gospel truth; and I pray God that there may be many a man enlisted in the work who shall begin to study Gospel archery, of whom it may, after a while, be said, "He was a mighty hunter before the Lord."

How much awkward Christian work there is done in the world! How many good people there are who drive souls away from Christ instead of bringing them to him! All their fingers are thumbs—religious blunderers who upset more than they right. Their gun has a crooked barrel, and kicks as it goes off. They are like a clumsy comrade who goes along with skilful hunters; at the very moment he ought to be most quiet, he is crackling an alder, or falling over a log and frightening away the game. How few Christian people have ever learned how the Lord Jesus Christ at the well went from talking about a cup of water to the most practical religious truths, which won the woman's soul for God! Jesus in the wilderness was breaking bread to the people. I think it was very good bread; it was very light bread, and the yeast had done its work thoroughly. Christ, after he had broken the bread, said to the people, "Beware of the yeast, or of the leaven of the Pharisees." So natural a transition it was, and how easily they all understood him! But how few Christian people there are who understand how to fasten the truths of God and religion to the souls of men!

The archers of olden time studied their art. They were very precise in the matter. The old books gave special directions as to how an archer should go, and as to what an archer should do. He must stand erect and firm, his left foot a little in advance of the right foot. With his left hand he must take hold of the bow in the middle, and then with the three fingers and the thumb of his right hand he should lay hold the arrow and affix it to the string—so precise was the direction given. But how clumsy we are about religious work! How little skill and care we exercise! How often our arrows miss the mark! I am glad that there are institutions established in many of the cities of our land, where men may learn the art of doing good—studying spiritual archery, and become known as "mighty hunters before the Lord!"

The Hunter's Weapons

In the first place, if you want to be effectual in doing good, you must be very sure of your weapon. There was something very fascinating about the archery of olden times. Perhaps you do not know what they could do with the bow and arrow. Why, the chief battles fought by the English Plantagenets were with the long-bow. They would take the arrow of polished wood, and feather it with the plume of a bird, and then it would fly from the bowstring of plaited silk. The bloody fields of Agincourt, and Solway Moss, and Neville's Cross heard the loud thrum of the archer's bowstring. Now, my Christian friends, we have a mightier weapon than that. It is the arrow of the Gospel; it is a sharp arrow; it is a straight arrow; it is feathered from the wing of the dove of God's Spirit; it flies from a bow made out of the wood of the cross. As far as I can estimate or calculate, it has brought down four hundred millions of souls. Paul knew how to bring the notch of that arrow on to the bowstring, and its whir was heard through the Corinthian theatres, and through the court-room, until the knees of Felix knocked together. It was that arrow that stuck in Luther's heart when he cried out, "Oh, my sins! Oh, my sins!" If it strike a man in the head, it kills his scepticism; if it strike him in the heel, it will turn his step; if it strike him in the heart, he throws up his hands, as did one of old when wounded in the battle, crying, "O Galilean! thou hast conquered!"

Penetrating Arrows

In the armory of the Earl of Pembroke, there are old corselets which show that the arrow of the English used to go through the breastplate, through the body of the warrior and out through the backplate. What a symbol of that Gospel which is sharper than a two-edged sword, piercing to the dividing asunder of soul and body, and of the joints and marrow! Would to God we had more faith in that Gospel! The humblest man in the world, if he had enough faith in it, could bring a hundred souls to Christ—perhaps five hundred. Just in proportion as this age seems to believe less and less in it, I believe more and more in it. What are men about that they will not accept their own deliverance? There is nothing proposed by men that can do anything like this Gospel.

The religion of Ralph Waldo Emerson was the philosophy of icicles; the religion of Theodore Parker was a sirocco of the desert, covering up the soul with dry sand; the religion of Renan was the romance of believing almost nothing; the religion of the Huxleys and the Spencers is merely a pedestal on which human philosophy sits shivering in the night of the soul, looking up to the stars, offering no help to the nations that crouch and groan at the base. Tell me where there is one man who has rejected that Gospel for another, who is thoroughly satisfied, and helped, and contented in his scepticism, and I will take the car to-morrow and ride five hundred miles to see him. The full power of the Gospel has not yet been touched. As a sportsman throws up his hand and catches the ball flying through the air, just so easily will this Gospel after a while catch this round world flying from its orbit, and bring it back to the heart of Christ. Give it full swing, and it will pardon every sin, heal every wound, cure every trouble, emancipate every slave, and ransom every nation. Ye Christian men and women who go out this afternoon to do Christian work, as you go into the Sunday Schools and the lay-preaching stations, and the penitentiaries, and the asylums, I want you to feel that you bear in your hand a weapon, compared with which the lightning has no speed, and avalanches have no heft, and the thunderbolts of heaven have no power; it is the arrow of the omnipotent Gospel. Take careful aim! Pull the arrow clear back until the head strikes the bow! Then let it fly. And may the slain of the Lord be many!

Seeking the Lost

Again, if you want to be skilful in spiritual archery, you must hunt in unfrequented and secluded places. Why does the hunter go three or four days in the Pennsylvania forests or over Raquette Lake into the wilds of the Adirondacks? It is the only way to do. The deer are shy, and one "bang" of the gun clears the forest. From the California stage you see, as you go over the plains, here and there, a coyote trotting along, almost within range of the gun—sometimes quite within range of it. No one cares for that; it is worthless. The good game is hidden and secluded. Every hunter knows that. So many of the souls that will be of most worth for Christ and of most value to the Church are secluded. They do not come in your way. You will have to go where they are. Yonder they are down in that cellar; yonder they are up in that garret—far away from the door of any church; the Gospel arrow has not been pointed at them. The tract distributor and the city missionary sometimes just catch a glimpse of them, as a hunter through the trees gets a momentary sight of a partridge or roebuck. The trouble is, we are waiting for the game to come to us. We are not good hunters. We are standing on some street or road, expecting that the timid antelope will come up and eat out of our hand. We are expecting that the prairie-fowl will light on our church-steeple. It is not their habit. If the Church should wait ten millions of years for the world to come in and be saved, it will wait in vain. The world will not come. What the Church wants now is to lift its feet from damask ottomans, and put them in the stirrups. The Church wants not so much cushions as it wants saddle-bags and arrows. We have got to put aside the gown and the kid-gloves, and put on the hunting-shirt. We want a pulpit on wheels. We have been fishing so long in the brooks that run under the shadow of the Church that the fish know us, and the avoid the hook, and escape as soon as we come to the bank, while yonder is Upper Saranac and Big Tupper Lake, where the first swing of the Gospel net would break it for the multitude of the fishes. There is outside work to be done. What is it that I see in the backwoods? It is a tent. The hunters have made clearing, and camped out. What do they care if they have wet feet, or if they have nothing but a pine branch for a pillow, or for the northeast storm? If a moose the darkness steps into the lake to drink, they hear right away. If a loon cry in the midnight, they hear. So, in the service of God, we have exposed work. We have got to camp out and rough it. We are putting our care on the comparatively few people who go to church. What are we doing for the millions who do not come? Have they no souls? Are they sinless that they need no pardon? Are there no dead in the houses, that they need no comfort? Are they cut off from God, to go into eternity—no wing to bear them, no light to cheer them, no welcome to greet them? I hear to-day, surging up from a groan that comes through our Christian assemblage and through our beautiful churches; and it blots out this scene from my eyes to-day, as by the mists of great Niagara, for the dash and the plunge of the great torrents of life dropping down into the fathomless and thundering abyss of suffering and woe. I sometimes think that just as God blotted out the churches Thyatira and Corinth and Laodicea because of the sloth and stolidity, he will blot out American and English Christianity, and raise on the ruins a stalwart, awake missionary church that can take the full meaning of that command, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature. He that believeth and baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned"—a command, you see, punctuated with throne of heaven and a dungeon of hell.

I remark, further, if you want to succeed in spiritual archery you must have courage. If the hunter starts with trembling hand or shoulder that flinches with fear instead of his taking the catamount, the catamount takes him. What would become of the Greenlander if, when out hunting for the bear, he should stand shivering with terror on an iceberg? What would have become of Du Chaillu and Livingstone in the African thicket, with a faint heart and a weak knee? When a panther comes within twenty paces of you, and it has its eye on you, and it has squatted for the fearful spring, "Steady there! Courage, oh ye spiritual archers! There are great masters of iniquity prowling all around about the community. Shall we not in the strength of God go forth to combat them? We not only need more heart, but more backbone. What is the Church of God that it should fear to look in the eye any transgression? There is a Bengal tiger of drunkenness that prowls around; instead of attacking it, how many of us hide under the church-pew or the communion table! There is so much invested in it we are afraid to assault it; millions of lars in barrels, in vats, in spigots, in corkscrews, in palaces with marble floors and Italian-top tables, chased ice-coolers, and in the strychnine, and the wood, and the tartaric acid, and the nux vomica, it goes to make up our "pure" American drinks. I look with wondering eyes on the "Heidelberg tun." It is a great liquor-vat of Germany, which is said to hold eight hundred hogsheads of wine, and only three times in a hundred years it has been filled. But, as I stood and looked at it, I said to myself, "That is nothing—eight hundred hogsheads. Why, our American vat holds a million two hundred thousand barrels of strong drink, and we keep three hundred thousand men with nothing to do but to see that it is filled." Oh! to attack is great monster of Intemperance, and of fraud and uncleanness, requires you to rally all your Christian courage. Through the press, through the pulpit, through the platform you must assault it. Would to God that all our American Christians would band together, not for crack-brained fanaticism, but for Christian reform! I think it was in 1793 that the greatest hunting-party that was ever projected. There were ten thousand armed men in that hunting-party. There were camels, and horses, and elephants. On the princes rode, and royal ladies under exquisite housings, and five hundred coolies waited upon the train, and dolate places of India were invaded by this excursion, a rhinoceros, and deer, and elephant fell under the stroke of the sabre and bullet. After a while the party brought back trophies worth fifty thousand rupees, and left the wilderness of India ghastly with the slain bodies of wild beasts. Would to God that, instead of him and there a straggler going out to fight these great masters of iniquity in our country, the millions of membership of our churches would band together and hew in vain these great crimes that make the land frightful with their roar, and are fattening upon the bodies and souls of immortal men! Who is ready for such a party as that? Who will be a mighty hunter for the Lord?

Preserving the Trophies

remark, again, if you want to be successful in spiritual archery, you need not only to bring down the game, but bring it in. I think one of the most beautiful pictures of Thorwaldsen is his "Autumn." It represents a sportsman coming home, and standing under a grape-vine. He has a staff over his shoulder, and on the other end of that staff are hung a rabbit and a brace of birds. Every hunter brings home the game. No one would think of bringing down a roebuck or whipping up a stream for trout, and letting them lie in the woods. At the end of the camp is adorned with the treasures of the forest—beak, and fin, and antler.

If you go out to hunt for immortal souls, not only bring them down under the arrow of the Gospel, but bring them into the Church of God, the grand home and campment we have pitched this side the skies. Fetch them in; do not let them lie out in the open field. They need our prayers and sympathies and help. That is the meaning of the Church of God—help. Oh, ye hunters for the Lord! not only bring down the game, but bring it in.

Preparation Needed

If Mithridates liked hunting so well that for seven years he never went indoors, what enthusiasm ought we to have who are hunting for immortal souls! If Domitian practised archery until he could stand a boy down in the Roman amphitheatre with a hand out, the fingers spread apart, and then the king could shoot an arrow between the fingers without wounding them, to what drill and what practice ought we to subject ourselves in order to become spiritual archers and "mighty hunters before the Lord!" But let me say you will never work any better than you pray. The old archers took the bow, put one end of it down beside the foot, elevated the other end, and it was the rule that the bow should be just the size of the archer; if it were just his size, then he would go into the battle with confidence. Let me say that your power to project good in the world will correspond exactly to your own spiritual stature. In other words, the first thing, in preparation for Christian work, is personal consecration.

Oh for a closer walk with God,
A calm and heavenly frame,
A light to shine upon the road
That leads me to the Lamb.

I am sure that there are some men who at some time have been hit by the Gospel arrow. You felt the wound of that conviction, and you plunged into the world deeper; just as the stag, when the hounds are after it, plunges into Scroon Lake, expecting in that way to escape. Jesus Christ is on your track to-day, oh, impenitent man! not in wrath, but in mercy. Oh, ye chased and panting souls! here is the stream of God's mercy and salvation, where you may cool your thirst! Stop that chase of sin to-day. By the red fountain that leaped from the heart of my Lord, I bid you stop! There is mercy for you—mercy that pardons, mercy that heals, everlasting mercy. The twelve gates of God's love stand wide open. Enter and be forever safe.

The Deer-Leap

There is in a forest in Germany a place they call the "deer-leap"—two crags, about eighteen yards apart, between them a fearful chasm. This is called the "deer-leap," because once a hunter was on the track of a deer; it came to one of these crags: there was no escape for it from the pursuit of the hunter, and in utter despair it gathered itself up, and in the death-agony attempted to jump across. Of course it fell, and was dashed on the rocks far beneath. Here is a path to heaven. It is plain; it is safe. Jesus marks it out for every man to walk in. But here is a man who says, "I won't walk in that path; I will take my own way." He comes on up until he confronts the chasm that divides his soul from heaven. Now his last hour has come, and he resolves that he will leap that chasm from the heights of earth to the heights of heaven. Stand back now, and give him full swing, for no soul ever did that successfully. Let him try. Jump! He misses the mark, and he goes down, depth below depth, "destroyed without remedy." Men! angels! devils! what shall we call that place of awful catastrophe? Let it be known forever as THE SOUL'S DEATH-LEAP.

observatory, costing about $10,000. The Commercial Club of Chicago recently pledged itself to raise $125,000 for the enlargement of the institution, so that twice as many boys can be cared for as at present. Another striking evidence of public approbation of the work is that the club is donating $100,000 to start a similar school elsewhere. There can not be too many of them. I had the money to do it with, I should start another school in New York."

The present capacity of the school is three hundred. Since it was first opened, over three thousand boys, a large percentage of whom have been placed in farmers' families, have been admitted. Not only boys who were found without proper guardianship, or means of support, or who had committed some petty offence, make up the population of the school, but lads brought by parents who were unable to provide for them or unable to control them. In the last-named cases, the parents are expected to pay as much as they are able towards the support of their children. There are some inmates for whom the institution receives $2 to $8 a month; for others it receives nothing at all. For children committed by the county, $10 a month each is received from that source as long as the child remains in the school. When a home is found for him in a farmer's family the county is released. Boys from two to sixteen years old may be sent to the institution and be kept under its guardianship until twenty-one. The school has a flourishing kindergarten, numbering many tiny tots. The cottage plan is pursued, grouping the boys in companies not exceeding thirty in the different buildings, each cared for by a competent matron, acting under direction of General Superintendent Dudley, whose headquarters is in the Administration Building. In this building is also the main dining-room, seating six hundred boys. In the Agricultural Department, immense barns are filled with products of the farm, which supply a herd of dairy cows and other domestic animals with food. Incubators are kept in operation during the proper season of the year for food supplies and for the instruction and entertainment of the boys. A greenhouse furnishes the houses and grounds with an abundance of foliage plants and flowers, also plants for early setting in the vegetable garden. Each of the three hundred boys has a little plot of his own to cultivate and enjoy. There is an extensive apple orchard.

In the manual training department, boys are taught the use of wood-working tools; also they are taught iron-work, shoe-mending, etc. In the ordinary branches of common school instruction, the best teachers are employed. Military drill forms the basis of the discipline; on dress-parade the three hundred little men make a fine appearance; each company has its juvenile captain, and, as a result of this system, there is good order on the campus, in the dining-room and elsewhere. The Glenwood fife and drum corps and brass band is a proud squad of manly laddies, who can furnish excellent music on public and private occasions.

In the deed of conveyance which gave Mr. and Mrs. George's farm to its present noble uses, this clause occurs: "It is their suggestion that Christian ethics shall be taught, but they earnestly hope that no sectarian or social organization shall be permitted to control the management." Their wishes have been carried out. The simple evangelical teaching is strictly undenominational. The Sunday afternoon services at Glenwood are conducted by pastors of neighboring churches. Sunday School is held in the morning. Thus, the end in view is not merely the training of the hand, the eye and the intellect, but the development of the moral and spiritual nature—the upbuilding of a noble Christian manhood.

The Board of Directors is composed of prominent and wealthy men and women, who have spared no effort to make the institution the grand success which it undoubtedly is. The modest founder—with whom you might talk for hours about this school without discovering that he had any share in its creation—continues to take a warm personal interest in it. It is a pity that he has not, according to his generous wish, the means at command, to give to New York what he has given to Illinois.

OUR MISSIONARIES DEFENDED

DR. E. H. CONGER, U. S. Minister to China, has returned to this country. In an interview on his arrival in San Francisco, Mr. Conger made this statement, which may be regarded as authoritatively settling at rest the charges against the American Missionaries at Peking:

The Christian Missionaries in China have been grossly misrepresented. Very few things have been done by them of which any apology need be made. I do not say they did nothing that might not have been better done differently, but the stories of looting and collection of indemnities by fire are false. The animosity of the Chinese was directed against everything foreign.

"The mission indemnities were not collected by force in any instance. I advised the missionaries that as the various governments would probably not demand pay from China for damages suffered by native Christians, it would be better if those damages could be settled privately. I advised them to follow the plan which they adopted. It was all done peaceably and in pursuance of a long-established Chinese custom.

"When the siege was raised, one of the most difficult problems was how to care for the native Christians, who had been an important factor in our salvation. They had risked their lives in building our defenses, when every white man was needed to handle the guns. When the siege ended, starvation confronted them. In the neighborhood were houses which had been the headquarters of the men who fired upon us. The soldiers were looting houses and seizing stores of rice and millet, and soon there would be nothing left. Under these conditions, some of the Boxer houses were raided, and the contents sold for the benefit of the native Christians, to give them food. The legation and the missionaries owe their salvation to the native Christians, for neither alone could have been saved. They were killed by hundreds in working for our defense. We were bound by all sacred obligations to take care of them."

THE BIRTHDAY OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

GOLDEN TEXT:

When he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth. John 16: 13.

BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

IN this twenty-sixth of May, in the year of our Lord 1901, we are to study an event of history that occurred on the twenty-eighth of May, in the year of our Lord 30, the first "Whitsunday," an event which this exactness of date may help us to realize is as real as any fact of history.

It was the Jewish Pentecost, fifty days after the Passover, recalling the giving of the Law at Sinai fifty days after the first Passover and the exodus from Egypt. The Old Testament Church had been inaugurated by a gift from heaven of divine law; the New Testament Church was now to be born on the anniversary of that event in a heavenly outpouring of the Holy Spirit, that would guide into all truth by love implanted within. The earlier Church was founded at the gates of deliverance from slavery; the new, at the portals of a higher freedom.

Pentecost had come to be the "day of firstfruits." In the previous week each family had given to the Lord the first ripe sheaf of the spring wheat and the first lamb of the flock. On Friday, portions of the grain had been ground and baked into two great loaves, each two inches thick, sixteen inches wide, twenty-eight inches long, about the size of an ordinary pillow! These, with two little lambs, from the first fruits of the flocks, were brought on Pentecost into the temple by a procession of praising people, who also brought the first fruits of their money. This feast was and is appropriately made the occasion in synagogues of the Jews, for giving the lambs of the household, the boys and girls who are about twelve years of age, to the church as full members, "children of the law," after a solemn and thorough public examination of several hours, in which they recite extended portions of the Old Testament and tell its wondrous history from memory, showing a degree of Bible study that would put many Christian young people to shame. How fitting that on this feast of firstfruits the new Christian Church should be born and present to the Lord that wonderful first sheaf of three thousand saved souls!

The Pentecost nearest the cross was the birthday of the Christian Church, and in every Christian life the cross of pardon should be followed by the Pentecost of power.

THE PLACE of the lesson was the guest-room of a private house in Jerusalem. It was in a "cottage meeting," in a city where persecution had committed its supreme crime only fifty days before, that God sealed courageous devotion and persistent prayer with supreme blessing. The feeble faith of those who would have us withdraw missions from China or other difficult fields because of persecution, had it controlled, the first disciples would have lost Pentecost itself. When Jesus told the apostles to preach the Gospel, "beginning in Jerusalem," it was as if he should say from the sky to-day to the missionary fugitives in China, "Preach the Gospel, beginning with the Boxers." He who forgave those who nailed him to the cross, saying, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do," no doubt beheld, as he looked down from heaven, some of those very men among the three thousand converted at Pentecost. We hear of Christian soldiers in the New Testament. Perhaps the soldier that put a crown of thorns upon Christ's brow became one of those who received a crown of glory at his hand. Perhaps the soldier that thrust the sword into his side found that repentance was a nearer way to his heart. Surely no field is hopeless when such a harvest could be reaped in a city that had crucified Christ.

THE "ACTS" of this lesson were:

1. The disciples continued, as for ten days previous, in united prayer, v. 1. 2. The Holy Spirit came, in sound like wind, in sight like fire, vv. 2, 3. 3. The disciples were all filled—120 men and women—with the Holy Spirit, and so testified of Christ with enthusiasm and success, v. 4. 4. People of many nationalities were consequently converted, vv. 5-41.

DOCTRINES AND DUTIES:

"All things come to him who waits," especially if he waits on a promise of God.

There are special rewards for united, continued prayer.

"It is power that does it," not machinery.

Pentecost must be followed by a book of Acts. Power is for service, not mere enjoyment. You'll lose it if you do not use it.

The gift of the Spirit is for plain people, men and women both—not for apostles only.

The Holy Spirit brings purging first (Isa. 6), then power to the tongue.

Burned out souls always regard Christian enthusiasm as fanaticism.

When the church itself is increasing in spiritual power it is not troubled with the question why conversions are decreasing.

This dispensation of the Spirit is better than any before it, by so much as the conversion of men and nations is more than cures of disease.

ILLUSTRATIONS AND APPLICATIONS:

(For a harvesting fork every teacher should carry this composite question, What points in this lesson need to be illustrated to make their meaning clearer or more impressive? And what are these points like—in the Bible? in nature? in common life? in history? in poetry?)

The closest parallel to the Pentecostal tongues of fire in the Old Testament is the beautiful story of Isaiah's call to the ministry, in his sixth chapter, which is really the first chapter in the order of time.

What is it Like in the Bible?

In his young manhood, God gave Isaiah a glimpse of the throne of the universe, with Jehovah in all his majesty sitting upon it. About him stood the seraphim, singing "Holy, holy, holy." And as they sang the place was filled with the cloud of the Divine presence. This vision of perfect holiness led Isaiah to feel and confess that he was "a man of unclean lips," on which confession one of the seraphim seized a live coal from the altar of sacrifice, and touched his lips, saying, "Thine iniquity is taken away and thy sin purged." Isaiah's tongue, thus purged and set on fire, responded to God's call, "Whom shall I send?" "Here am I; send me." And he prophesied of a Christ, who was to come seven centuries later, so fervidly that he is called "the evangelical prophet." He made a far-away Christ seem close at hand. We, too, if divine fire shall bring purging and power to our unclean lips, shall so testify of the Christ who lived on earth nineteen hundred years ago that he shall be seen as a Saviour near at hand to every soul.

All through the Bible the influence of the Holy Spirit is compared to water, which, purifies, satisfies, and supplies power (John 4: 13, 14).

What is it Like in Nature?

The Holy Spirit is also compared, as in this lesson, to the wind. It is like the strong North wind in its purifying work; like the warm and gentle South wind in quickening the seeds of every noble word and deed in the heart-gardens of life (John 3: 8). The Holy Spirit is yet more a divine light and tribe with whom he had labored told his people it would not be right to hold back their missionary friend from a tribe that knew almost nothing of Jesus. The chief said he would himself lead the meetings, and though he could not read the Bible, there was a boy in the tribe who could, and they could all listen and "ask the Great Spirit of heaven who wrote the book to open their hearts to eat it and to make them go out and do it."

"Go and do" was the point of another good story of a sceptical woman in the Bible Class of a Christian physician. She came to him with her doubts. With spiritual diagnosis he saw her real need and said: "Do not think about doctrines, but do what I shall suggest, and report the results to the class. Give one hour a day to the poorest and most neglected family in town. Go to the mill section. Visit from door to door till you find the family or person that needs you. Never mind filth or impertinence. Keep it up an hour a day. Be a saviour to somebody." This was a new conception of Christianity. She had been studying it as an abstract philosophy, but now she was called to use it as living energy. She hesitated, then promised and went her way. The next Sunday this woman, who had been a silent member of the class hitherto, was a tongue of fire, telling the class how she had found a drunkard's family almost dying for food and about to be driven out of house and home. She had helped them by word and deed, and found out the need of the strong uplift of friendly visitors. She who had hitherto been herself so indifferent exclaimed, "What are the churches about? What are we here for?" The class caught the blessed contagion, and the whole town felt the outflow of Christian life. Not charity alone, but reform and religion shared the revival that followed.

The transformation wrought in the apostles, changing cowardice to courage and selfishness to sacrifice, lifting them from the low place of unspiritual patriotism to the high plateau of world-saving zeal, is the supreme miracle of the New Testament and divides it into two levels of life. Three thousand other souls were consequently transformed. But in one of Moody's biographies it is shown that by the multiplied Christ-works of our time we have two Pentecosts a day in the daily harvest of conversions. Here is a recent sample given by Bishop Warne of India. The man in question was a poor ignorant opium-smoking Chinese coolie in Siam. He was converted called to preach, educated in the Penang Theological School, learned to read the Chinese Bible, mastered arithmetic up to square root, learned geography, read volumes of Chinese history, evidences of Christianity, life of Christ, learned to read music at sight and to lead a congregation in singing, and withal became able to preach intelligently and persuasively. This contrast wrought in forty years, in his body, mind and soul, was a greater miracle than the resurrection of Lazarus.

"Give me only fire enough," said Bernard Palissy, "and these pigmy nations will become incalculably fixed upon the china." His risive neighbor screamed, "he is mad." "More fire!" shouted the determined man; "more fire!" and to-day the name of Palissy is a synonym for termination and success. More fire! more fire! More fire in our sermons, more fire in our preachers, more fire in our prayers and songs, more fire in the pew, and we will impress the name of Christ upon the dull, cold hearts of men.

What is it Like in History

Thou must be true thyself, If thou the truth wouldst teach; Thy soul must overflow, if thou Another's soul wouldst reach; It needs the overflow of heart To give the lips full speech.

When on his way to Rome, in 1867, Garibaldi was cast into prison, and wrote his comrades in the effort to deliver Italy, "If fifty Garibaldis are thrown into prison, Rome will be free." That patriotic enthusiasm overflowed, it kindled other hearts, and at last the victory was won. It is always such an enthusiast that brings in a new era, and every step of progress is accomplished in spite of the feeble, heartless deniers of enthusiasm. It is "bad form" in society, but the secret of success in history. Bishop Paine laments that the atmosphere of to-day is "singularly charged of high enthusiasms." With which let us put J. H. Seelye's warning: "No heart is pure that is not passionate; no virtue is safe that is not enthusiastic."

The opening of the new spiritual dispensation, in which the apostles saw before them, not as previously, a Palestine to be delivered from the Roman, but a world to be brought to Christ, was like the sudden discovery of the Pacific Ocean by Balboa, who supposed, as did all other American explorers—the word Indian recalls the error—that they had reached the coast of India. He had suddenly learned that they had found instead a new world, as he with eagle eye Stared at the Pacific, and all his men Looked at each other with a wild surmise Silent upon a peak of Darien. —KEATS.

AN OLD DUTCH ARTIST'S CONCEPTION OF THE DESCENT OF THE HOLY SPIRIT

fire, that purges away dross, and gives the light of knowledge and of joy and the fire of enthusiasm to those who receive it. It was this divine fire that filled the bush out of which God spoke to Moses (Exod. 3). The same fire made up the pillar that led Israel and abode above the tabernacle (Exod. 40: 38). The same divine fire consumed the prophets of Baal, and seemed like a chariot as it bore Elijah to heaven (I. Kings 18: 38; II. Kings 2: 11).

The Holy Spirit is also pictured as a cloud, in which water and wind and fire all have the hidings of their power (Isa. 6).

The Holy Spirit is also like the sunlight in the three-fold power of such light which gives warmth and light and life. Like the sun, the Holy Spirit quickens, heals, purifies, gladdens, strengthens.

It has been said that the Holy Spirit is never represented as a dove except when it rests upon Christ. To sinful men he comes as a refining fire. But when we have been purged he comes to us also as a dove, for "the fruit of the Spirit is gentleness."

"What church is that?" the writer asked, pointing to a large new building with a steeple. "That is a power house," was the reply. Having failed as a church, it was turned into a power house, making its invisible power felt in every street of the city. That house in whose upper room the disciples received the Holy Spirit was such a "power house." All Jerusalem felt the electric power that went from it. Why should not every church be a power house, its influence felt in every street in Christianizing business and pleasure and politics?

We put more emphasis on "Come" than "Go" in religion. The chief problem is not why the people do not come to church, but rather why the church does not go to the unchurched with the Gospel. Among the Indians of British America labored a white missionary, greatly beloved, for whose preaching another tribe, that had heard of his message, sent an earnest petition. AMERICA'S DEBT TO LUTHER

...BY REV. J. B. REMENSNYDER, D.D....

GREAT men live for all mankind. The vicarious principle is shot through the whole web of nature. The world's civilization is built upon the heart's blood of a few. Do an heroic deed, and its lustre will shine to the end of time. Win a great victory for right, and its fame will ring out to every generation. Voice a truth, and it will be heard to the end of the world.

Among the five or six of the greatest names in history of men who have been the makers of epochs, and have set the world forward on its course, conspicuously shines that of Luther. A German he was indeed, and a Lutheran; but in a large sense he belongs to no church, no nation, no race. He is all the world's man; he is the creator of the modern era. All churches, all lands, all civilizations to-day claim a share in the blessed results he achieved. Writes the historian, Froude: "The traces of that one mind are to be seen to-day in the mind of the modern world. Had there been no Luther, the English, American, and German people would be thinking differently, would be altogether different men and women from what they are at this moment." In the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia in 1876, one saw in the Art Gallery Kaulbach's great painting, representing the "Progress of Civilization." There were grouped the world's foremost thinkers, scientists, diplomats, and leaders, those who had been at the head of great movements, and left their enduring mark on the race's welfare. But in the midst, and towering above them all, was the colossal figure of Luther. This represents his true place in history—the pre-eminence of his achievement in the forward movement of mankind. Thus it is that one great soul who dares for God and his truth, for man and his right, lifts the whole race up to a higher plane of thought, of life, of action, and becomes one of the beacon lights of history that mark the epochs of the ages in the progress of the human race—aye the camping grounds of the armies of the living God in their onward march to conquer the world for Christ, His rightful king.

But while Luther thus belongs to all the world, and all countries owe tribute to him for their blessings, it is none the less true that America owes a special debt to the great Reformer. No one land is to-day the heir of all that Luther stands for, and is so thoroughly interpenetrated and interspersed with the genius of his movement as is this country of ours. First—Luther was the author of Protestantism. He was the founder of that branch of the Christian Church which, as distinct from the Roman, we term Protestant, and we all know what this represents. Emancipation from the sceptre of an infallible Pope; an open Bible; no mediator but Christ; every man his own priest; worship in the language of the people; simplicity of religious rites and ceremonies; unfettered right of inquiry. And what country is so thoroughly Protestant as America? As the boys of Boston in our revolutionary struggle were thoroughly permeated with the spirit of liberty, so is Protestantism here in all the air. Its mark is imprinted on our churches, our colleges, our institutions, on all our customs. The principles of Protestantism have in America had an opportunity for an unfettered development, such as they have found in no other soil. And, accordingly, here they have come and are bearing their fullest and finest fruit. The Protestant churches in America are Protestant to the core. Even the Romish churches here are far more tinged with Protestantism, and have had rushed off many more of the barnacles of effete superstitions, than in foreign lands. Protestantism is the prevailing type of our religion, of our thought, aye! of our very manners, and nothing more than this vital, robust Protestant spirit accounts for our wonderful advance to leadership among the great world powers. The genius of Protestantism is the spirit of progress. And as Spain represents the effete, moribund, paralyzing curb with which Romanism fetters national growth, so America is the most modern, most progressive, most happy of peoples, because the sails of her national bark are filled with the breezes set in motion by Luther, the founder of Protestantism. Again, the peculiar distinction of America, and one of the rarest blessings she enjoys, is the separation of church from state. Without this there cannot be religious liberty in the fullest sense of the word. A state church means more or less of oppression. This is seen in a light form even in England, where dissenters are forced to pay for the support of a church against which their conscience protests. And it is seen in a revolting form just now in Russia, where the iron hand of a state church is not only destroying the religious liberty, but crushing out step by step the civil liberties of downtrodden Lutheran Finland. Now while Luther could not in his day advance to the open separation of church and state, yet the evolution of the principles he advocated necessarily involved it. Says Koestlin, in his epitome of Luther's theology, Vol. I., 308: "By Luther's entire conception of the nature of the church and ecclesiastical authority, moreover, every extension of that authority, as he had been divinely ordained, to the sphere of temporal, political or civil life was excluded." So conclusively, he bluntly told the most powerful civil rulers that they should keep their hands off the preparation of confessions and statements of religious doctrines, for these matters belonged wholly to theologians. We can have no better illustration of the practical outcome of Luther's principles respecting church and state than the contrast between the colonists at Plymouth Rock and the Swedes settled on the Delaware by the great Lutheran King, Gustavus Adolphus. The former, although flying to escape religious intolerance, were soon persecuting Quakers and differing religionists, with as bigoted a severity as that they had suffered. Contrariwise, in the first charter of King Adolphus' American colony, confirmed by all the authorities of the kingdom, and rehearsed in the instructions given by the throne, special provision was made for the protection of the convictions and worship of those not of the same confession with that for which the government provided. In his scheme of colonization in this Western World, the invitation was to all classes of religionists to enjoy the blessings of a free state, entirely unfettered by church domination. Though a Lutheran colony, under a Lutheran King, sustained and protected by a Lutheran government, the colonists had place and equal protection in it from the very beginning; and when the Quakers came, they were at once and as freely welcomed on the same free principles as also the representatives of the Church of England.

When then Americans wish to boast of this unique feature of their country—the absolute separation of church and state, and the consequent escape from all the oppression, and annoyances, and disadvantages of a state church regime, and the resultant enjoyment of that crown of blessings, religious liberty, in unmarred perfection—then let them consider their incalculable debt to Luther.

But chiefly does America owe to Luther her glorious prize of civil liberty. This, too, was involved in the Reformer's heroic stand. It first sounded in the strokes of the hammer which nailed up the thesis on the castle church at Wittenberg.

It spoke in thunder tones when at Worms he braved, single-handed, the assembled mighty ones of earth. And it attained its sobered strength in the matured, organized voice of protest at Speyer. Not alone liberty of conscience, but of the human reason; not alone liberty of the church, but of the nations; not alone the liberty of organized society, but personal liberty—the liberty of the individual—was on trial in that critical hour, that most pregnant epoch of history. As Carlyle so vigorously says: "Luther's appearance at the Diet of Worms may be considered as the greatest scene in modern European history; the point, indeed, from which the whole subsequent history of civilization takes its rise. The petition of the whole world to him that day was: 'Free us, it rests with thee; desert us not.' Luther did not desert us. It is, as we say, the greatest moment in the modern history of non-English Puritanism. England and its Parliaments, America's vast work in these two centuries, French revolution, Europe and its work everywhere at present, the germ of it all lay there. Had Luther in that moment done other, it had all been otherwise." What Luther there stood for was the right of a man made in the image of God to form and hold his own opinions. The Divine prerogative of freedom of mind, thought and soul. That churches had their rights and sphere; that governments had their lawful powers; but that the individual also had his rights, his sphere of independent action, his domain of liberty, and that within this holy arcanum, no sceptre of pontiff and no sword of monarch dare enter on pain of the fiat of Almighty God. And to this position Luther held consistently not only there, but thereafter and everywhere. He writes: "I will preach, I will talk in private, I will write, but I will not constrain any one. The mass is a bad thing, but let none be taken from it by force. We have a right to speak, but none whatever to compel. If I resort to force, what shall I gain? Grimace, false appearance, a pings, cramped uniformity and hypocrisy. But there will be no hearty sincerity, no faith, no love." So, too, Luther, with all his might, was the first to protest against persecution of the Jews. What a spectacle is this! Starting there, four centuries ago, in the shaded vestibule of the Dark Ages, with his enemies everywhere brandishing the rack, the stake, the death in his face, Luther cannot be provoked to striking back one blow with the secular arm, but proclaims the iniquity of force in constraining thought and conscience, and asserts the modern idea of toleration just as strongly as does Canon Mozley, speaking to the cultured University of Oxford in the dawn of the twentieth century.

There are other obligations under which our country is indebted to Luther. Thus Professor Painter, in his history of education, shows that Luther, with his eyes glancing world-wide in his ideas and efforts for the promotion of popular education, was really the author of the modern public school system. But these named are sufficient to show that America is the chief depository of the achievement of Luther. We are the heirs of his battles and victories and sacrifices; we have reaped the harvest of his faith, his thoughts, his sacrifices, his light and knowledge, as no other people. America's debt to Luther is one that every man, woman and child of her teeming millions shares—a debt that should never be forgotten, and for which we and the generations who shall come after and enjoy the rare blessings of this favored land, should not cease most heartily to thank God.

LONDON'S WEST-END MISSION

WORKERS OF THE LORD IN THE "DEVIL'S ACRE"

SEE ILLUSTRATION ON FIRST PAGE

WHEN, in the eighties, the bitter cry of Outcast London rang like a clarion note of woe throughout the city, all eyes turned to the East End,—towards Whitechapel and its neighborhood—and there the Wesleyans began their special London Mission; but, upon a military chaplain painting the West End in its true colors, the Methodists conceived the idea of a great evangelistic movement in that quarter—the haunts of fashionable vice—and looking round for a suitable leader, turned to a brilliant young minister who had precisely the gifts the occasion demanded. Pre-eminently to him, under God, the West London Mission owes its great and growing success. Grandson of the Rev. Hugh Hughes, a Wesleyan minister of distinction, Hugh Price Hughes was born in Carmarthen, February 8th, 1847. When thirteen years of age, he heard a sermon by an American preacher then visiting Wales, who urged submission to Christ, and this led to his conversion. Thereupon the schoolboy wrote to Dr. John Hughes, a medical man, who had destined his son for the law, "My dear Father, I should like to be a Methodist preacher. Your affectionate son, Hugh." Equally laconic, the father replied, "My dear Boy, I would rather you be a Methodist preacher than the Lord Chancellor. Your affectionate father, John Hughes." In the great West End enterprise Mr. Hughes induced his friend, Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, to join him; and for fourteen years this pair have labored zealously and harmoniously together, for the salvation of many souls and the amelioration of much human suffering.

Determined to attack the very citadel of sin, the organizers of the Mission planted the standard of the Cross in the heart of Vanity Fair. For Sunday and weekday services, they hired the largest halls in Piccadilly, where vice flaunts itself in its gayest colors; bought another hall in Soho, described in Mr. Hall Caine's Christian as the "Devil's Acre," and opened in the neighborhood homes for workers and havens of refuge for the friendless and the fallen. The late C. H. Spurgeon preached the sermon inaugurating the Mission in St. James' hall, Piccadilly, October 21, 1887.

On the Sunday following Mr. Spurgeon's sermon, Mr. Pearse preached in St. James' Hall in the morning, Mr. Hughes conducted a public conference in the afternoon and held an evangelistic service in the evening. This arrangement has continued from that day to this, amid increasing tokens of Divine blessing. The hall accommodates 2,500 people, with seats in the orchestra for 500. From the first large audiences assembled in the afternoons. During the first year, 123 members were enrolled; to-day there are nearly 2,000 in full or probationary membership at the several branches of the Mission church, with thirty-nine Society classes, several Bible classes, Sunday Schools, and a branch of the Wesley Guild. The church members represent practically all religious communions, and include converts from the Roman Catholic and Greek Churches, as well as all forms of unbelief. Sectarian terms and controversial shibboleths are scrupulously avoided, the basis of the whole work being the Gospel of Jesus Christ as evangelically understood and interpreted. Among the congregation are members of all social classes—aristocrats and plebeians, professional men and tradespeople, young people of both sexes employed in the west-end houses of business, servants of the adjacent royal houses, members of the theatrical profession, and people of nearly all nationalities. On Sunday mornings in St. James' Hall, seats are specially reserved for soldiers, policemen, and hospital nurses in uniform; and these constitute a very picturesque feature of the service. The old familiar hymns are sung with genuine Methodist fervor.

From the first, the Mission has steadily extended on all sides and multiplied its agencies. It now comprises four halls—St. James' Hall, with entrances in both Piccadilly and Regent street, the two most fashionable promenades in London; Craven Hall, Foubert's Place, just off Regent street; Cleveland Hall, Soho; and Somers Town Hall, Charlton street, near St. Pancras Station; and five houses: Katherine House, 10 Fitzroy Square; Lincoln House, 60 Greek street, Soho; St. Luke's House, 50 Osnaburgh street, Regent's Park; Winchester House (rescue and preventive home), 5 Eastbourne Terrace; and a Cheap Goods Depot, 131 Wardour street. Somers Town Hall was built at her own expense by Lady Henry Somerset, who owns most of that district. A very pronounced attitude is taken in relation to intemperance. Many thousands of pledges have been taken, and several public houses have been closed as a result of the efforts of the Mission. The ordinary temperance meetings are supplemented by every kind of institution to encourage sobriety and thrift, and to provide the poor with better gathering places than the saloons. The agencies include men's and women's slate clubs, penny banks, clothing, provident, and boot clubs, in connection with which, last Christmas, 2,500 different articles were purchased, including drapery, glass and china, furniture, grocery, beef and poultry of every kind. From these thrift societies, about £3,500 of the people's money passed through the Mission during the year just past.

The operations of the great West London Missions are so very numerous, far-reaching, and many-sided that the mere enumeration of the various agencies alone would occupy considerable space. The constant aim is to deal with the whole man, to meet and help human beings on all sides of their nature, without distinction of sex, age, race, or creed. But the supreme aim, the end to which all else is but a means, is spiritual regeneration, and the incalculable results that have been achieved in this direction amply justify all the methods that have been employed. Thousands have been led to follow the Master.

The organization known as the Sisters of the People, which Mrs. Hughes, who has all along been an ardent co-worker with her husband, started with the aid of three helpers at the commencement of the Mission, has become its most important and influential adjunct. Soon the little house provided for the Sisters was filled to overflowing, and in four years the organization had increased so rapidly that a commodious dwelling was taken at 10 Fitzroy Square, and named "Katherine House," after the founder. To this in time were added Lincoln House, St. Luke's House, and Winchester House in West London, and Wesley House at Beasley, near Stroud. The Sisters started a crèche for children, mothers' meetings, girls' clubs, a registry office, and dispensaries. Speaking of the aim of the Sisterhood, Mrs. Hughes says: "From the first, the backbone of our work was distinct visiting. Every probationer was first of all to visit the people, in the back streets and slums, and in that way come into touch with the poor. All the developments of our work have arisen out of the discovery of special needs through actual contact with the people. The first development was the sick-nursing department. When our Sisters began to visit in the homes of the poor, they recognized the terrible need that there was for trained district nurses. In the second year we began to organize relief work; and arranged a plan by which we could have Sisters sitting at various charity organization committees in our district, on the committees of other benevolent societies; also on the Board of Guardians. They were able to render aid by bringing the sufferers into communication with some agency which had power to deal with and relieve their distress. Relief work is another branch which we organized at the beginning of our enterprise. We have always room at Lincoln House for girls who come to us in trouble or who are flying from peril." Without going into the details of the boys' and girls' clubs, temperance organizations, the various guilds and classes for younger children, and teas at workhouses and recreative evenings, one of the latest experiments may be mentioned. Two Sisters have taken a flat of five rooms in work people's dwellings; they live there, and manage their small menage just as their neighbors do. The boys and girls among whom they work, and their poor neighbors, are encouraged to come in and out of their home freely, and are often invited to join the meal as guests. They enter into the life of the Sisters quite naturally, and unconsciously they imbibe the object lesson of a little home, bright, clean and dainty, yet as unpretentious and economical as the one in which they live. This experiment has succeeded so well that other Sisters will repeat it in different districts.

One department specially appreciated by the poor is the Medical Mission, which is the most complete of its kind in London. Dr. Howard Barrett (Mrs. Price Hughes' brother) and other distinguished physicians and surgeons, have from the first given their services gratuitously. There are no dispensaries and a Home of Peace for the Dying. St. Luke's House is probably a unique institution: it is a home for the dying poor, it is free, it has a religious basis, but is quite denominational. Many poor creatures discharged from the hospitals as incurable have here found a haven of refuge. Very popular and practically helpful is "The Poor Man's Lawyer," the head of this department is Mr. J. Bamford Slack, B.A.; the best legal advice is placed gratuitously at the disposal of the poorest applicants. Enough has been said to give an idea of the extent and methods of the great work Mr. Hughes is directing in West London. A few features not yet mentioned may here be grouped together. Services or meetings are held every night at some of the halls. The Gospel is also preached in the open air in streets, alleys and parks. The Guild of the Brave Poor Things is a social union of the crippled, deformed, blind, and partially paralyzed. At each hall there is a People's Living-room for the poor of the neighborhood. The social work includes a servants' registry and a men's bureau, in connection with which clothes, tools and work have been provided. The hotel and apartment bureau keeps an eye on young men coming to London. The Men's Club comprises literary and debating societies, cycle and rambling clubs. Holiday homes also are provided in connection with the rescue work. The Mission goes out at all hours and brings in the fallen, although they may not be able to persuade every one so treated to abandon their sins.

THE SOUL-WINNERS' REVIVAL YEAR

A SPLENDID
ACTIVITY

GOD has signalized the beginning of the new century with special tokens of his favor. His blessing alone has made the work of the Soul Winners' Society possible. With no treasury to draw from, and no resource but voluntary gifts from those whose hearts God moved to help us, the work has again more than doubled the last year. We are glad and grateful, but not surprised. God has pledged his word and power to answer prayer, and to bless even the humblest effort for his glory.

Our workers have increased from nineteen to fifty-five. Without a collection in any church, God has enabled us to pay every dollar of expenses at the end of every month. The workers are Rev. Dr. Miles Saunders and wife, Rev. Edwin Judd and wife, Miss Louise Saunders, Mr. A. B. Armelee and wife, Misses Erastes Balee, Mattie Lynn, Effie Miller, Margaret Cromartie, Nellie Rogers, Mrs. Kate Robards, Mrs. Mattie Stewart, Mrs. Emily Gordon, Mrs. Laura Kirkpatrick, Messrs. Alex. H. Doak, Samuel M. Johnson, Jr., Misses Margaret McCubbing, Fannie Silliman, Liza Gordon, Luna Mae Bradford, Margaret Allison, Messrs. Elias L. Moore, Addison A. Talbot, C. L. Rogers, Daniel McIntosh, Misses Martha Wiswall, Bessie Howard, Mary E. Dodson, B. B. Bray, Annie Wiley, Dr. Edward O. Guerrant, Dr. Charles E. Jeffery and wife, A. J. Bowman, Rev. T. W. De Vane, Rev. Luther O. McIntcheon, Rev. A. Sidney Doak, Misses Mary B. Rogin, Margaret B. Grier, Laura H. Coit, Florence Peck, Mary Gilwreath, Kate McFarland, Revs. Joseph M. Evans, J. H. Howes, J. A. Harris, Col. John H. Moore, A. C. Adams, J. K. Coit.

These evangelists have labored in the roughest mountain regions of North Carolina, Tennessee and Kentucky, and God has blessed their labors with the richest tokens of his favor. Hundreds of children and their parents have learned the Gospel in thirty mission schools taught by consecrated and educated women, most of whom asked and received no salary at all. Many souls have been led to Christ. One mission in the Cumberlands (Dr. Saunders), reports two hundred conversions; another, on the Kentucky River, twenty-four in a few months; and many in the Alleghanies, under the faithful ministry of the Rev. J. A. Harris and his noble co-laborers.

Means are provided to build five new churches this summer in most destitute regions, and two mission houses for our workers. Hundreds of humble homes in the "regions beyond" have heard the glad tidings from these self-denying missionaries; and tracts and Bibles have been given away by the hundreds.

A little hymn-book, suitable for the work, has been printed for the use of the missions, and thousands of many hundreds of homes that have no other religious paper. During the year the Society received $3,898.39 in cash. In donations of books, clothes, etc., $500. In subscriptions, $2,661. These are the voluntary gifts of individual Christians and societies of every branch of the Church all over the United States, and even in Canada and Cuba.

While several abler and more liberal Christians have each regularly supported one missionary entirely; and one generous lady in New York City contributed enough to build two churches, and a Brooklyn Sabbath School to build another; most of these gifts have come from the homes and hearts of those who have little to give but love and prayers. We do not know them, but God does, and will reward all who help.

All our workers are sent beyond churches and preachers, to the destitute regions; and none receives over a bare support (none over $30 a month, and many are working faithfully and cheerfully on half that amount, and even less). Their expenses are small, and they take God for their pay. We know of no other agency of the Church which is accomplishing so much with the same outlay. Our work is only limited by our means. The great harvest is white, and the laborers are few, because we have not the money to support more of them in the field.

Some three millions of people—Scotch-Irish and Anglo-Saxon—inhabit over 86,000 square miles of our country, yet practically without the Gospel! A territory as large as Ohio and Pennsylvania—as large as the Empire of Germany! The inhabitants are not degenerate people; they are brave and hardy mountaineers, descendants of Revolutionary sires.

We are hoping and praying and laboring for great things this year. Many wait help to go. Ten dollars a month will support a native evangelist or mission teacher; twenty dollars a month will support a theological student in this work; and we pay no ordained minister over thirty dollars a month. We ask your prayers and we cordially invite your help in our missionary work.

The officers of the Society of Soul-Winners are Edward O. Guerrant, President, Wilmore, Ky.; William C. Clark, Vice-President, Augusta, Ky.; Leonard H. Willis, Sr., Secretary, Nicholasville, Ky.; Major Robert S. Bullock, Treasurer, Cashier Fayette Nat'l Bank, Lexington, Ky.

"Coals of Fire"

WHEN Viceroy Li Hung Chang appealed to American generosity, through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, to succor the starving and dying peasants of Shansi, he evidently believed that his petition would not pass unanswered. That his faith was fully justified is proved by the cordial and widespread endorsement of the movement for a relief work in China under American auspices. The President, through the Secretary of State, telegraphs an expression of gratification that such a movement has begun, and emphasizes this with a contribution. Minister Conger, our Ambassador, wires from his home in Des Moines a warm approval of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD's plan of relief, and assures us of the gratitude of China, and that great future good may be expected from such a work.

These high public officials, by their unequivocal endorsement of the proposed relief work, and by taking the lead as contributors, have afforded a splendid illustration to the whole American nation of the true attitude which we, as a civilized and Christian people, should adopt toward China in her present affliction. This is no time for recrimination or for the indulgence of that wretched and far too common spirit of revenge, which would slay by withholding the only help that can save. Let ours be the nobler revenge of heaping "coals of fire" upon China, in the form of food and blessing.

We know it is contended in some quarters that, judged by all human standards, China has richly merited her misfortunes, and should therefore be allowed to suffer; but such is not the attitude of a Christianized humanity. To that gallant army of good men and women, whose brigades and battalions of Christian workers have already done glorious service on many hard-fought fields against the forces of famine, disease and physical suffering, making THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the channel of their benevolences, this new call to duty will be hailed as another opportunity for real service in the Master's name. As soldiers of the Cross, they will welcome the prospect of entering and taking possession of China, not by force of arms through broken walls, but by the wide-open gates of love and Christian sympathy. It is within our power to begin now such a campaign as will transform Shansi and its teeming population into a great Gospel stronghold, where Christ will be lifted up, before whom the ancient idols must fall. It is a royal commission, which we will do wisely to loyally carry forward until the victory is won.

If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his. Rom. 8:9.

Poor Investments

WE are constantly investing time, talent, treasure of some kind. Love or money it may be, sometimes thoughtlessly, often firmly believing that it will prove "for value received." Frequently the investment is experimental wholly, and the worst of it is, the proof of fatal failure comes too late. Wise it is to ask the question, Does it pay? before engaging in any enterprise. Life is so short and strength so small that it were wanton to waste either. What may pay for one may not for another. Each must judge wisely, or take the consequences. Some speculations bear upon their face such uncertainty, such stupendous risk, that the foolhardy venturer finds no sympathy in his failure. The interminable nature of other enterprises stamps them as unprofitable. Once committed to them, they will worry and wear us in the finishing, or stand incomplete, ignoble ruins of a resolution we failed to carry out. This principle may apply to all departments of practical life, works of the hand, head, and heart.

There are times when even the Christian heart will cry out of the depths of depression, "Nothing pays." This is the language of discouragement, of despair, perhaps of temptation; and in the shadow of this darkness let us draw near to the heart of him who was tempted in all points like as we. Yet after treading the wine-press alone he paid the most inconceivable sacrifice in all time to purchase for us the joys of eternity. When we review our little lives in the light of that eternity, only those things which we have done heartily unto the Lord will seem worth doing. Let us be loyal to the Master. Earnest, well-directed, Christian effort, put forth wherever God has placed us, shall never be in vain.

The Lord your God is gracious and merciful, and will not turn away his face from you, if ye return unto him—II. Chron. 3:9.

Our Weekly Symposium

IF the great number of letters addressed to the MAIL-BAG are indication, we have reason to believe that department one of the most interesting features of this paper. We have enthusiastic assurances that it is one of the most helpful, inasmuch as it furnishes opportunity for the free discussion by earnest, reverent, truth-seeking people of the most vital problems of the day, as they relate to the ethical and spiritual life. We know of no similar forum. Certainly, none can wield wider influence. Into what hall can you crowd an audience of 300,000 to 500,000 people? As many as these are regular readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Our correspondents can realize now what responsibilities they assume when they ask and answer questions in the MAIL-BAG. Perhaps, too, they can sympathize with the editor in his responsibilities. It is no light task to faithfully read and carefully select from a multitude of excellent answers, the two best. That more than two are not printed is a question of space, not of merit.

Without presuming to dictate to our correspondents, we would suggest that in giving answers, extreme views are to be avoided, and the conservative rather than the radical opinion to be desired. Not that there should be any compromise with principle, or any deviation from free expression of the writer's real belief; without sincerity argument is valueless. Let us have the truth, always the truth, but the truth spoken in love. Between the truth pronounced with grace and judgment, and the truth uttered with ungente haste, the former will win acceptance where the latter would fail.

In order to appreciate the wide field covered by this symposium, one has only to consider the character of problems discussed during recent weeks. These embrace questions of politics, choice of books for children, legislation regarding eligibility for marriage, the Christian attitude towards church fairs and bazaars, the freedom of the pulpit in a church financially dependent upon liquor-sellers, methods for rousing indifferent churches, measures for securing Gospel privileges to forming communities where there are none, admission of actors and actresses to church membership, nice questions of Sabbath observance, the best way for a pious wife to bring a scoffing husband to Christ, the course for Christian parents to pursue where perilous social privileges tempt their children, property rights between husbands and wives, relationship of employer and employed, and many others, where the question of right and wrong is such a delicate and practical issue in daily life that the value of strong, true light upon the subject cannot be overestimated by those who wish to measure secular conduct by the highest spiritual standard.

The Lord redeemeth the soul of his servants: and none of them that trust in him shall be desolate—Ps. 34:22.

The World's Troubles

WE see the nations in some kind of trouble ever since the world was derailed and hurled down the bankments. The demon of sin came to this world, but other demons have gone through other worlds. The demon of conflagration, the demon of volcanic disturbance, the demons of war, famine, plague, and pestilence. La Place says he saw one world in the northern hemisphere sixteen months burning. Tycho Brahe said he saw another world burning. A French astronomer says that in three hundred years fifteen hundred worlds have disappeared. I do not see why infidels find it so hard to believe that two worlds stopped in Joshua's time, when the astronomers tell us that fifteen hundred worlds have stopped. Even the moon is a world in ruins. Stellar, lunar, solar catastrophes innumerable.

But it seems as if the worst sorrows had been reserved for our world. By one toss of the world at Trin-boro, of 12,000 inhabitants only twenty-six people escaped. By one shake of the world at Lisbon, in five minutes 60,000 perished and 200,000 before the earthquake stopped rocking. A mountain falls in Switzerland burying the village of Goldau. A mountain falls in Italy in the night, when 2,000 people are asleep, and they never arouse. By a convulsion of the earth Japan broken off from China. By a convulsion of the earth the Caribbean islands broken off from America. The islands near the mouth of the Ganges, with 340,000 inhabitants—a great surge of the sea breaks over them, and 214,000 perish that day. Famine in Russia, in Armenia, in India, and now in China, slaying its countless multitudes. Alas! alas, for our poor world.

There is trouble marked on the rocks, on the sky, the sea, on the wheat fields, on the flora, and the fauna. Astronomical trouble, geological trouble, oceanic trouble, political trouble, social trouble, domestic trouble, and standing in the presence of all those stupendous devastations, we ask if I am not right in saying that the great want of this age and all the ages is Divine sympathy and Omnipotent comfort; and they found, not in the Brahma of the Hindoo, or the Allah of the Mahommedan, or the Buddha, or the Confucius of China, but in the Christ unto whom shall the gathering of the people be.

OUR ATTITUDE TOWARD CHINA

New York Press

EVIDENTLY the first place appealed to for assistance to help the famine threatened Chinese was the United States. Li Hung Chang's cablegram to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, dated April 25, indicates that he has a very good idea as to what people are most generous and most likely to help the suffering of any other nation. The attitude of the Americans toward the Chinese throughout the recent troubles and complications is such as to commend the Government and its representatives to all classes and nations in China. Had the European countries been as well disposed and as generously inclined, there would have been less of entanglement and a quicker settlement. . . . Famine-stricken people have never appealed to the United States in vain, and it is altogether probable that Li Hung Chang's cablegram will attract favorable attention and a liberal response.

THE FAMINE IN CHINA

From the Brooklyn, N. Y., Times, April 27th

A DESPATCH was received in New York yesterday from the editor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, announcing the existence of a serious famine in China. The despatch was in the form of an official message from Li Hung Chang, and it stated that the famine spread over the whole province of Shansi, and affected a population of over 11,000,000 people. Private despatches, however, show that the famine extends over a much wider area, and that at least 24,000,000 of the Chinese people are in peril of starvation. Li Hung Chang appeals to the generosity of the American people for the relief of his starving countrymen.

It may seem inhuman to talk of such a disaster as accidental or opportune; but, in sober truth, such an appeal could not be made at a more fitting time. There are no apologies to be made for the part taken by the United States in the suppression of the Boxer uprising, and the rescue of the missionaries and members of the American Legation, whose lives were in imminent jeopardy. It was an unpleasant, but a necessary task, and it had to be done. But incidental to the performance of that task, there were many things done calculated to bring disgrace upon Christianity and upon Christian civilization. For these things we are not responsible, but we had to share the shame of them. That shame falls upon Christendom and upon the Christian religion, which we have spent so many millions of dollars to commend to the followers of Confucius and Buddha.

The famine in China affords the people of the United States an opportunity to show the people of that country another phase of American civilization. The charity of the American people has never been appealed to in vain for the relief of the suffering, and in this case, there is added reason why that relief should be prompt and liberal. A generally sustained famine fund will show the people of China that the Americans, at least, recognize them as fellow-men, and that in spite of our restrictive legislation, in spite of our share in the nameless infamies that have been perpetrated by our allies in China, we have no enmity against them. In this way, we can best commend our religion to their favorable regard, and we can best advance the interests of American commerce in the East. . . . For every reason, for the cause of religion, for the advancement of our commercial interests, and for the good name of the United States, the response of the American people to the appeal of Li Hung Chang should be prompt and liberal beyond precedent.

...Minister Conger's Graphic Picture of Suffering in Shansi — Peasants Dying by Thousands—Huge Pits for the Victims—All America Interested in the Relief Project

CONSUL CHOW-TSZCHI

THE appeal of Li Hung Chang, through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, to the American people, in behalf of the starving peasants of Shansi, is already bearing fruit. It has received the unqualified endorsement of the leading men of the nation and the enthusiastic support of thousands throughout the Union. The President and Secretary of State were among the first to publicly express their approval, and to send in their contributions. Major Conger, our Minister to China, wired a message of hearty sympathy with the relief movement. Other high officials have done likewise. From no class has there been a more cordial endorsement of the movement than from the missionaries who are now at home from the China field. They, more than others, realize the great opportunity of the Gospel in China, which must assuredly follow such a humanitarian work as is now proposed.

Acting Minister Rockhill Will Act

In obedience to this universal sentiment in favor of a relief movement, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has taken the necessary steps with a view to practical service. The most available route by which supplies could be sent, is apparently from Shanghai up the Yangtse River to Whu, thence to Hankow and up the Han River to the head of navigation in Shansi Province. A cable message from the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to Acting Minister Rockhill, in Peking, briefly outlining a plan of operation, brought the following reply by Peking, May 5.

I will see to purchase and distribution of aid. Li Hung Chang requests me to express to organizer of relief his sincere thanks, also thanks of Shansi famine stricken American benevolent action.

ROCKHILL.

On a cable message of inquiry sent to Count Von Waldersee, Commander of the Allied Forces, at Peking, inquiring his co-operation, the Commander replied that Shansi was beyond that part of China occupied by the rebels. He regrets that he is unable to co-operate in the relief work.

Major Conger, our Minister to China, has just telegraphed this statement to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from his home at Des Moines, where he is stopping:

Minister Conger Describes the Famine

DES MOINES, IA., May 6. The famine in Shansi Province is one of the serious troubles of China to-day. The extent of the mortality there is appalling. The country is densely settled, and the people are driven to the most desperate straits to keep themselves alive. I am not able to estimate the number that are dying daily, but I know that it is very large. The country has been barren of crops for two or three years.

Scarcely a pound of food has been raised. The chief staple is rice, and the province of Shansi is entirely out of rice.

"Li Hung Chang and Prince Ching both told me two or three days before I left Peking, that people were literally eating each other. I was also told that mothers and fathers were selling their children for food, but this statement was not verified, so far as I know. The Chinese are able to live on almost nothing for a long time. Li Hung Chang told me that the Shansi people were eating the grass off the ground, and the leaves off the trees, and even the bark. They have eaten all there was to be had, and are practically without anything at all now. It will take thousands and thousands of dollars to help the suffering Chinese to any great extent. Ordinarily, such an amount of money would go a long way in keeping the people alive, for the average cost of living to a Chinaman is only two or three cents a day. Millions of them live at that rate regularly, but the famine has sent up the price of all foodstuffs, and it will now take more than three cents a day to feed a starving native.

"American relief should be sent to American consuls and missionaries. It is useless to attempt to buy food on this side of the ocean, and ship it to China. There is not time for that. The food must be bought at Shanghai or Tien-tsin and distributed from these points. From Shanghai to Shansi is a distance of nearly one thousand miles, while from Tien-tsin it is not quite so far. There is no railroad from these places to reach the starving people of the province. The relief must be sent overland or by water.

"The Chinese authorities will undoubtedly furnish transportation for the relief supplies, when they get into Chinese waters. They have done so before, in similar circumstances.

"Probably 10,000,000 people are affected by the famine. Their condition is beyond description. They have had no rain for two years."

A Returned Missionary's View

In a letter to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Rev. H. P. Perkins, a returned China missionary writes:

"In the present famine, the rich suffer equally with the poor. They are compelled to give up the stores of grain which they themselves may have been holding. This thing was going on in my own station of Lin Ching, in the western part of Shantung, where I was at work. Bands of poor people were visiting many who were known to have stores of grain and demanding it, and the latter were often left with very little for themselves.

"American relief should take the form of food, if possible, purchased in Shanghai, and sent up by Yangtse River and the canal to the seat of the famine. Otherwise it would have to go by way of Tien-tsin, and be taken overland. The Chinese authorities should be willing to furnish transportation. If the supplies go by way of Shanghai, the Governor of the central provinces, Chang Chih Tung, I am sure, would do all in his power to secure transportation and guarding of the grain.

"The hour is one of great interest and importance for China, and anything now done in answer to the Chinese cry, will be of immense importance toward the cementing of kindly relations between this country and China. Business men may well listen to it. Above all, let those who have the welfare of China and the world at heart, listen to the same cry. If it should be a blessing to those who are in such desperate need, it should prove a still greater blessing to those who are able to respond with generous heart and ready liberal hand.

"The larger part of the missionaries working in China, as well as the official representatives of the Western countries, have felt that because of the criminal deeds of the Chinese Government, one of the necessary things to do was to call for punishment of those most guilty. This feeling has not been the result of anything like a vindictive spirit; it has come from the feeling that the future well-being of China called for a recognition of guilt and punishment of the same. This same feeling, which we have had towards China, can now be even more clearly and markedly shown by generous, open-handed response to China's cry for aid. This aid will not be given to any class, but to all who need. The cry is the call of distressed humanity to humanity."

Burying the Dead in Pits

Letters from missionaries in China give the very latest reports of the Shansi famine. It is making havoc of the inhabitants of plains and mountains alike. All food stuffs are so scarce as to be practically unobtainable. A large proportion of the people are now beggars, and the highways and fields are dotted with those who fall from exhaustion. Government has established rice kitchens in Hsian, Sunyuan and several other cities. Crowds of famished sufferers stay around the relief kitchens, many only to die. The dead are carried out daily in large numbers. Nearly every family has some of its members among the victims.

In Hsian, it is said, hundreds of thousands crowd around the relief stations, and many hundreds die daily. Great pits are dug for the reception of the dead.

The Government does not discriminate against the Christians in giving the meagre relief dole. Some time ago, an imperial proclamation was issued, enjoining protection for missionaries and Christian converts. There is no complaint now of lack of protection. It would seem as though the universal suffering in Shansi had taken away every trace of the recent bitterness.

...REVERENCE FOR

LAUDABLE DOMESTIC VIRTUES..

IN a remarkably interesting little volume translated from the original Chinese of Lady Tsao, by Mrs. S. L. Baldwin (the wife and collaborator of the well known American missionary Rev. S. L. Baldwin), there is much to enlighten and instruct the American reader concerning Chinese life and character. The writer deals almost wholly with the domestic side of the people of the "Flowery Kingdom," and devotes entire chapters to the cultivation of virtue, woman's work, weaving, politeness, early rising, reverence for parents, reverence for father-in-law and mother-in-law, treatment of guests and gentleness and harmony. Her book is quaintly illustrated.

At this time, when public interest here is centered on the great famine in Shansi, some extracts from this volume will be timely, as showing the character and surroundings of the people of no particular province, but of China as a whole. It should be remembered that the passing centuries have made but little change in the people of that ancient empire, or in their manners and social customs.

Mrs. Baldwin in her preface writes:

China is certainly in advance of every other heathen nation, in that her wise men and women have ever lifted up a pure and good standard of life before the people. Confucius gave them the second table of the law—man's duty to man; but alas! knowing not the first—man's duty to God, and living many years before the revelation of Christ the Saviour, Exemplar and Helper, neither Confucius nor his people could measure up to their own lofty standards.

In the opening chapter on the "Cultivation of Virtue" the author says:

All girls, everywhere,
First should learn to cultivate virtue.
Of cultivating virtue's methods,
The most important is
To be pure and upright in morals;
If pure, you can clean inside and outside;
Chastity is your body's glory;
Having it, all your acts shine.
When walking, look straight, turn not your head;
Talking, restrain your voice within your teeth;
Sitting, don't shake your knees—a common fault with men;
Standing, keep quiet your skirts;
When pleased, laugh not aloud;
If angry, still make no noise;
To men who are not with you related you may not speak.

With women and girls of not careful conduct you may not associate.
Following virtue, decorum, and uprightness, you so accomplish the end of your being.

Chapter IV. is on "Early Rising." It opens:

All girls, everywhere,
Listen to the following:
Before the sun has fully risen,
At the cock's crowing time
Arise, and dress yourself with care.
Dress neatly, not showily.
Comb your hair and wash your face;
Then at once to the kitchen go;
Of the fire be very careful.
See that the kitchen is clean,
And all the cooking utensils.
Your food, in quantity and quality,
Prepare very carefully,
According to the poverty or riches of your family.
In seasoning food,
Observe careful rules, and be not careless as to whether the food
Shall be sweet, fresh, and fragrant.
Let the cups and plates be clean,
And arranged in order on the table.

Let the three meals be regular,
And properly prepared.
At daylight rising,
Delay not upon the day's work to enter.
Lazy women do not imitate;
They are too idle even to think.
When dark, they go to sleep,
And when the sun is three feet high,
They still are in their beds.
When they rise, it is already late;
But for this they know not shame.
They hasten to the kitchen,
With hair uncombed and face unwashed.
The tea and rice by them prepared
Is scarcely fit to eat,
And all they do is with haste and confusion.
Another class there is you must not imitate.
They think of nothing but eating;
Before the food is fully prepared,
Before their husbands have eaten,
They are eating, here a little, there a little.
Surely this is very disgraceful!
Of such conduct beware.

Chapter V. is entitled "Reverence for Parents." It says:

Girls not yet gone out from their homes [not married]
Must carefully reverence their parents;
Early rise, and to them
The morning salutations present.
If cold, build a fire to warm them;
If warm, use a fan to cool them;
If they are hungry, hasten to supply them food;
If thirsty, prepare for them the tea.

SERVING AFTERNOON TEA

If your parents rebuke you,
Receive it not impatiently,
But, standing in their presence,
Hear with reverence and obedient heart,
And repent of and forsake the wrong.
The words of your parents,
Regard as beyond all others important;
Obey their instructions;
Turn not away your head,
And be not stiff-necked.

If you do wrong, confess to your parents,

Requesting instruction and reproof.

When your parents became old,

Morning and night be sorrowful and fearful;

Their clothes, food, and drink,

With the utmost care provide,

Observing the demands

Of the four seasons in your care for them.

If your parents are sick,

Leave not their bedside,

Loosen not your girdle to lie down;

The tea and the medicine,

Yourself first taste

To be sure that it is just right.

Cease not to cry unto heaven,

Or to pray in the ancestral temple,

That they may be restored.

Never let it be said

That your parents died

For lack of attention from you.

When they die

Your very bones should grieve.

The eighth chapter is on the "Instruction of Children." It proceeds:

Families generally have both boys and girls.

When they are three or four years old
It is important to begin their instruction.
This work is truly the mother's.
When old enough to have teachers
The boys and the girls may not study together,
But in different rooms, with different teachers.

First let them learn politeness;

Afterward their respective duties in life.

Then they may learn to compose

Both poetry and prose.

Their teacher let them obey and reverence,

And carefully present to him the usual gifts.

When first he is invited to teach

Let great politeness be observed,

And no confusion occur.

When the spring flowers open,

And the moon shines at night,

Let the children play in the garden,

The women on meeting the teacher

May only speak one sentence in salutation,

Then immediately retire to the inner apartments.

Girls must dwell in the secluded rooms;

Seldom permit them to go outside.

When they are called they must come;

When told to go, let them obey.

If disobedient in the least,

Use small switches and punish them.

The inner rooms' [girls'] instructions

Most carefully observe.

Sweeping the rooms, burning the incense,

And all the duties of women,

Let the girls thoroughly learn.

Teach them the courtesies to guests,

That they may know how to present salutations,

And to restrain their voices;

To carry tea and refreshments to guests,

Walking steadily and with grace.

Let them not be petted and spoiled,

Causing other people to talk about them.

Let them not go to other houses,

Lest they cease to respect strangers.

Let them not sing songs,

Lest their voices be heard outside,

And evil words be spoken of them.

Let them not play here, there, and everywhere,

Lest their deeds become evil.

The present generation's children

Are very bad:

They have learned nothing.

Boys know not how to read;

They grow up following their own wills,

Drinking wine, and seeking only amusement,

Living idle and useless lives,

Singing songs and dancing,

Disregarding their family duties,

And fearing not their country's laws.

Girls, too, are unwilling to learn;

They are stubborn and talkative;

They know little of woman's duties,

Thus they injure themselves and their superiors.

When grown, they find themselves disgraced.

Then they are displeased with their parents,

And think not to blame themselves;

Their evil words hurt their parents' ears.

Such girls are worse than wild cats!

Aid for Jacksonville

ON learning of the disastrous conflagration at Jacksonville, and the consequent suffering among the poor, many of whom have been rendered homeless, the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD wired the following message to the Governor of Florida:

NEW YORK, May 5, 1901.

GOVERNOR OF FLORIDA:

Deeply sympathizing with the people of Jacksonville, we congratulate them that excellent management and marvelous self-control under extreme conditions, averted terrible fatalities that must otherwise have resulted. Please draw on us at sight for one thousand dollars, and consider us at your command for hearty co-operation in relief measures.

LOUIS KLOPSCH.

Our Great Opportunity

NEVER before were we so anxious to induce quick response to an appeal for aid as in the present instance of China, because never before was presented to Christian America a like opportunity to make an ineffaceable impression upon a truly heathen people. The Chinese have but recently maltreated and massacred our missionaries. According to their own religion, they have nothing to expect but punishment. But now, defeated and crushed, devastated by war and decimated by pestilence and famine with death staring them in the face, they appeal to us for help, for, somehow other, our missionaries, many of whom they have slain, have impressed them with the fact that Christians are kind, merciful, and forgiving. And they need kindness, they need mercy, they need forgiveness. Their only hope is now centered in Christian America. If we suppress their cry, then are they desolate, indeed their pathetic appeal, as voiced by Hung Chang, is the cry of despair—appeal to the last resort. If unanswered they die; if answered, they live—and a life once saved by Christian charity can never again be very far from the Kingdom.

The provinces of Shansi and Shensi have heretofore, but to a very limited extent, admitted the light of the Sun of Righteousness. Of the little band of missionaries who labored there, the major have laid down their lives for the Master. All Christian America was represented by the missionaries who were there, sacred. If we now return good for evil if we bless them that curse us; if we are good to those who have persecuted us, the persons of our missionaries, we teach these benighted people a lesson that will open the doors of provinces, towns, homes and hearts to the influence of our blessed religion. We will teach them that it actuates us, that we are sorry for them, that we forgive them, that we mean to help them, that we have their best interests sincerely at heart, that Christianity knows no revenge, and that "our Rock is not their Rock, even our enemies themselves being the judges."

India afforded us indeed a great opportunity. We availed ourselves of it to a degree that has left an imperishable impression on its dusky millions. In a single district, over 11,000 souls are now witnessing the missionaries for baptism, and at the present time tens of thousands of famine orphans are being raised in Christian orphanages. What the outcome of this tremendous movement will be for the cause of Christ, eternity alone can reveal.

And in China, the conditions are even more inviting. One-fourth of the entire population of the globe are within its confines. Whatever the effect of Christian charity may be on the two afflicted provinces, it will soon communicate itself to all of China, and if we avail ourselves of this exceptional and providential opportunity, who can tell but that China, appreciating the kindness shown by people whom they grievously offended, may even as India, or perhaps in a still larger measure, turn to Jesus, and accept him as "the one altogether lovely, the fairest among ten thousand."

And to hasten that glorious day, we in Li Hung Chang in this appeal in behalf of that twenty-five millions of starving people. We call upon Christ's followers everywhere, who with joy look forward to his coming again, to help us in this effort and themselves to give liberally out of the abundance wherewith God has blessed them, that the way may be made straight and the day hastened for the reappearance of Him whom long since in our hearts we have crowned King of kings.

Let every Church, every Sunday School, every Christian Endeavor Society, every Epworth League, every Young People's Society, every consecrated man and terror-stricken woman, unite in making this relief movement for China's starving millions an unexampled demonstration of Christian charity, so decided and impressive that it cannot fail to accomplish the great and glorious results we anticipate. The opposite blank, with explanatory matter on the reverse side, may be used to great advantage in soliciting contributions, and duplicates will be gladly forwarded in any quantity, free, on request. 3 cts. will save a life for a day. Freely we have received therefore let us freely give. For the saving of how many lives will you be responsible?

In case you soil or tear this blank, an ordinary sheet of paper may be substituted.

Li Hung Chang Appeals to Us for Help

In Behalf of Eleven Million of His Countrymen on the Verge of Starvation

A FAMINE of fearful violence affects the Provinces of Shansi and Shensi in China, aggregating over 100,000 square miles and embracing a population of nearly twenty-five million souls. Prolonged drought, devastation by war, and decimation by pestilence, have contributed to reduce the quiet, peaceful farmers of the affected district to straits horrible to contemplate, and in the intense agony of hopeless despair they cry out to Christian America for relief.

Earl Li's Urgent Appeal

Li Hung Chang, the Viceroy of China, who himself has already largely contributed to the amelioration of the terrible condition of affairs, recognizing the utter inability of the Chinese people to help themselves in the terrible affliction that has befallen them, cabled the following urgent appeal to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in the hope that prosperous America, regardless of the immediate past, would not fail to respond in the same liberal, open-handed and open-hearted manner that has uniformly characterized her noble charities in the past.

Government, Peking, April 25.

Editor Christian Herald, New York:

Very serious famine spreads over Province Shansi. Over eleven million population affected. Urgent relief necessary. Conditions warrant immediate appeal.

(Signed) LI HUNG CHANG. (Seal)

* "Seal" indicates that the communication is official.

Literally Eating Each Other

(From New York Herald)

Minister Conger, in forwarding to Rev. Dr. Talmage the sum of $100, in response to his appeal in behalf of the famine-stricken people of Shansi, says that the condition of the unfortunate people referred to is beyond description. "Prince Ching told me only two days before I left Peking," said Mr. Conger, "that these people were literally eating each other." They have eaten every blade of grass, every bit of bark—everything, in fact, that can be eaten in that province. Nothing has been raised there for two years, and unless relief is given, many, many thousands must perish.

Children Sold for Bread

Hon. Chow Tszchi, the Chinese Consul General, joining in the appeal, writes:

The Chinese here, the Chinese at home, our poor people, our nobles, our Emperor, will appreciate any help the good Christian people of America may send to our starving brothers in Shansi.

Beggars abound everywhere; men and women fall in the fields, and are devoured by wild beasts; families sell their children for bread.

He also encloses the following letter from one who recently journeyed through the provinces in which to-day men and women and children are dying by the roadside, as they did last year in India:

Cooking Leather Boxes

It is a great famine. We have never heard of anything so terrible. The Empress Dowager and Emperor were good enough to give 100,000 taels to our relief society, and from the Viceroy down to the workman, every one is contributing, but we need far more than we get.

A man just came from a village outside of this city, and described the condition of the starving people, which made me feel as though I was among them. Thirty dollars was the price of a bag of rice. The poor have no rice; they killed everything in sight—cooked even leather boxes or bags, and stewed tree bark and grass. Some of them were so famished that they were even eating earth.

On the first day, he saw a number of poor people trying to sell their children for rice. On the second, he saw the same party lying starving on the road, and on the third day, about half of them were dead, and their miserable bodies were lying at the mercy of hungry dogs and wolves.

Houses Occupied by the Dead

How sad this is! Nearly every city, town or village we passed through was deserted, or the houses were occupied by the dead. It is said that in one town the people have opened a human flesh market; but this seems hardly credible.

Another friend told me of a family of nine. The mother could not bear the cry of the famished children, so she hung herself. The father became insane and killed all seven children, and finally committed suicide. They were of good family, and did not wish to beg for food, nor to sell the children.

The Governor's Quaint Appeal

Finally, the Governor of Shansi has issued the following heart-touching proclamation, calling upon Chinese at home and abroad, and Christian men and women in all parts of the world, to help his suffering people in their sore distress:

To Our Own People and Foreigners:—This time the famine is more serious than ever, because in the north are the Allied troops, and in the south we have several places in rebellion. China is very poor now, and the people are in such a straitened condition that no very big assistance can be expected from them. Since more than several months now, the famine has been beginning in places in this province. In some villages they are eating human flesh.

All our brothers in the world should be very sorry for us, and should know how unfortunate we are. We wish all our people to share some of your money which you spend amusing yourselves, and for traveling, and for dressing, and for all kinds of comforts, to rescue these poor people. It is much better to save the starving and dying men, women and last year we exceeded our combined bountiful gifts in another magnificent contribution toward the relief of India's suffering millions.

True to the promise contained in his precious Word

Thou shalt surely give him, and thine heart shall not be grieved when thou givest unto him: because that for this thing the Lord thy God shall bless thee in all thy works, and in all that thou puttest thine hand unto (Deut. 15: 10).

God has graciously blessed and prospered our beloved land to an absolutely unprecedented degree. Wealth has been poured into our lap, factories have been re-opened, looms silent for years have again been set to work. The railroads of the land, notwithstanding their largely increased facilities, have been tested to their utmost capacity by crops unparalleled in the world's history, and the Government reports indicate a coming crop exceeding

Another Testing Time

And now has come another testing time. Once again, a portion of God's footstool is sorely afflicted. Once again, a hungry, starving, suffering people raise toward their attenuated hands in earnest supplication, and unite their voices in a concerted plea for help. Shall we turn aside and refuse to answer? Shall we say them, "Your people did thus and so, and you must not expect anything from us. No, indeed! Unworthy would be such course for those who profess to follow the footsteps of the lowly Nazarene who went about doing good to friend and foe alike, who even laid down his life for his enemies, and whose sacred lips gave utterance to these words:

Love ye your enemies, and do good, and loving for nothing again; and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the Highest for he is kind, unto the unthankful and to the evil (Luke 6: 35).

Our Duty and our Resolve

"Let the dead past bury its dead. These people, though their skin be yellow, though their customs be strange, though they live in a different climate, though they have erred, and grievously erred, yet are they our brethren, and will not desert them in this hour of terrible affliction and distress.

They shall not die if we can prevent it. Their children shall not be sold for food for to them they are as dear as our own prattling babes are to us; they shall not starve, seeing that God has given us enough and to spare. Out of our abundance will we assist them, and God help us, we will do to them as we would, under similar conditions, have them do to us, thus reducing the Golden Rule to practice, we will give them bread to the extent of our individual ability.

The Continent of our Lord's Birth

This pathetic cry for bread comes from the continent of Asia, concerning which Dr. Talmage says:

Egypt gave to us its monuments, Rome gave to us its law, Germany gave to us its philosophy, Asia gave to us its Christ. His mother an Asiatic; the mountains that looked down upon him, and the lakes on whose pebbly banks he rested, and on whose chopped waves he walked, Asia; the apostles whom he first commissioned, Asia; the audiences he whelmed with illustrations drawn from blooming lilies, and salt crystals, and great rainfalls, and bellowing tempests, and hypocrites' long faces, and croaking ravens—all those Asiatic things. Christ, during his earthly stay, was but once outside of Asia.

An Exceptional Opportunity

The Brooklyn Times, in an able editorial, well states the case as follows:

The famine in China affords the people of the United States an opportunity to show the people of that country another phase of American civilization. The charity of the American people is never been appealed to in vain for the relief of suffering, and in this case, there is added reason why that relief should be prompt and liberal. A generously sustained famine fund will show the people of China that the Americans, at least, recognize them as fellow-men, and that in spite of our restrictive legislation, in spite of our tacit shame the nameless infamies that have been perpetrated by our allies in China, we have no enmity against them. In this way, we can best commend our religion to their favorable regard, and we can advance the interests of American commerce in the East. For every reason, for the cause of religion, for the advancement of our commercial interests, and for the good name of the United States, the response of the American people to the appeal of Li Hung Chang, should be prompt and liberal beyond precedent.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has arranged to transmit and distribute relief by cable. Every contribution received, however small, will be now publicly acknowledged in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and later on, Christ himself shall say in heaven, when in taking account of his servants the Master shall say unto us:

Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, New York:

The suffering of the famine-stricken people in Shansi is indescribable. Your plan of relief is the best. Put matter in hands of our Consuls at Shanghai and Tientsin, and heads of Missions there. Chinese Government and people will be grateful. Demands of humanity will be answered, and future good will result. I send by letter One Hundred Dollars.

America Their Only Hope

In their helpless despair, these starving people appeal to us, for somehow or other our missionaries have impressed them with the fact that Christians are kind, merciful and forgiving. They need kindness, they need mercy, they need forgiveness. Their only hope is now centered in Christian America. If we spurn their cry then are they desolate indeed. Their pathetic appeal as voiced by Li Hung Chang is the cry of despair, an appeal to the last resort. If unanswered, they die. If answered, they live—and the life once saved by Christian charity can never again be very far from the kingdom.

God's Promises Fulfilled

Three years ago we gave liberally to India, then to Cuba, then to Puerto Rico, in quantity and richness any yet harvested.

Business all over the country has revived to an amazing degree, and work has become more plentiful and more profitable than ever. The physical health of this favored people has never been better than at present. No epidemic or plague has been permitted to gather its victims from among our loved ones, and, basking in the sunshine of Providence, we enjoy a full measure of happiness, health, prosperity, and of God's favor.

Surely all this is in literal fulfillment of the blessings promised throughout God's word to those who give to the poor, that the Lord will guide them continually, and they shall be

"Like a watered garden and like a spring of water, whose waters fail not."

Russia's Emperor

RECENT news from Russia indicates that there is a subsidence of the disturbances which at one time looked like premonitions of revolution. It appears that the outbreak originated in certain arbitrary measures, which the Emperor either initiated or sanctioned, affecting the Universities. They were practically a prohibition of the students' mass meetings, which the Emperor apparently regarded as being likely to foster sedition. In defiance of these laws the students at Kieff held a meeting and were promptly arrested. The Minister of Education, by the Czar's orders, nominated a court composed jointly of police officers and university professors, to try the culprits. This court acted with immense rigor, and condemned nearly two hundred students to exclusion from the universities, for long periods. Nor was this all their punishment; those who were eligible for military service were drafted into the army and were ordered to Manchuria. Twelve of these young men refused to take the oath required of soldiers; after a court martial were condemned to death. Thereupon the students of other universities rose in protest, and there was a general outburst of indignation, in which the workingmen manifested their sympathy with the students. M. Bogolepoff, the Minister of Education, was shot, and there were numerous signs of hostility to the Emperor. In this crisis the Cabinet Ministers, who in former times were merely secretaries, assumed the attitude of constitutional advisers of the Emperor, and pointed out to him the mistake he had made. As the Emperor undoubtedly means well, and is a generous and conscientious ruler, he took the advice of his ministers in good part. He withdrew the orders which had provoked the disturbance, deposed the officials who had used unnecessary violence in suppressing the disorders and sanctioned the release of many of the students' from prison. He has also appointed, as successor to the murdered minister, a man of progressive spirit, who is popular with the students, and has guaranteed them a free hand, without any interference, for two years, in reorganizing the entire educational system of the empire. The outcome is very gratifying, not only because it pacifies the students, but because it shows the drift of Russia in the direction of constitutional government, which, if the Emperor only knew it, would relieve him of much harass and responsibility. Meanwhile the popularity of the young autocrat and his wife is increasing throughout the Empire. The people hear with pleasure of his domesticity and his religious observances, and regard him with loyalty and esteem. We may hope that a man so personally estimable will show increasingly in his government regard for the injunctions of the Bible, and heed the words that God addressed to the rulers of his chosen people through his prophets:

Princes of Israel: remove violence and spoil, and execute judgment and justice, take away your exactions from my people, saith the Lord (Ezekiel 45: 9).

Jewels Tested by X-Rays

A skillful scientist of Sterling, Ill., has discovered a new application of the Roentgen rays, by which true precious stones can be distinguished from imitation. He has been experimenting for more than a year, and has at last perfected the process. He uses a red plate, encased in an orange envelope, covered by the folds of heavy, black paper. Every kind of stone has been tested, including pearls, diamonds, rubies, sapphires, and amethysts. Mixed with them were the imitation stones that could be procured, some of which were so good that they had been pronounced genuine by experts. In the photograph there is hardly a trace of the genuine stones, but the false stones are all black, and leave sharp, well-defined silhouettes on the plate. In every case the image of the genuine jewel is clear and black through the stone. Without exception, every manufactured or false jewel he has tested has left a black image, well-defined, and the claws and setting are indistinct. With such a test as this, fraud and imitation become self-evident, for the light reveals them. So it is with character in the light that proceeds from God. The hypocrite is exposed under its beam.

He revealeth the deep and secret things: he knoweth what is in the darkness, and the light dwelleth with him (Daniel 2: 22).

An Unconscious Marriage

A divorce suit without precedent has resulted from a marriage which took place nine years ago in New York. A certain French Count was amazed recently by receiving a letter from a lady in this country, upbraiding him for deserting her and her child, and begging him to return to them, or at least, to remit funds for their support. As the Count had never been in America, and had never been married, and knew nothing of his correspondent, he could not understand the letter. He wrote to her declaring his ignorance, and most positively assuring her that he had never married her. Inquiry was made of the Government, and in the Bureau of Statistics in Paris it was found that the marriage had been duly registered in the French Consulate in New York, and that the Consul, as was his duty, according to law, had notified the Bureau in Paris. There was no difficulty in proving that the Count was at Heron in Normandy at the time that the marriage took place in historic family. But a quarrel arose between him and another officer, which led to a duel, in which he was wounded but slew his antagonist. Fearing court martial and probable execution, he fled to America, landing at New Orleans, utterly penniless. For a time hunger drove him to accept the menial employment of a dishwasher in a restaurant. But one of the customers, a watch-maker, noticed him and offered to teach him the trade. He joyfully accepted, and soon became expert. During the Civil War he served in the Confederate army, and after peace was proclaimed, he came, penniless again, to New York. Once more he began life in a restaurant kitchen, and for some months lived in bitter poverty. Again he made a friend, who gave him a start in trade, which he made the most of. Gradually his business increased, and he is now doing a fair trade. He had been afraid to use his real name or to communicate with his friends in Germany. At last, however, he has learned that he was tried in his absence for the duel in 1856, and was sentenced to banishment for forty-five years, and during that time to be deprived of any property in Germany which might fall to him. The forty-five years of his sentence will expire next month, and he is now preparing to return and enter on the possession of his title and estates. He will sail two weeks ahead of time, so that his banishment may not last a single day longer than is necessary. He will halt on the German frontier, and when the day arrives, he will cross the border and declare himself. His eagerness to be back in his native land is pathetic. Would that there were the same intense desire on the part of those to whom Christ offers pardon, which he has won for them by his own blood!

Ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ . . . Ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God (Eph. 2: 13, 19).

BRIEF NOTES

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan will bid a final farewell to his English friends on June 10 before coming to America to take up his evangelistic labors. The farewell meeting will take place in the City Temple, of which Dr. Joseph Parker is pastor.

The committee on Revision of the Presbyterian Creed has issued its report. It recommends changes in five chapters, which are specified, and advises that the General Assembly, to be held in Philadelphia this week, appoint a committee to do the work.

The American Board has appointed a committee to visit the Board's Missions in India and Ceylon. Dr. James L. Barton, one of the secretaries of the Board, Dr. Jean F. Loba of Evanston, Ill., and William F. Whittemore of Boston, Mass., constitute the committee. They expect to spend about seven or eight months in the work.

George Foster Peabody, of New York, has offered $35,000 for the erection of a Young Men's Christian Association building in Columbus, Ga., provided the churches would pledge themselves to maintain it. He also offered $20,000 for a Young Men's Christian Association building for negroes under the same conditions.

Bishop H. C. Potter, of New York, paid a compliment to the Jewish people a few days ago at a meeting of Jews in Temple Emanu-el. He urged his hearers to make America their land of promise and to endeavor to make it the land of Jewish ideals.

The American Auxiliary to the McAll Mission in Paris, reports that the receipts of the past year were in excess of the previous year by $5,000. Reports of the work done in the New York Hall show the benefits it confers on the people of Paris.

The American Committee of Young Women's Christian Associations held the eighth biennial convention recently at Nashville, Tenn. The Associations of sixteen States were represented. Since its organization 34,657 children have passed through the Home.

Among the speakers who have promised to take part in the jubilee celebration of the Y. M. C. A. at Boston in June are Bishop Potter, of New York; Bishop Baldwin, of Canada; Dr. Francis E. Clark, of the Christian Endeavor Society; Admiral Sampson; President Northrop, of Minnesota; Dr. Wilbert White, of Montclair, N. Mr. H. B. Gibbud, of Springfield, Mass., writes that he would be glad to undertake street preaching, and the distribution of tracts, in Buffalo, N. Y., during the five months of the Exposition. Similar work conducted at Chicago during the World's Fair was greatly blessed. He can have the use of a Gospel wagon, tent, and organ. Helpers would be willing to go without remuneration, save actual cost of board and traveling expenses. If he receives sufficient funds he will start at once. He estimates that about one thousand or twelve hundred dollars would cover all expenses.

EMPEROR AND EMPRESS OF RUSSIA ATTENDING DIVINE SERVICE IN A MILITARY CAMP

New York. It was evident that some miscreant had personated the Count and had married the girl under a false name. Legal advice was taken and it was deemed wise, in view of the fact that the heirship of large estates was involved, and that the marriage had been legally registered, that the Count should not dispute the marriage, but should sue for an annulment. The case accordingly has been set down for hearing. The Count sympathizes with the wife, who evidently acted in good faith, believing that she was really married to him, but he will do nothing for her. She is to be pitied, for she is the victim of deceit. There is reason to fear that there are many who are the victims of still more disastrous delusion. When men undertake to speak in the name of Christ and to assure anxious people that they are safe in him, when no real conversion has taken place, they do harm which may involve eternal ruin.

They have seduced my people, saying, Peace; and there was no peace (Ezek. 13: 10).

Forty-five Years Exiled

A pathetic story of suffering and hardship is published in the New York Herald. It is related by a watch-mender living in Houston street, New York. He is a German by birth, but has been away from his native land since 1856. In that year he was a lieutenant in the Fourth Uhlans then stationed in the Province of Magdeburg. He had passed creditably through the Universities of Bonn and Heidelberg, and was looking forward to the time when he would inherit the large paternal estates, and assume the noble title as head of an

America's Relief Work

THE BLESSING FALLS ON INDIA

Thousands of Natives
Drawn to Christ.....

WHEN THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its readers, moved by the appalling reports of suffering in India, undertook the work of relieving the famine-stricken people, the hope was indulged that the beneficence might tend to advance the cause of Christ in that afflicted land. Natives who might be prejudiced against Christianity, or might not understand its principles, could understand and appreciate the gift of food. For this reason, chiefly, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was careful that the relief should be distributed by missionaries, so that the natives should perceive that it was distinctively a Christian gift. They might understand why the Government should feed them, but when people on the other side of the world, who had never seen them, and who had no selfish ends to serve, took compassion on them in their affliction, and sent them food, they might realize how beneficent a religion Christianity is. Our readers will rejoice to learn that there is reason to believe that our hopes will be realized. Already, from one portion of the field, has come the report of such an ingathering of souls as the world has rarely, if ever, witnessed. In this section alone it is believed that the number of souls brought to Christ, as a result of this beneficence, will be near ten thousand. If there is so large a harvest in one district what may we not hope for from all India! Are we not justified in calling upon our readers to join with us in thanking God for so blessing their gifts not only to the rescue of the starving, but to the salvation of souls? Surely, if God is waiting to so bless the work done in the name of Christ, we shall go on to avail ourselves of every opportunity, whether in China or elsewhere, to win the heathen, by practically showing them the power of his Spirit over our hearts.

The report of this wonderful work of grace comes from Rev. D. O. Fox, a graduate of the Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., who has been laboring in India for thirty-one years. He is stationed in Gujarat, a province to the north of Bombay, with a population of ten millions. Though his white hair tells of his three score years, he has been active in relief work during the famine and is now doing efficient service in gathering in the spiritual harvest. "Thousands of natives," he says, "are presenting themselves for baptism, well knowing that by that ceremony they cut themselves off from their old associations and from heathenism forever."

Bishop Thoburn, who is now in this country recovering from a severe illness, has received a fuller report and is full of joy at the tidings. He writes:

"All through the dark days of the famine our native preachers and other workers have been faithfully pursuing their calling, while the missionaries have been most devoted, not only in helping the perishing poor, but in keeping distinctly before the people the fact that they are among them as messengers of God. The result is that the door of access to the people stands wider open to-day to the Christian missionary than at the beginning of the famine. No one can now say that the thronging converts are solely for the bread that perisheth, yet inquirers are coming forward at a rate never before witnessed.

"I have just received a letter from E. F. Frease, presiding elder of the Gujarat District. He writes that two of our missionaries, D. O. Fox and W. E. Robbins have recently been visiting the many applicants for baptism reported from the various parts of the district, and that, in the course of three days, they had baptized about eighteen hundred converts. These baptisms occurred at three different points. The largest number baptized in a single day was between eight and nine hundred.

"This, however, is only the beginning of the work. Mr. Frease, after making a careful estimate, assisted by other brethren in the Gujarat field, had written me that he thought eight thousand persons, who showed all the marks of sincerity, were waiting to receive baptism as soon as the proper parties could go to him. His estimate was considered a little extravagant, but he now writes that he feels certain that, instead of eight thousand, he should have said ten thousand, and it is very possible that even ten thousand is too low a figure. In other words, we have now reached a point where a more startling responsibility is thrust upon us than we have ever before known in any foreign field. Year after year, I have borne my testimony to the Church in America that not only does a crisis confront us in India, but also in China and that before long the same would be true of other mission fields. God is throwing a new opportunity upon his people.

When Spring Flowers Bloom

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

BURNLEY

Woman's Right to Wage-Earning Work

NOT long ago a prominent New York periodical inserted a paragraph to the effect that some business men would not employ women, because they thought that every woman employed on a salary deprived some man of a position, and thus prevented him from caring for a home. A St. Louis merchant was quoted as refusing to employ women clerks in his store, although it costs him considerably more money per annum to employ only men. Altruism of this sort is doubtless exceedingly rare. As a rule, when a merchant discriminates in favor of men, he does so from an eye to his own interests. Women are still comparatively new to business, except in certain lines, and employers complain with some reason that they are less responsible than men, that they take up work merely as a stop-gap on the road to matrimony, and that they are deficient in thoroughness and oversensitive to blame. A woman is always expecting some concession to her as a woman. Men monopolize and always will do so, because of their firmer physical organization, all employments demanding sheer bodily strength. Men work in the mines and machine shops of the world; they build the ships, and lay the rails, and tunnel the subways, and erect the bridges and cathedrals and many-storied houses. Men are soldiers and sailors; they are engineers, firemen, and car-conductors. They will probably continue in the great majority as bankers and brokers, as heads of great corporations, and as surgeons, lawyers and clergymen. Here and there a woman may make her mark in finance, or rather may be a successful pleader before the bar, another a sympathetic and eloquent minister of the Gospel, while many may excel in the healing art and in whatever it implies. But the great professions and the more conspicuous callings will always enlist men in preference to women.

Women have, however, no restricted field, and when a woman stands behind a counter and sells chiffons and ribbons and calicoes, it hardly seems as if she is out of place. She probably, so far from taking the bread from a man, is helping to support a family. A father, a brother, an aged mother may depend on her. Not one woman in a hundred among wage-earning women in any department endeavors, toils only for herself. She always has somebody, often she has several somebodies, whom she feeds, clothes, educates and generally provides for. In our public schools, places as teachers are not open to married women, but of the single women who teach, it is well understood that few can save much money, so most are bread-winners for their relatives. Since the typewriter came into universal use, the whole face of the business world has been changed. Step into a downtown restaurant in any great city at the noon-hour, and one meets a throng of neatly-clad, modest, self-reliant girls and women, whose avocation it is to run the little clicking machines which record the merchant's correspondence. But a woman as yet seldom succeeds as a court stenographer, and until she is more accurate than a man, and equally as tireless, she will not usurp his position in that or any other line. The great trouble with women is twofold: They are uneven in performance and they cannot keep their temper. Whenever a woman is capable, efficient, amiable, prompt and strong, she will succeed in any province for which her muscular outfit is equal. As for pushing men out of good places, that charge is unfounded. There is plenty of work for everybody, and no rivalry exists between the sexes as such. The lame and the lazy have always been provided for by the rest of the world, and they probably will be cared for till the end of time.

A FLOWER GIRL

HERSELF as fair as a flower of spring,
Just brushed by the south winds silken wing,
She holds her flowers in a woven basket;
She will give you a rose if you'll stop to ask it,
She and the roses are here together;
In morning and sunshine and golden weather.

—PANSY. A young man who is deeply in love will be satisfied to devote himself to one girl. If his attentions are general, whatever he may say, he is nobody's lover, but rather a squire of dames.

—IN DOUBT. You are fighting straws. Certainly you love your husband and need have no hesitation in telling him so. Your nature may not be demonstrative, but your character is womanly and true.

—CONSTANT READER. If you are writing to a comparative stranger, say "My Dear Miss Jones." If you know the lady quite well, you may say "Dear Miss Nellie." "Dearest Nellie" is only for great intimacy.

How to Manage Help

A NEBRASKA reader, who has taken much interest in the discussion of the domestic problem, writes in a common-sense vein, and gives some good counsel. She says: "In my country home duties are plentiful. With a little planning on Saturday I arrange for the Sunday meals, so that my help may attend church and spend the rest of the day at home with her own people. This I consider fair after a week of faithful service. On week days, supper is usually over by seven, and she has her evenings at her own disposal.

"During the last year we were especially fortunate in having good help, both outdoors and in. When the wintry days and the long evenings came, husband and I conceived the idea of giving a party for our two servants. We invited a few of their friends, and a dainty two-course luncheon was served. They seemed to appreciate the kindness. On my shopping day I often purchase some little gift, a handkerchief or such thing, as a present for them."

This lady is evidently applying the Golden Rule to daily life with good effect.

CRADLE SONG

SOFT and low the vesper bell,
Sounds its dreamy tinkle;
Where the goo-goo fairies dwell,
'Neath the star's clear twinkle.
Toward the land of hush-a-by,
Babies now are flocking;
Where the slumber-elves low sigh
Sets the cradle rocking.

Fluffy bird-kins all asleep
In their nests so cosy;
While the cricket's drowsy cheep
Echoes dull and prosy.
Fireflies light their evening lamps;
Katydid are chiding—
Down among their mossy camps,
Daisy-buds are hiding.

Goldie locks and curls of brown—
Lads and lassies all go Tripping off to Bedford Town—
On the river By-low.
From the cloud-ships sailing high
Floats a dreamy measure,
Sleepy baby's lullaby,
Mother's dearest treasure.

—Adelia Pope Branham, in "Grandma's Tales," Greenfield, Ind.

The Need of Self-Control

Dear friends, the great crises of life come to us at long intervals, the great trials are infrequent, and calamities occur only now and then. But every single day we have opportunities to use self-control, to keep back the hasty word, to repress the hysterical outburst over a trifle, to restrain our expressions of annoyance, of surprise, or of resentment. The habit of self-control must be formed little by little, day in and day out, as the years drift by. If we have acquired this, when the extraordinary demand arrives we shall have the means to meet it.

Gratitude from Servants

We continually hear persons bemoaning the non-existence of gratitude in servants. The word is misplaced. Why should they be grateful? Honorable and fair and candid they may be, but gratitude is not in the bond on either side, and whenever we do find it, there is proof that both parties have behaved remarkably well.

Chapter XIV.—Continued

"EH! you know her? you will bring her?" asked the sick man eagerly.

"Yes, I know her, and you surely know Margaret," she replied, using her own first name, because she felt that it might appeal to him more.

"Margaret! Margaret!" he said. "Yes, yes! Margaret and Marjorie; always together; one where the other is. Yes, Marjorie is coming!" and with a sigh he turned his head upon the pillow and seemed to fall asleep.

"So many times," said the nurse in attendance, "I have hoped he was falling into a truly refreshing sleep, only to meet with disappointment and have him waken to beg for Marjorie."

CHAPTER XV Anxious Days

THE attending physician had watched all very narrowly, and now motioned to Margaret to follow him from the room.

"Your arrival means more than you realize, for, as you say, the patient associates you with his daughter. If he now

Then began Margaret's labor of love, for she divided her time between caring for the father and writing to the daughter. The matron had supplied her with a nurse's uniform. Very business-like and very pretty she looked as she took her seat beside Dr. Prior's bedside and prepared to await the moment of his wakening. The hours slipped away and still he slept on, part of the time quietly, part of the time restlessly, and often murmuring Marjorie's name. Evening came, and the night nurse took the place of the day nurse, and prepared for the night of watching. To them it was a mere matter of detail—one case more or less, and the same round of duties day after day. But to Margaret it was very different, and she had ample time to think of the distance which separated her from her dear ones, and how critical was the situation, and, brave though she was, her heart was heavy.

The great building grew very silent as the hours crept along, and she could hear the ticking of the big clock at the end of the corridor. Outside all city sounds were hushed, save perhaps the distant rumble of a produce wagon on its way to the docks,

"OH, MY PRECIOUS PAPA CHECA!" CRIED MARJORIE has a restless sleep and can waken to recognize some familiar friend, it may do more toward his recovery than the united services of the institution could compass, for there is not a familiar face in the entire building. We do not usually share responsibility with outsiders, but in the present case I feel that rules were made for patients, and not patients for rules. You are willing to go into quarantine with us? That's what staying here amounts to."

"More than willing. I am greatly indebted to Dr. Prior for many acts of kindness, and his daughter is very dear to me; for her sake I wish to do all within my power."

"I don't know that I am right in permitting you to take this risk; but you've been a nurse, you tell me, and you know what you're facing. I will arrange with the matron for your accommodation, and will see that you are as comfortable as circumstances permit."

"Thank you very much. And now I would like to send a telegram to Marjorie."

"Certainly; do so by all means. The little girl up North will be relieved to get it."

Margaret wrote as comforting a message as she dared, and sent it to Johnson with instructions to wire at once.

or the unearthly yowling of a stray cat.

Eleven o'clock came, and the nurse, who had been dozing, arose at the stroke of the distant city clock, and came to renew the ice in the ice-bag resting upon the patient's head. He moaned slightly, and turned as though about to waken, but, with a restless toss, fell back into the dull sleep. The moments ticked by, and at a quarter to twelve the night physician, accompanied by the one whom Margaret had seen, came in. They stood for a moment talking in a low tone, and watching their patient very closely.

Just then the city clock began to strike the hour: One, two, three, four, and then Dr. Prior rose straight up in bed. Margaret went to his side, and just as the nurse was about to go to her assistance, the doctor laid a restraining hand upon her arm and said just one word, "Wait."

By some superhuman power, Dr. Prior held himself erect and stared about him, and then, turning his head, his eyes rested upon Margaret, who had placed her right arm about his shoulders, and was holding his hand in her left one.

For a moment the nurse's uniform seemed to baffle him, but then a look of intelligence coming into his face, he whispered:

"Miss Drake? Marjorie? Where am I?"

"With friends," said Margaret soothingly, "won't you lie down again and let me make you comfortable?"

"And Marjorie?" he asked, as he sank back upon his pillow.

"Marjorie is well, and you shall see her soon," and she smiled reassuringly.

It seemed that he had now learned all he wished to know, and still holding Margaret's hand, he laid it upon his pillow, and then resting his face against it like a weary child, drew a sigh of content and fell asleep again, but this time restfully.

The doctor came up to Margaret and said:

"Let me release you; it may be hours before he wakens."

"No, no; do not disturb him. I can keep quiet, and if I withdraw my hand it may arouse him. Let me stay here," she begged.

And for five long hours she sat in the same position, almost fearing to move lest she break the peaceful rest.

At five in the morning he awakened, and at once recognized her, but only smiled and whispered, "I shall get well now."

"Yes, I am sure you will, and you will soon be able to see Marjorie." But when Margaret tried to rise from her chair, and to use her hand, she learned what the long hours in that cramped position had done for her; for she could scarcely stand, and her left hand was entirely powerless.

The doctor, returning at that moment and seeing her condition, said: "I was afraid of this, and you see I now have two patients instead of one."

"Ah! but this case is by no means a serious one," she replied brightly, "and if Dr. Prior had been benefited by my discomfort it has been cheaply won."

But it was several hours before she could tell whether she had any fingers upon her left hand or not. The right one, however, had not lost its power, and ere another hour had passed, a message was speeding on its way to Marjorie; and as soon as the mail could convey it to her, a letter told her all the details. Irvington held no happier girl than Marjorie when the joyful tidings reached her. "God was good to give me a dear Miss Drake!" she said. "Nobody else in the world would have done what she has done for papa and me."

After writing, Margaret took a few hours much needed rest, and then returned to her post to find the patient greatly improved.

When she entered the room his face showed his pleasure, although he was too weak to talk. There was very little she could do, for the nurses left nothing undone; but her mere presence seemed such a comfort to him that she spent hour after hour at his bedside. As soon as it was considered safe to do so, they let Johnson see him, and the meeting was truly pathetic, for the good man strove so hard to seem composed, and all the time the tears were streaming down his face: "It's proper glad I am to see ye, sir—proper glad, indeed; and we will soon 'ave ye about again, sir, and travelin' away North to Miss Marjorie, sir—and a 'appy day it will be for her when she 'as ye once more in the old 'ome," and poor Johnson would perhaps have gone on indefinitely had not Margaret kindly come to the rescue by suggesting that he send another message to Marjorie on his own account, telling her that he had seen Dr. Prior, and that all was going well. And off he went, filled with joy that he could give happiness to both.

Then came days of patient nursing and unrelenting care, for Dr. Prior had been very near death's door. But at last the day arrived when the joyful message, "We sail at noon to-morrow," could be flashed over the wires; and when the good ship Concho sailed out of Galveston harbor on the following day it carried no happier being than Margaret, for her mission had not been in vain, and her patient, well wrapped in rugs and seated in a steamer chair, was breathing in the delicious air of the Gulf and gaining renewed strength with every breath.

Johnson hovered about, ready to minister to every want, real or imaginary, and Margaret was equal to any emergency.

"Miss Drake," said the doctor, a few days later, as they sat watching the sunlight dance upon the blue Atlantic, "I wonder if you can possibly appreciate how profound is my gratitude to you for this unselfish act?"

By Love's Sweet Rule

"I do not need the rug," Margaret replied, thinking that he alluded to her rug, which she had just thrown across his feet.

"I am thinking of a far more important matter than the rug, just now. How many do you suppose there are in this big world who would have taken such a journey as you have taken in order to minister to the wants of one whom a year ago was entirely unknown to you?"

"But, Dr. Prior, it was clearly my duty to come. There was no one else to do so, and Marjorie was nearly heart-broken."

"Could not Johnson have done so?"

"Oh, no!" exclaimed Margaret; "it would not have been the same. Johnson is very capable, but it needed some one who could both look to your needs, and at the same time keep Marjorie from grieving herself ill. Dear little girl, it has been a sad experience for her; but, thank Heaven, is ending well, and I can almost picture her joy at your meeting. If all goes well, we will land on Tuesday, and I am sure Rodman will bring her to meet us."

"Your sense of duty carries you far beyond the point the average person sets as a limit, and if duty alone could dictate such a sacrifice, what could we hope for if we won your affection?"

"Marjorie has won my sincere affection, Dr. Prior, and now holds the place next my own dear ones in my heart. The child has a very lovable character, and our close association during the past eight months has shown me that she is capable of a very deep attachment. Of course, for you her love is boundless; yet I cannot but feel that I have won a large share for myself."

"You have, indeed; far greater than you can appreciate, for the child had so long been unable to give rein to her affections that she had almost forgotten how to respond. But I have watched without appearing to do so, and not since her mother left her has her life been so full and rounded. I cannot express to you how much this means to me. Marjorie is my all, and it has been a great source of sorrow to me to see her growing up without the affectionate influence which would have been hers to an unstinted degree had her mother lived. I declare to you, I had grown well nigh desperate when I went out into the world to seek that influence, and with little hope of finding it. But a wiser power guided me, I believe, and brought into our home an element which has proved its salvation."

"Oh, Dr. Prior, you entirely overestimate what I have done, and I am overwhelmed by what you say. Can't you see that it is all the result of our home training, and so much a matter of habit that I really do not deserve a particle of credit for any thing I have done? Mamma has always set us a wise example, and if I have been able to follow it even imperfectly, I am profoundly thankful. And I feel that I have cause to be very grateful to you for the implicit confidence you have placed in me from the very outset, for my position in your home has been an exceptional one in many ways. It was no light matter for me to venture out into the world to earn my livelihood after papa died, and I cannot describe to you with what dismay I contemplated such a step. With far greater dread than it warranted, I dare say; but home had been so much to us all that the thought of leaving it was very distressing."

"And it would now be very distressing to us to have you return to it, I fear; you seem to have become a part of ours," and Dr. Prior looked so earnestly at Margaret that for the first time in her intercourse with him, a slight color came into her cheeks, and she looked away over the blue water with eyes that were quite oblivious of its beauty.

Dr. Prior noted the look, and hastened to withdraw his own, and to say in his ordinary voice:

"But Marjorie cannot dispense with your ministrations for some time to come, and so we need not anticipate another domestic upheaval for a long while, I hope. And now I think that I shall have Johnson help me to my state-room, for I am growing a little drowsy, and will try for a nap."

CHAPTER XVI.

Home Again

AS the great ship swung beneath the shadow of Brooklyn Bridge on the following Tuesday, Dr. Prior was as eager as a child to search out the face dearest in all the world to him, and had it not been for Rodman's manly grip, the object of his glances would certainly have walked straight over the string-piece of the dock, and taken a dip in the East River.

There stood Marjorie, with both arms outstretched to the beloved form supported by Johnson and Margaret, and the instant the gang-plank was thrown aboard, she flew across it as though she had wings to her feet.

"Oh! my precious papa Checa," caused the passengers to smile in sympathy, as Marjorie, between sobs and laughter, cast herself into the outstretched arms which held her with the strength borne of love.

"Here, here!" cried Rodman, "this is a fine way for my best girl to desert me for the first good looking chap she comes across. Catch me inviting you to go a pleasuring with me again, young lady," and he put on a very injured air, as he warmly clasped Dr. Prior's outstretched hand.

"But all the same, I'm profoundly thankful to see you in the flesh, doctor," he exclaimed, "and Meggie, you're a trump, and I'll kiss you right here in the presence of the multitude," and he proceeded to demonstrate his words. "How are you, Johnson? So you've brought this wild sister of mine safely back, have you? I'll recommend you for principal of a young ladies' seminary; for if you can steer one so successfully you ought to be able to keep a hundred or so under good headway," and rattling on in his nonsensical fashion, in order to cover deeper feeling, Rodman conducted his charges to the carriage he had waiting for them, and tucked them safely in.

"And what is my destination?" asked Dr. Prior, "I am in the hands of the 'Philistines,' and utterly helpless."

"Mother Drake says you are to come straight there," answered Marjorie, "and you are not to go away until you can walk out on your own feet," and she gave a rapturous squeeze to the arm she was holding with both hands.

"But Mrs. Drake has had more than enough of the Prior family already," protested the doctor, "and it seems to me she has taken a new name since I last saw her."

"O, that is my special name for her. You see, I was so forlorn and ill after Miss Drake left, and everything was just dreadful, that I nearly gave up; and then she was so sweet to me that I couldn't bear to say Mrs. Drake this, and Mrs. Drake that; so, one day I called her Mother Drake, and was nearly scared to death after I'd done it; but she just cuddled me right up in her arms, and then I knew it was all right, and after that I didn't feel half so lonely and wretched. And now that I've got you back all safe and sound, and Miss Drake is here, and I've so many people to love and love me, I couldn't hold another bit of happiness if I tried ever so hard," and Marjorie stopped for want of breath.

"My darling; thank God!" said Dr. Prior fervently, as his eyes filled with happy tears.

October, with its wealth of color, had come, and Dr. Prior, now fully restored to health, was back in his Mountvale home. He remained at Mrs. Drake's until he declared that he should be spoiled with much coddling; for the girls had vied with each other in their efforts to serve him, and were untiring in their kindness. Marjorie was like a colt turned loose; and she and Maud simply "trained." The reaction from keen anxiety to utter freedom from care seemed to have gone to her head, and, as the doctor put it, "had intoxicated her."

As strength returned to him, he could enter into the home amusements, and soon found a place in the family which he was destined to hold forever. His admiration for Margaret was blossoming into love.

All Helping Our Children's Home

THE tenement waifs who have been thinking all winter of the happy time they will have at Mont-Lawn next summer, have reason to thank their many kind friends, who have been thinking of the same thing, and who have been laying aside dimes and pennies every day or every week, that poor little tots of the overcrowded slums might have a breath of fresh air and a chance for life when the summer comes. The following

To help poor little waifs like me
So many friends are kind.
At Mont-Lawn in our happy play,
At Mont-Lawn when we kneel to pray
We'll keep those friends in mind.
And to Our Father we will say:
"Lord, bless our helpers far away,
Who gave thy little ones bright hours
Of joy, amid thy fields and flowers."

extracts are illustrative of the character of many letters received from pious lovers of little children of the poor, not less precious than the gifts themselves are the prayers consecrating the gifts. So many petitions are going up for Mont-Lawn that the work cannot fail in its purpose of bringing spiritual as well as temporal blessings into the lives of the starvelings—starvelings, in many cases, for affection human and divine, not less than for air and meat and drink—who become its beneficiaries:

Mrs. J. M. H., Iowa, Ia., $1. God bless the Home and its workers, is the sincere prayer of one whose heart is with you in the work. Mrs. J. A. M., Columbus, O., $5. For the Children's Home. May the blessing of the Father above ever rest upon this labor of love. E. H., Angel's Camp, Cal., $10. Wishing all success to the good work. R. C. R., Calicoon, N. Y., $3. For some city starveling. God bless the Children's Home!

Is not this a beautiful letter?
Please find enclosed $12, from my mother and myself, for we wish to give four of God's poor a few days of pleasure and Christian love and care. My mother is quite aged, just past her ninety-first birthday. She has been a great sufferer for many years, but she still has interest in and love for every good work, and wishes to send her mite, praying that it may be blessed to the needy. For ten months she has been confined to her bed. In the fall we did not think she would see the spring. She thought so, too. So she had me put her $6 away, marked for your Fresh-Air Fund. She said: "I must help them once more." It is our prayer that each year more hearts may be touched when thinking of these precious little ones, and may help to make them happy.

This shows the interest of another aged friend:
Inclosed find $9, to make three little children happy at Mont-Lawn this summer. Sent in His name by a friend seventy-six years old. The blessing of God rest on your labor of love.

Nor do the children who live in happy homes forget the children of the poor.
"Two Little Girls," $6, to make two tenement waifs happy. Van W., Erie, Pa., $9.30. I am a little boy, nearly seven years old. For four years I have sent a little money to the Fresh-Air Fund. I enclose enough now to send three little ones to your good home.

Parents and children unite with each other in this good work.

Mrs. H. W. S. and son, Bastrop, Tex., $1.35. My little boy and I send this small amount, wishing it were more, to help some poor little unfortunate to an outing at Mont-Lawn this summer.

Orphans are reaching out loving hands to help these poor waifs.

H. L. B., Jamestown, Pa., $4.50. $3 is from girls at the Soldiers' Orphan School, Jumonville, Pa. The rest is from Hazel E. B.

Organized bodies of children—Sunday Schools, Epworth Leagues, Junior Christian Endeavor Societies, Busy Bees, Helping Hands, and other Orders—have ever been most faithful friends of Mont-Lawn's tenement waifs.

G. R. S., Deep River, Conn., $6. From the Deep River Baptist Junior Endeavor. E. N., Methuen, Mass., $6. From Mrs. N's S. S. class in the First Congregational Church. Mrs. F. E. M., Superintendent Union S. S., Wright, N. Dak., $4.60. From children who are poor themselves, but who want to help others who are worse off. Junior Endeavorers First Congregational Church, Sidney, N. Y., $3. May God's blessing rest upon the noble work.

Here is a rather amusing little story. The "Acorn Club" of Stony Brook Sunday School, Princeton, N. J., sent $5 to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD without saying what for. In answer to inquiry the following, signed by a name well beloved at Mont-Lawn, was received:

That $5 was for the Fresh Air work at Mont-Lawn. Pardon omission to name it in first letter. Being a teacher at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD's Children's Home, I naturally forgot there were other objects receiving contributions also. The "Acorn Club" is composed of children, and they have taken great delight in making this donation to help little folks less fortunate than themselves.
Yours sincerely,
JULIET BARLOW.

Doubtless there was a good deal of laughter while these pennies were accumulating:

M. F. G., Southampton, Pa., $1. The pennies were given in a country boarding-house as fines for soiled spots on table-cloth, and we decided the money should be devoted to making some little boy or girl merry.

Many friends have had a pleasant time while helping our waifs to happiness:

Friends, Towners, N. Y., $16.50. Proceeds of an entertainment given here for the little tenement children. God bless them and all your efforts to help them in our prayer.

Junior C. E. First Baptist Church, Urbana, O., $6. Raised by an entertainment given by forty-four little Endeavorers.

And many have worked and denied themselves:

J. B. D., Milmay, $1. Contribution of some of our Sunday School boys and girls. Our place is a pioneer colony, but our little folks remember the tenement waifs. M. J. B., Wiscasset, Me., $6.20. This contribution for the little waifs comes from a poor Sunday School which has worked for it.

All contributions will be promptly acknowledged.

WALKING WITH CHRIST

I said, "Let me walk in the fields";
He said, "Nay, walk in the town";
I said, "There are no flowers there";
He said, "No flowers, but a crown."
I said, "But the sky is black,
There is nothing but noise and din";
But he wept as he sent me back—
"There is more," he said, "there is sin."

I said, "But the air is thick
And fogs are veiling the sun";
He answered, "Yet souls are sick,
And souls in the dark undone."
I said, "I shall miss the light,
And friends will miss me, they say";
He answered me, "Choose to-night
If I am to miss you, or they."

I pleaded for time to be given;
He said: "Is it hard to decide?
It will not seem hard in heaven
To have followed the steps of your Guide."

I cast one look at the fields,
Then set my face to the town;
He said: "My child, do you yield?
Will you leave the flowers for the crown?"

Then into his hand went mine,
And into my heart came he,
And I walk in a light divine
The path I had feared to see.

The difference brought about by the well selected food, as compared with ordinary food, is well shown in the experience of attending high school and boarding hers.

She says: "My 'housekeeping' came early rising, and I used to become very over my books. To keep awake, I resorted to the use of strong coffee, and in a short while I began to have a dull, stupid feeling, but a feeling of 'goneness.' I realized that I must eat something or faint in class-room. I would wash down a little fast with another cup of coffee."

I began growing thin, pale and nervous, made very unsatisfactory advancement in studies.

One day the good wife of one of our professors asked me if I felt well, as I appeared so weak and nervous. Between my classes I managed to relate my woes. She saw the trouble lay, and advised me to let tea and coffee and take up Postum Food and Grape-Nuts Food.

I followed her advice and found the Postum a delicious beverage, and the Grape-Nuts what I wanted. So my breakfast consisted of a little fruit, a saucer of Grape-Nuts, and a cup of Postum, an ideal breakfast.

If, at night, I felt the need of something to eat before retiring, I ate a little Grape-Nuts.

My head grew clearer, my cheeks rose, and I gained so rapidly in health that all my acquaintances remarked upon it.

There is a reason, for both Postum and Grape-Nuts contain the elements from Nature's store house that the body uses to build the brain and nerve centers through. These wonderful food elements are presented in such a fascinating form that users seek them year after year, and very greatly to their benefit. Conversion of a Free-Thinker

How the Rev. Dr. John Pate, an Influential Southern Pastor and Writer, Came to be a Christian : : : :

BY REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D.

JOHN PATE passed through boyhood without any very earnest religious teaching. His mother was only a nominal Christian, while his father was absorbed in business and thinking only of the pleasures of this world. To make it worse, at sixteen years of age he became bitterly prejudiced against the church by the fortunate conduct of a mistaken officer of a church which he had occasionally attended, and so drifted away entirely from religious teaching. For the next two years he never went to the church. He associated with young men who did not care for religion, and prided himself that he was a free thinker. He had no intention of ever becoming a Christian. But God has his own way of calling men to repentance, and he is not confined to one method. One night after he thusiasm. Then his real manhood arose, and said, "Not to go when I feel it is my duty would be cowardice."

He arose, and went to the altar, and in a few moments was able to surrender completely to the Lord Jesus Christ. He knew that he "had passed from death unto life." As he walked home, the question uppermost in his mind was, "How will father view this matter? Will he condemn or will he approve?"

The next few days were spent in much prayer. The special burden of his prayer was that God in some way would move his father to propose to send him to Wofford College. He knew that his father had intended that he should succeed him in the mercantile business, but now his heart longed for an opportunity for real Christian college training. Once a week after his conversion he arose from his knees with the feeling that his prayer was answered, and sure enough, very soon afterward, his father brought up the subject of his own accord, and proposed that he should matriculate at Wofford.

His joy at this was very great, and well it might have been, for the training he received there not only fitted him for, but opened the door for him into a ministry which has been greatly blessed of God. Both by the pen and the pulpit, God has used Dr. Pate for the upbuilding of the kingdom of Christ on earth and the winning of souls.

The Forgotten Bible

A READER OF THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Mr. A. A. C., Ayrshire, Ind., sends a most interesting account of an old family Bible and its influence upon a home. In the early "seventies," there lived in the town of McLeansboro, in Southern Illinois, the widow of a soldier, with her four orphan children. She was too poor to buy a Bible, but through the kindness of an agent of the American Bible Society, she procured one. It lay around the house for many years, neglected; indeed almost the only use to which it was put was to whet the oldest son's razor. One evening he opened the Book and began to read. Something he encountered interested him, and he took the neglected and misused Bible to his room, where he was soon absorbed in the book of Revelation, and especially in those passages that describe the joys and glories of the Heavenly Kingdom. Day after day, the young man kept up his readings, and at last the Gospel light dawned on his soul, and he became a believer. Since that time, he has been a tireless worker for Christ, and has labored as an evangelist in many fields. Under his earnest pleadings, many have been converted. For twelve years past, he has been a faithful and efficient Sunday School worker. He has every reason to love and cherish the old Bible, which turned his spiritual night into day, and filled his heart with gladness, and his whole life with blessing.

Baptist Churches in Kansas

Several correspondents have desired us to correct the misapprehension, in a recent article in this journal, that the first Baptist Church in Kansas was built as the result of chapel-car work at Eureka. There were earlier Baptist churches in the State, viz: At Council Grove, Burlington, Emporia, Centre Ridge, Yates Centre, Reading, Waverly, Sebo, and other places.

A BIT OF MANNA

ONLY a bit of manna,
From the word of the gracious King,
That our souls may feast on sweetness,
And the song in our glad hearts ring.

A verse from the Book to cheer us,
A text before we pray;
And the afterglow of the sunset,
In the hush of the fading day.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

REV. JOHN PATE

ached eighteen years of age, young Pate came home from his father's store, Snpter, South Carolina, and being tired, he went to his room immediately after supper, and went to bed. But he was restless and could not sleep. He was tossing about for awhile, he arose, and, and without any purpose than to distract his mind, picked up a Bible, and opened it, when his eyes fell on this verse: "What shall it profit a man if he gains the whole world and lose his own soul?" It startled him. He said, "Here is a profit and loss." He sat down and wept at the sum. When he finished it, he exclaimed, "Well, it would pay, after all, to serve God." He went back to bed, and on fell asleep. The next evening, he was walking with his Hebrew toward the latter's home. He drew near the Methodist Church, and rang, announcing evening service. He felt somewhat serious from the remembrance of the past night, he remarked, "It has been quite a while since I have been to church, but I believe I will go to-day." His Jewish friend laughed and said, "You might find that an easy way to lose your head; but don't lose your head and lose a Christian." When John Pate entered the church, the congregation was singing "Come, Holy Spirit, Heavenly Dove." After the evening service, the Rev. Fred Aul arose, and read his text. A flash of lightning did not have startled young Pate more than he heard the words: "What shall it profit a man if he gains the whole world and lose his own soul?" During the delivery of the sermon a struggle took place in the young man's heart. In closing the sermon, the preacher gave a most earnest invitation to seek Christ then and there, and called for all who would accept the invitation to go forward to the altar. John Pate said to himself, "If I go, my friends will laugh at me, and will say that I have been turned by these en-

MISSIONS PROMISES AND PROPHECIES*

The Final Triumph of Christianity in Process of Achievement ::::

ONE of the most convincing proofs of the divine origin of Christianity is the success that has attended the preaching of the Gospel to the heathen. It is an extraordinary thing when one thinks of it, that this faith, which produces results so wonderful among people so highly civilized as ourselves, should be adapted to savages. Missionaries tell us that when, fearing that an utterly heathen people would not understand the mysteries of salvation by faith, they attempted to lead up to the Gospel message gradually, by a preliminary effort to educate the people, they failed, and that when in desperation they preached Christ and him crucified, their teaching was apprehended at once. The New Testament itself gives other illustrations of the same truth. Paul preached the same Gospel to the philosophers of Athens, the proud warriors of Rome, the licentious people of Corinth, and the robber tribes of Galatia, and in every instance it proved the power of God unto salvation. People educated and ignorant, civilized and savage, cultured and rude, found in it the force which led to a renovation of their natures and the development of their spiritual nature. So it is to this day. In India, in China and in Armenia in contact with an effete civilization, the Gospel wins its way as it does among the ignorant, debased, superstitious peoples of Uganda and the South Seas.

It is evident that Christianity sprang from a Being who knew what was in man, and understood what he needed to enable him to rise out of the sordid, debased state in which he is by nature, to the spiritual, purified state of the sons of God. Men who had followed the older religions had no idea of the power of this new faith. To the Jew it was a stumbling-block, and to the Greek foolishness, but somehow, it made its way. The men who accepted it and applied it to their lives found that it did what it proposed to do, and that it really produced the passive virtue and the active beneficence which characterize the highest type of man. So it has gone on making conquests. To Christ in the wilderness, the offer of the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them, must have appeared a strong temptation, but he took a surer, if a longer, way of reaching the end: From century to century, the number of converts has continued to increase. One generation after another appeared, and each yielded a larger proportion of people who were proud to call Jesus Lord, and to call themselves by his name. Men arose who counted the world well lost for his sake, who were willing to renounce the glory and fame and wealth of this life that they might serve him more unreservedly and extend the boundaries of his kingdom. They were ostracized, they were persecuted and maligned, they were tortured and killed, but they would not give up the Gospel. The world, failing by harsh measures, applied the more seductive trial of patronage and flattery, but that also failed, and the doctrine of the Cross still holds its place supreme in an ever-increasing number of lives.

And what of the future? Have we outgrown the old faith? Philosophy and culture and refined scepticism and the benumbing practices of ritualism, have opposed themselves in the guise of friendship and have insinuated themselves into the pulpits of the churches, only to demonstrate their impotency. The crowds which gathered to listen to Moody and Spurgeon, who had nothing to proclaim but the old doctrines, proved that in them men found the true remedy for sin. So it has been in heathen lands. The men who went out with another Gospel have failed, while the preachers of the old truths have won converts by the thousand. What may we not hope from such a record? As we read of the thousands of converts in India ready to sacrifice all that they held dear—caste and family and social relations—for Christ's sake; of the men and women in Armenia and China who cheerfully died a martyr's death rather than renounce Christ, we realize that in this faith there are the elements which will yet permeate the whole world. The prophecy that the time will yet come when at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow, does not seem so incredible as it seemed even a century ago. For the promise has never failed. The same power which the Gospel had in the first century still attends it. The forces are growing stronger and are better organized, the multitude of messengers is increased and the facilities of travel and communication are being utilized and the promise still holds good: "Ask of me and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."

THE REVIVAL FIELD

Gospel Work at Altoona, Pa.

THE Sixth Presbyterian Church, of Altoona, Pa., Rev. D. W. Lusk, pastor, has just closed a very successful revival, under the splendid leadership of Rev. Arthur J. Smith, of Richmond Hill, New York, evangelist. During the meetings fully two hundred persons gave their names as desiring to lead Christian lives. All the meetings were largely attended. The ministers of Altoona, with hearty unanimity, invited Mr. Smith to remain another week to lead in a union evangelistic movement. Rev. W. W. Williamson is Chairman of the Executive Committee, and the Rev. J. F. Moyer is Secretary.

Souls Saved at Milledgeville, Ga.

A meeting of unusual interest and power was held in the Presbyterian Church at Milledgeville, Ga., the latter part of March. Evangelist W. R. Gales, on the invitation of Pastor Rev. D. W. Brannen, conducted the services. For two afternoons all the business houses in the city closed their doors for an hour, and the men thronged the sanctuary. Multitudes of church members of all denominations were revived, and about seventy confessed Christ for the first time. The Georgia Normal and Industrial College was especially stirred and the students were influenced by the services, and more than a score made a public profession of faith. At a mass meeting of young people held in the Presbyterian Church, Sabbath morning, March 31, Mr. Gales gave a very impressive lecture. At the close, the invitation was quietly given, and many young people crowded the room, some in tears, and all with serious faces. More than thirty gave themselves to God.

Revival Notes

The people of Whippany, N. J., are praying for a revival.

Collierville, Tenn., has been holding a series of evangelistic services since March 3. Prayers are desired.

A revival movement has begun in Green Street M. E. Church, Piqua, O. Miss Jennie Smith and Mrs. Jones have conducted the services.

South Berwick, Me., is enjoying a series of revival meetings, under Mr. J. N. Hatch and wife, evangelists. All the churches in the town are uniting in the movement.

Since the great revival at Hiawatha, Kan., the criminal courts have been idle, there being no cases on the docket. This is a remarkable result in a town of 3,000 people.

The Rev. Edgar L. Williams, of Peoria, Ill., is conducting a series of evangelistic meetings in the First Presbyterian Church, Kansas City, Mo., with rich spiritual results.

Rev. A. C. Hennington, of the Bible Christian Church, has been conducting an excellent evangelistic work at Cooper Tract, Pa., and many have confessed Christ at the services.

Evangelist J. B. Culpepper has recently led a number of evangelistic meetings in Arkansas City, Kan., Owensboro, Ky., Louisville, Ky., and Gallatin, Mo. Mr. Culpepper writes that over one thousand have confessed Christ.

A letter from Rising Sun, O., says: "We are still having an awakening among the people, both in the church and reaching outward. We desire your prayers for the outpouring of God's Holy Spirit, that the work may continue."

At Emporia, Kan., revival meetings have begun in the Second Presbyterian Church, Rev. J. M. Hughes, pastor. Cottage meetings are being held, and also special services with the assistance of Mr. McClure, the "Engineer Evangelist."

THE IMMANENT CHRIST

Our Lord's Present and Eternal
Contact with His People . . .

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

MOST inspiring is it to look up to heaven and to know that our Lord is there, he who is the very Life of our life is there; no power in earth can touch the source of the very life which makes us, just now, alive unto God; nothing can separate us from him; no man can pluck us out of his hand. In him we are heaven now, in some way as he was when he was upon earth; in heavenly places in Christ Jesus (Eph. 2: 6). Part of our very being as the body of Christ is there in heaven. He with heart and will and purpose in heaven carried out that will and purpose upon earth, so do we, as we really, by faith, take our place up there with him. Our citizenship, our rights, our possessions, our real life here, as was the real life of our Lord while he was manifested, and lived out his life among men. Oh, let us not forget that he sits, day by day, to manifest his heavenly life his Divine character in our mortal bodies we lead our simple, ordinary, daily life down here.

The evangelist Luke, in the beginning of the Acts of the Apostles, repeats what he had previously written in his Gospel, but enlarges it. He refers to the commandments given to the apostles, the great commission, alluding, probably, also to John 13: 12; 16: 33. And then he tells us how, after his resurrection, Jesus appeared to the apostles, "by the space of forty days, and speaking the things concerning the kingdom of God." What must the forty days have been to these men! How much which they had not understood must have shone in upon their minds! How the Old Testament must have glowed with light as the Lord opened to them one scripture after another! And yet this was not to lead him back to look forward. "It is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I go, I will send him unto you. And he, when he is come [unto you], will convict the world" (John 16: 8, R. V.).

The apostle Paul alludes to this when he speaks of the ascension of our Lord. Quoting from Psalms 68: 18, he says, "When he ascended on high, he led captivity [i. e., death] captive, and gave gifts unto men. Now this, ascended, what is it but that he also descended [first] into the lower parts of the earth, that he might fill all things" (Eph. 4: 8). If he had not first descended, come down to earth, down into our nature, down to death, down to the shame of the cross (Phil. 2: 8), he could not, in our nature, have ascended "far above all the heavens," that he, the God-Man, "might fill all things." He ascended, having led death captive, and gave gifts unto men. The gift of gifts was the gift of the Holy Ghost. God, the Father, gave his Son to a lost world, God, the Father and Spirit, gave his Spirit to a redeemed world. Compare Matt. 7: 11 with Luke 11: 13, to know how the Holy Spirit is the gift of God. It is this inestimable Gift which the ascension of Jesus was to ensure to us, and for which the disciples were commanded to wait, not departing from Jerusalem (Luke 24: 49; Acts 1: 4).

At times they were not to wait vaguely: their Lord set before them a definite expectation: "at the promise of the Father, which, saith he, ye heard from me. For John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence" (Acts 1: 4, 5). It was not to be wondered at that they should ask him, the Son of David, about his coming kingdom. He does not repulse them, but only tells them it is not for them "to know times and seasons which the Father hath set within his own authority" (1: 7). They must, for the time, leave the future. "But ye shall receive power when the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be my witnesses, both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and wider circles, 'to the uttermost part of the earth'; it was the great commission renewed, but with the promise of the power which they had lacked. And he indicated the very line of progress which the Gospel afterwards made: Jerusalem, then, at the death of Stephen, "all Judea and Samaria;" then, through Paul and others, "the uttermost part of the earth": probably Asia and India were reached in those early days.

It was when he had said these things, as they were looking, he was taken up. No wind, nothing visible, but that which always told of the presence of God, "a cloud received him out of their sight." He was gone, and yet with them "all the days, even to the end of the age" (Matt. 28: 20). While they looked steadfastly into heaven as he went, behold two men, not angels (were they Moses and Elijah?) "stood by them in white apparel." Jesus was hardly gone out of their sight before he sent messengers to them! He could not and would not forget his own. Their message concerned his coming. "This Jesus," said the messengers, "which was received up from you into heaven, shall so come, in like manner as ye beheld him going into heaven." Coming to disciples who look up to heaven for a Saviour (Heb. 9: 28; Phil. 3: 20, 21), coming with hands lifted up to bless, coming to take to himself those for whom he has prepared a place (John 14: 3); whom he shall afterwards "bring with him," when the great trumpet shall sound (1 Thes. 4: 14-17).

ANSWERED PRAYERS

L. S., Clyde, N. Y., writes:

I was in deep trouble, and I prayed God to help me; I prayed all the time; in the night time I rose up and prayed. God answered my prayer. I have been answered many times. God is swift to hear and to answer.

Mr. T., Wash., writes:

God heard my prayer and restored my loved one.

A subscriber, New York City, writes:

I desire to bear testimony that God hears and answers prayer. Through great thoughtlessness, an injury was committed that threatened to cloud another's future. I earnestly entreated God to undo the mistake, and he has heard and answered me, and I now write in thankful acknowledgment of his loving kindness.

H. F. S., Killingly, Conn., writes:

I have read in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the many answers to prayer, and I wish to add my testimony. I prayed for months for an absent son. Last week we received a letter and good news from him. My prayer was answered.

Girl Reader, Illinois, writes:

I called upon the Lord in a time of trouble. I believe he would help as he had promised. He delivered me. To troubled hearts I can say: "Trust in our dear Lord, he will help you."

Subscriber, Monticello, Ill., writes:

A great shadow hung over our home last fall, we thought it the shadow of death. But we prayed, oh, so earnestly; prayed without ceasing; and, thanks to the Lord, the shadow is lifted, and our home is full of joy.

D. J. J., Phoenix, Ariz., writes:

I wish to acknowledge God's great goodness to me. A few months ago I was in deep trouble. Everything seemed so dark—not one ray of light—but I prayed earnestly, and all the clouds have disappeared. My prayers have been answered.

C. M. C., Columbus, N. J., writes:

I was in sore trouble and affliction seemed to be on every side. I took it all to the Lord in prayer—laid all my burden on him, and left it there. In a short time my prayer was answered.

M. A. G., Caribou, Colo., writes:

For nearly twenty years my husband has been exposed to great danger, as his business is mining; only last week his peril from a dynamite explosion was extreme and death was very near him. He has been the subject of my constant prayer, and I thank God that my petitions have been answered and my husband spared until the dangerous work was finished.

A Mother, Alameda, Calif., writes:

God has begun to answer my prayers. My son has been a great burden on our soul, leading most of the time for over nine years, a life of dissipation. Often my faith faltered. At last I asked the Lord, that while my own faith was so weak, he would please move the hearts of others to take an interest in my boy. This the good Lord has done; and, on March 2, my boy joined the Church, and is determined to lead, with the help of God, a new life.

Mrs. John Hobbs, Running Water, Hale Co., Tex., writes:

I gain so much strength and comfort from reading THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and most particularly from "Answered Prayers." I have often said when I'd read that column: "Well, if God ever answers my prayer as certainly as he has answered prayers for those folks, I will be glad enough to sign my full name." We live on the plains. The wind blows all the time, and blows extremely hard in spring. Well, yesterday noon, we saw a fire west, and the wind right from there, too, blowing fearfully. I thought of our sons and our nephews, and of our own homes, and of our brother's and neighbor's homes that might go. I was left entirely alone till night. I pleaded: "Oh, God, subdue this wind!" until into the night; when, lo! the wind sprang to the north and another fire started from there; when, all at once (a thing we none of us ever saw before), a cloud came up, and a little sleet put out both fires, and was gone in less time than it takes me to write it; it was clear, yet the wind was still blowing. So now I leave it for you to decide: Is this case to go in the "Answered Prayer" column or not? I have been all day thinking.

E. F. B., Southern Pines, N. C., writes:

The "Answered Prayers" in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD encouraged me to trust God more and seek his direction and aid in temporal as well as spiritual affairs. He has blessed me far beyond my expectation. The answers do not always come along the lines I ask and look for, but in ways much better, because they reveal his love and power and draw me nearer him.

Reader, Escondido, Cal., writes:

I wish to acknowledge the wonderful goodness of God to me. He gave me what I asked for in such a beautiful way. I hope my testimony will strengthen the faith of others, and inspire them with courage to ask God for what they want, no matter how impossible it seems to be; for with God all things are possible, and will be given to us if for our best good.

FEET OUT.

Curious Habits.

When a person has to keep the feet out from under cover during the coldest nights in winter because of the heat and prickly sensation, it is time that coffee, which causes the trouble, be left off.

There is no end to the nervous conditions that coffee will produce. It shows in one way in one person and in another way in another. In this case the lady lived in Vermilion, S. Dakota.

She says: "I have had to lie awake half the night with my feet and limbs out of the bed on the coldest nights, and feel afraid to sleep for fear of catching cold. I had been troubled for years with twitching and jerking of the lower limbs, and for most of the time I have been unable to go to church, or to lectures because of that awful feeling that I must keep on the move.

"When it was brought to my attention that coffee caused so many nervous diseases, I concluded to drop coffee and take Postum Food Coffee to see if my trouble was caused by coffee drinking. I only drank one cup of coffee for breakfast, but that was enough to do the business for me. When I quit it my troubles disappeared in an almost miraculous way. Now I have no more of the jerking and twitching and can sleep with any amount of bedding over me and sleep all night, in sound, peaceful rest.

"Postum Food Coffee is absolutely worth its weight in gold to me." This lady's name can be given on application to the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

Editor The Mail-Bag,
The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

These Questions will be Answered June 26

1. Is it right or wrong for a Christian to desire the good opinion of the world's people? If right, to what extent may he go to win and retain such good opinion?

2. Are we morally bound to educate the negro?

3. Since in the present time no one has the power possessed by the Apostles of imparting the Holy Spirit by the laying on of hands, is there any benefit to a pastor in being ordained?

4. If a person desires to come to the communion table to obey his Lord's command, as a pastor or officer of a church justified in excluding him, on the ground of heresy, or past sin?

5. If the chairman of a company, or a bank, whose name has been influential in attracting shareholders, discovers that the company is likely to fail, is he justified in resigning and selling out, without acquainting the public with his reasons?

Questions of the Week

1. When one is weak in expressing his wants, is it right to come to God in prayer, night and morning, and say the same things over and over, day after day? If not, what should be done under the circumstances?

The soul's sincere desire, unuttered or expressed, constitutes prayer. Oratorical prayers are not prevailing prayers with God. When one's prayers become a mechanical monotonous routine of repetition, the soul-life is dead and needs resurrection. To such a troubled soul, read that literature, seek that society, attend those meetings, think and meditate on those things that arouse one's better self to nobler aspirations and spiritual purity. Endeavor to live in frequent communion with God, and everywhere, anywhere, anytime, speak with him in spirit, talk to him in soul language, tell him all your wants, as to your best friend, and I believe you will overcome this difficulty and God will give you great blessing. WALTER W. HUBBARD.

Paucity of words in prayer has for its cause two spiritual conditions diametrically opposed. When, under the power of the Holy Ghost, we are too full for utterance, and we know not what to ask as we ought, the Spirit helpeth our infirmities with groanings that cannot be uttered. Such was the Saviour's prayer in Gethsemane, when, being in an agony, he prayed three times in the same words. Also the blind man at Jericho (Luke 18: 38, 39). At such times we can only throw ourselves at the Saviour's feet, "be silent unto God" and worship in spirit. On the other hand, inability to pray may come from an absence of the spirit of prayer, when we feel listless and cold at our devotions, when we find ourselves drifting into a form of words or lip-service as a substitute for the "inwrought prayer of the Holy Ghost." We have the will to pray, but not the spirit. At such times I have found it very helpful to read one of the Psalms of Praise, such as the 103, 136, and others, for he has said, "He that offereth me praise glorifieth me," or, as the Revised Version has it, "He that offereth the sacrifice of thanksgiving," etc. Another favorite plan of mine is to think of Jesus as a dear present friend, and then tell him how I feel about prayer just now, and that as he knows all my wants, I will trust him to supply them, and then devote the hour to thanking him for his goodness to me in the past. Before I have half finished, the spirit of prayer is upon me and the difficulty at an end. God does not hear us for our much speaking.

AMELIA BRADFORD.

2. Do any of the elements that caused the decay of Rome and Greece exist in our own republic to-day?

While the elements which caused the decay of Rome and Greece, if existing at all, have as yet had no important influence in our country, yet considerable danger lies in the fact that opportunities for their development may arise. Perhaps the similarity shown by the character of Rome and Greece to that of our own republic, might, to a great extent justify this opinion. The Roman unity of purpose, bravery, and strong national individuality, are qualities which distinctly characterize our nation. The Greek life, with its thirst for knowledge, its intellectual advantages, and its civilizing influence, corresponds greatly to that which we live to-day. But the Roman republic, becoming an empire, won the supremacy of the world, and was not able to govern it, conquered the world, and was unable to defend itself; while the decay of Greece was caused by internal dissension. Without doubt, the people of our country are awakening to a great responsibility, and are considering the importance of the following questions: (1) Are we drifting toward imperialism? (2) Will our republic ever become an empire? (3) Like Rome, will it become so powerful that its own weight will cause its fall? (4) Will political, social or religious dissension bring about its ruin? But our republic is yet young, and undoubtedly its zenith and the important part of the life of its controlling policy lies in the future, and the future no one can correctly judge.

JOSEPH HEIDMEYER.

3. Is the increase of the Christian Church in wealth and worldly resources to be regarded, on the whole, as a healthy spiritual sign or the reverse?

History indicates that it is not a healthy sign. The periods of the church's worldly prosperity have usually been periods of decadence. There has been a tendency in such times to say, as did the church of Laodicea (Rev. 3: 17), "I am rich and increased with goods, and have need of nothing." At the same time, the possession of riches is quite compatible with spirituality. There are, as we in this country have good reason to acknowledge, wealthy men who consecrate their wealth to God. A sincere Christian in business may prosper through the principles of Christianity, which conduce to industry, integrity and clean living. I can imagine a church composed of wealthy men being a church of great power, contributing liberally to the advance of Christ's Kingdom, and doing an immense amount of good in alleviating the burdens of the poor. There is nothing in wealth itself to render a man unfit for the Kingdom of God. It is hard for him to enter, as Christ said, because human nature is apt to love its wealth and to trust in it; but when a wealthy man really gives himself to the Lord, he has opportunities for service which do not lie within reach of the poor man; and if he uses them faithfully, he is more useful, and accomplishes more good. There have been such men, and there still are such men. The church, like the individual, may trust in its riches; and if it does, it is in an unhealthy condition; but it may consecrate its riches, and then it is capable of better service. We must look to other signs to learn if the possession of wealth has eaten into its soul, making it proud, arrogant and sordid, or helpful, beneficent and compassionate, before we can say whether it is the better or the worse for its wealth. EDWARD WRIGHT.

4. What is the best disposition the United States Government could make of Aguinaldo?

At the proper time he should be given the consideration due his personal characteristics and influence, and be permitted to work out his future, beginning as a private Filipino citizen. Now, he should be treated kindly, but watched as a paroled enemy.

C. P. ATKINSON.

Our Government should be urged to adopt a plan to Christianize them, and put Aguinaldo at the head of the work. His conversion would evangelize that part of the world.

J. FLOMERZELT.

To leave him in the island would be a mistake. When a Napoleon is defeated, banish him out of Paris. Bring Aguinaldo to the United States, and with kindness we will kill the rebel within him. Then he will understand and love us. After civilizing him here, send him home to civilize his own people.

R. T. EDWARDS.

Let him be associated with persons of refinement and of true Christian character.

Avoid anything tending to deception. Allow him to visit and learn all about our country. By so doing we may help him to become a Christian and fit him for a great and useful career among his own people.

EVA W. MITCHELL.

If he keeps the oath of allegiance he should be allowed a large degree of liberty, and his influence be used to secure further pacification of the islands. To give him at present any important office would arouse suspicion that his influence had been won by such a bribe.

G. E. KRAUTH.

He should be kept under the thumb of the United States authorities until a settled state of affairs comes about in the islands, after which his influence will amount to nothing, when he may be safely turned loose. No future favors or honors should ever be bestowed upon him, not only on account of his incorrigibility and lack of principle, but also on account of his complete lack of ability of any sort.

L. T. RIGHTSSELL.

Aguinaldo should at present be considered, not as the nation's captive, but rather as the nation's guest. He has taken the oath of allegiance, and is worthy of the respect and confidence of the American people. His talents should not be destroyed, and his people should not be exasperated by making him a friendless exile. The sincerity of his purposes during his past career is sufficient reason for dealing with him according to the principles of the Golden Rule.

OBED JOHNSON.

5. To what occupation are the duties of both kings and pastors compared in the Bible?

The duties of kings and pastors are compared to those of shepherds and nurses. The prophet Micah likened Israel to "sheep without a shepherd" when their king, Ahab, was slain (I Kings 22: 17; II. Chr. 18: 16). Ezekiel reproved the "shepherds of Israel," that is, the kings, for leading their flocks astray. Also, Jeremiah pronounced woe on the "pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep." (Jer. 23: 1). Paul and other apostles referred to Christ as the "chief shepherd," his followers as "the sheep," or "the flock," whose elders and leaders were the pastors or under-shepherds.

Both are also compared to a nurse, see Isa. 49: 23. "Kings shall be thy nursing fathers," and I. Thess. 2: 7, "We were gentle among you even as a nurse cherisheth her children."

G. FOOTE.

Miscellaneous Questions

We have received several letters from readers making inquiries concerning the progress of the missionaries in India in the allotment of famine orphans. We are sure our readers will make allowance for the condition of affairs, when they bear in mind the fact that India has lost through cholera, plague and fever, many of the best missionaries there, and many others have, through sickness, been compelled to take a furlough. Consequently, the missions are, as a rule, undermanned; and although the remaining missionaries are working faithfully and untiringly, they seem unable to catch up. The consciousness that they are behind in their work helps to unnerve them. A little more patience with the missionaries will bring matters around to the satisfaction of all concerned.

J. S., Philadelphia. When a man, who has caused the ruin of a woman, repents and exercises faith, and is admitted to heaven, while the woman he has ruined commits suicide, and is eternally lost—is there not, from a human point of view, a miscarriage of justice?

The cases should not be considered relatively, though it is natural to do so. Taking first the case of the man, who is in nearly all cases the worse sinner, we have no right to complain of mercy being extended to him. It is the glory of God that no one is too vile to be pardoned, on repentance and faith. As God places no limit to the offer, we have no right to criticize his action. It must be right. The case of the woman must be regarded in the same light. If she repented and trusted in Christ, even though driven by the implacability of society, into such distress as to produce the aberration of mind that usually accompanies or leads to suicide, there can be no doubt that she, too, was pardoned. In any case, we must remember that her fate rests with God, who is all-wise and merciful. When we read how Jesus dealt with a woman who sinned in the same way (John 8: 1-11), we cannot believe that she, or those who pity her, will ever have cause to regard her, whatsoever it may be, as a miscarriage of justice.

Julie A. H., Pana, Ill. Is there any authority where did the idea originate, for clothing angels with wings, as followed by our artists and authors?

The word may be variously interpreted, viz.: The Hebrews understood it to mean not only the wings of a bird, but also the lap or flap of a garment (see Ruth 3: 9), the extremity of a country (Job 38: 13), the wings of the wind (Ps. 18: 10), a sunbeam (Mat. 4: 2), and also protection or defence (Mt. 23: 37). Isaiah speaks of the wings of angels (8: 8). The artistic interpretation has been preferably the wing, like that of a bird. Exodus 25: 20 and 37: 9; I. Kings 6: 24; Isaiah 6: 2, and many other passages, which afford ground for such an interpretation.

J. C. S., Galesburg, Ill. A man, who lived a p-right Christian life, was, through misfortune and old age, unable to pay a debt, which had owed for years. It troubled him grievously on his death-bed he would not receive the sacrament, feeling himself unworthy because of this unpaid debt. Did he die in sin? 2. Ought his widow to give her homestead claim, which is all she has, to discharge this debt? 3. Did any persons beside the disciples see Jesus after his resurrection?

1. The debtor's distress and self-reproach show him to have been an honest man who would gladly have discharged the debt if it had been in his power. Therefore he did not die in sin. God does not require more of a man than he is able to perform. 2. The homestead claim came to her personally; he is not in duty bound to surrender it; if it was left to her by her husband, it would raise her conscience to offer it to the creditor, or, if he is a merciful man, would not accept it, when he learns that it is all she has. 3. The Apostle Paul mentions (I. Cor. 15: 6) that he was "seen of above five hundred brethren." The word doubtless signifies his followers, but not disciples, as that word is generally understood. We do not know who they were. At a meeting held shortly after the ascension (Acts 1: 15), only one hundred and twenty were present.

C. S., Philadelphia, Pa. A good plan would be to enclose the amount in a letter, saying that it was sent in restitution, and asking forgiveness. It is not necessary to make the matter public. When a person sends money to the "Conscience Fund" of the United States Treasury, in Washington, the letter simply explains that his conscience leads him to return what he has withheld. He does not bare his offence to the world, as no good could be served by doing so, and many might be made to suffer.

M. C. H., Ottawa, Can. No information. Subscriber, Avalon, Pa. Inquire of a numismatist. A. W. L., Love City, O. The time limit is the best system.

K. T. K., Arbuckle, W. Va. We have no means of knowing.

A. A. P., Woodbury, N. Y. No, it is perturbed, and no publication objects.

It should be possible for rich and poor to worship together, in mutual agreement, since God is no respecter of persons, and regards the heart, not the bank account; but it too frequently happens that the rich worshiper looks down upon the poor one.

A GREAT INDIAN PEACE FESTIVAL

BY IDA A. ROFF

How Christianity is Transforming a Once Savage Race : : : :

ONE of the most significant events in recent Indian history took place recently. It was a ceremonious visit of the Tonkawas to the Kiowas. Years ago, no one ever imagined that Tonkawas and Kiowas would ever meet, except as enemies, but here they were in this Oklahoma valley, in the capacity of hosts and guests, vying with one another in cordiality. The meeting shows how much Christian civilization has done to tame their wild natures.

The origin of the feud between the Kiowas and the Tonkawas is of long standing. The latter have an awful record behind them. They were the dreaded enemy of all the tribes in the Southwest. As their name implies they were cannibals. More than thirty years ago, they seized a Kiowa papoose, killed and ate it at one of the horrible feasts. It proved a fatal act. The Kiowas brooded over the outrage, and quietly awaited their opportunity to avenge it. They were determined and alert, but they made no sign until the chance should come to take their enemy at a disadvantage. The time came at last. The Tonkawas were encamped in the Tonkawa Valley, in Oklahoma, through which flows a small stream. The Kiowas stealthily surrounded the camp, and attacked them so suddenly that there was no time to don their war-paint, and barely time to grasp their weapons.

A horrible bloodshed resulted, and the Tonkawas were almost exterminated. Twelve of their number of four hundred Indians remained to be away from camp, and they were the only ones to escape being massacred. This event occurred nearly thirty years ago.

Indians are full of superstitions and fears, and it is only very recently they will pass through this valley, because they say that the groans and crying of the dead Kiowas and Tonkawas can still be heard.

Evidence that former things are passing away and new and better things are taking place is manifested by the friendly visit paid to the Kiowas by the Tonkawas recently.

The Tonkawa tribe, now numbering about forty, surprised the Kiowas by asking to visit them. They came prepared for a long stay, bringing their tents, tepees, wagons, ponies, and all their Indian paraphernalia, including their buckskin suits, feathers, paint, etc.

To show their good friendly feeling, the Tonkawas announced they would give a dance for the entertainment of the Kiowas, and Indian etiquette demanded that the Kiowas, in return, should give gifts to the visitors. Indian gifts consist of beef, shawls, blankets, but principally ponies.

The great day of the dance at last arrived, and everybody went; the white people, too. The ride among the camps showed active preparation. The Indians were brushing their black, glossy hair, tying it with ribbons or twisting it with long strips of fur; dressing up in their buckskins, strings of beads and feathers. The dancers fastened bands of bells below their knees. Their toilet would have been far from complete if they tomorrow" came, however, he had quite changed his mind, and came asking to have his photograph taken.

At the sound of the drum, or "tom-tom," there was a general stir, and the Indians began to assemble, and then marched in a big group, keeping step over to the arbor, which had been erected for the purpose. A great crowd of Indians, Kiowas, Comanches, Apaches and white people followed, some walking, some riding; one, two and three on a pony, some in buggies, and others in covered wagons. A nice level place had been selected, and on reaching this spot the crowd of spectators gathered itself in a circle about the arbor. The big drum was placed upon the ground at one end, and five Indian-men sat around it and beat it, and sang with all the force and power with which they were possessed. The dancers sat upon the grass until a leader got up and started in his fantastic fashion, the women began to sing in a fine falsetto voice; and, one after another, both men and women arose to dance. They interspersed shouts now and then, and while the concert of drum, bells, singing and shouting was a very big noise, it was not altogether inharmonious, for there was a rhythm peculiar to Indian music through it all. At a certain change of the music, there was a general shout, and all sat down.

Those who had brought gifts then chose one of the Tonkawas as the recipient of his present. The "Thank you" was very impressive, a great deal of talking, and motions and raising of the hands as though invoking heaven's lasting blessing.

The ponies that were led up to the new masters and mistresses were gaily painted in designs of red, green and yellow. The manes and tails were painted some bright color and sometimes tied with bright ribbons and handkerchiefs and often an additional gift of a nice blanket would be on the pony's back.

The dancing and presentation of gifts lasted from about four o'clock till sunset.

Peace and good-will and utmost pleasure reigned supreme. The dance took place almost in view of the valley where the early massacre occurred. The two events were worthy of contrast, though to be sure the latter did not appear like a very civilized performance, yet undoubtedly a better spirit, that may be one result of the little leaven of Christianity and civilization, exists among them. If the good work still continues, who can foretell the story another thirty years will add to this.

The Pleasures of Life

TEXT, II. Samuel 2: 14:

"LET THE YOUNG MEN NOW ARISE AND PLAY BEFORE US."

HERE are two armies encamped by the pool of Gibeon. The time hangs heavily on their hands. One army proposes a game of sword-fencing. Nothing could be more healthful and innocent. The other army accepts the challenge. Twelve men against twelve men, the sport opens. But something went adversely. Perhaps one of the swordsmen got an unlucky clip, or in some way had his ire aroused, and that which opened in sportfulness ended in violence, each one taking his contestant by the hair, and then with the sword thrusting him in the side; so that that which opened in innocent fun ended in the massacre of all the twenty-four sportsmen. Was there ever a better illustration of what was true then, and is true now, that that which is innocent may be made destructive?

What of a worldly nature is more important and strengthening and innocent than amusement, and yet what has counted more victims? I have no sympathy with a strait-jacket religion. This is a very bright world to me, and I propose to do all I can to make it bright for others. If God ever implanted anything in us, he implanted this desire. But instead of providing for this demand of our nature, the Church of God has, for the main part, ignored it. But Paul the Apostle commends those who use the world without abusing it, and in the natural world, God has done everything to please and amuse us. In poetic figure we sometimes speak of natural objects as being in pain, but it is a mere fancy. Poets say the clouds weep, but they never yet shed a tear; and that the winds sigh, but they never did have any trouble; and that the storm howls, but it never lost its temper. The world is a rose, and the universe a garland.

And I am glad to know that in all our cities there are plenty of places where we may find elevated moral entertainment. But all honest men and good women will agree with me in the statement that one of the worst things in these cities is corrupt amusement. Multitudes have gone down under the blasting influence, never to rise. If we may judge of what is going on in many of the places of amusement by the pictures on board fences, and in many of the show-windows, there is not a much lower depth of profligacy to reach.

I project certain principles by which you may judge in regard to any amusement or recreation, finding out for yourself whether it is right or wrong.

Tests of Amusements

I remark, in the first place, that you can judge of the moral character of any amusement by its healthful result, or by its baleful reaction. Blessed be God, there are people in the world who have bright faces, and whose life is a song, an anthem, a psalm of victory. Even their troubles are like the vines that crawl up the side of a great tower, on the top of which the sunlight sits, and the soft airs of summer hold perpetual carnival. They are the people you like to have come to your house; they are people I like to have come to my house. If you but touch the hem of their garments you are healed.

Now it is these exhilarant and sympathetic and warm-hearted people that are most tempted to pernicious amusements. In proportion as a ship is swift it wants a strong helmsman; in proportion as a horse is gay, it wants a stout driver; and these people of exuberant nature will do well to look at the reaction of all their amusements. If an amusement sends you home at night nervous so that you cannot sleep, and you rise up in the morning, not because you are slept out, but because your duty drags you from your slumbers, you have been where you ought not to have been. There are amusements that send a man next day to his work, with his eyes bloodshot, yawning, stupid, nauseated; and they are wrong kinds of amusement. Our recreations are intended to build us up; and if they pull us down as to our moral or as to our physical strength, you may come to the conclusion that they are obnoxious.

There is nothing more depraving than attendance upon amusements that are full of innuendo and low suggestion. The young man enters. At first he sits far back, with his hat on and his coat collar up, fearful that somebody there may know him. Several nights pass on. He takes off his hat earlier, and puts his coat-collar down. The blush that first came into his cheek when anything indecent was enacted comes no more to his cheek. Farewell, young man! You have probably started on the long road which ends in consummate destruction. The stars of hope will go out one by one, until you will be left in utter darkness. Hear you not the rush of the maelstrom, in whose outer circle your boat now dances, making merry with the whirling waters? But you are being drawn in, and the gentle motion will become terrific agitation. You cry for help.

In vain! You pull at the oar to put back, but the struggle will not avail! You will be tossed, and dashed, and shipwrecked, and swallowed in the whirlpool that has already crushed in its wrath ten thousand hulks. Young men who have just come from country residence to city residence will do well to be on guard and let no one induce them to places of improper amusement. It is mightily alluring when a young man, long a citizen, offers to show a new-comer all around.

Still further; Those amusements are wrong which lead you into expenditure beyond your means. Money spent in recreation is not thrown away. It is all folly for us to come from a place of amusement feeling that we have wasted our money and time. You may by it have made an investment worth more than the transaction that yielded you hundreds or thousands of dollars. But how many properties have been riddled by costly amusements.

Expensive Pleasures

The table has been robbed to pay the club. The champagne has cheated the children's wardrobe. The carousing-party has burned up the boy's primer. The table-cloth of the corner saloon is in debt to the wife's faded dress. Excursions that in a day make a tour around a whole month's wages; ladies whose lifetime business it is to "go shopping"; large bets on horses, have their counterparts in uneducated children, bankruptcies that shock the money market and appal the Church, and that send drunkenness staggering across the richly-figured carpet of the mansion, and dashing into the mirror, and drowning out the carol of music with the whooping of bloated sons come home to break their old mother's heart.

I saw a beautiful home, where the bell rang violently late at night. The son had been off in sinful indulgences. His comrades were bringing him home. They carried him to the door. They rang the bell at one o'clock in the morning. Father and mother came down. They were waiting for the wandering son, and then the comrades, as soon as the door was opened, threw the prodigal headlong into the doorway, crying, "There he is, drunk as a fool. Ha, ha!" When men go into amusements that they cannot afford, they first borrow what they cannot earn, and then they steal what they cannot borrow. First they go into embarrassment, and then into lying, and then into theft; and when a man gets as far on as that, he does not stop short of the penitentiary. There is not a prison in the land where there are not victims of unsanctified amusements.

Merchant, is there a disarrangement in your accounts? Is there a leakage in your money-drawer? Did not the cash account come out right last night? I will tell you. There is a young man in your store wandering off into bad amusements. The salary you give him may meet lawful expenditures, but not the sinful indulgences in which he has entered, and he takes by theft that which you do not give him in lawful salary.

How brightly the path of unrestrained amusement opens. The young man says, "Now I am off for a good time. Never mind economy. I'll get money somehow. What a fine road! What a beautiful day for a ride! Crack the whip, and over the turnpike! Come, boys, fill high your glasses. Drink! Long life, health, plenty of rides just like this!" Hard-working men hear the clatter of the hoofs, and look up and say, "Why, I wonder where those fellows get their money from! We have to toil and drudge. They do nothing." To these gay men life is

A Thrill and an Excitement

They stare at other people, and in turn are stared at. The watch-chain jingles. The cup foams. The cheeks flush. The eyes flash. The midnight hears their guffaw. They swagger. They jostle decent men off the sidewalk. They take the name of God in vain. They parody the hymn they learned at their mother's knee; and to all pictures of coming disaster they cry out, "Who cares!" and to the counsel of some Christian friend, "Who are you?" Passing along the street some night, you hear a shriek in a grog-shop, the rattle of the watchman's club, the rush of the police. What is the matter now? Oh, this reckless young man has been killed in a grog-shop fight. Carry him home to his father's house. Parents will come down and wash his wounds, and close his eyes in death. They forgive him all he ever did, although he cannot in his silence ask it. The prodigal has got home at last.

I go further, and say those are unchristian amusements which become the chief business of a man's life. Life is an earnest thing. Whether we were born in a palace or hovel: whether we are affluent or pinched, we have to work. If you do not sweat with toil, you will sweat with disease. You have a soul that is to be figured amidst the pomp of a judgment day; and the sea has sung its last chant, and the mountain have come down in an avalanche of rock, you will and think and act, high on a throne where seraphs or deep in a dungeon where demons howl. In a world where there is so much to do for yourselves, and so much to do for others, God pity that man who has nothing to do.

Your sports are merely means to an end. They are alleviations and helps. The arm of toil is the only strong enough to bring up the bucket out of the well of pleasure. Amusement is only the bower where business and philanthropy rest while on their way to stirring achievements. Amusements are merely vines that grow about the anvil of toil, and the sowing of the hammers. The man who always has on his sporting-jacket, ready to hunt for game in the mountain or fish in the brook, with no time to pray or work, or read, is not so well off as the greyhound that runs by his side, or the fly bait with which he whips the stream. A man who does not work does not know how to play. If God had intended us to do nothing but laugh, he would not have given us shoulders with which to lift, and hands with which to work, and brains with which to think. The amusements of life are merely the orchestra playing while the great tragedy of life plies through its five acts—infancy, childhood, manhood, age, and death. Then exit the last earthly opportunity. Enter the overwhelming realities of an eternal world.

Evil Associates

I go further, and say that all those amusements are wrong which lead into bad company. If you go to any place where you have to associate with the intemperate, with the unclean, with the abandoned, however often they may be dressed, in the name of God quit it. They will despoil your nature. They will undermine your moral character. They will drop you when you are destroyed. They will give not one cent to support your children when you are dead. They will weep no more at your burial.

I had a friend in the West—a rare friend. He was one of the first to welcome me to my new home. To fine personal appearance, he added a generosity, frankness, and ardor of nature that made me love him like a brother. But I saw evil people gathering around him. They came up from the saloons, from the gambling-hells. They plied him with a thousand arts. They seized upon his social nature, and he could not resist the charm. They drove him on the rocks, like a ship full-winged, shivering on the breakers. I used to admonish him. I would say, "Now I wish you would quit those bad habits, and become a Christian." He would reply, "I would like to; I would like to; I have gone so far I don't think there is any way back." In his moments of repentance, he would go home and take his little girl of eight years, and embrace her impulsively, and cover her with adornments, and show around her pictures and toys, and everything that would make her happy; and then, as though hounded by an evil spirit, he would go out to the enflaming furnace of the house of shame, like a fool to the correction of the stocks.

I was summoned to his death-bed. I hastened. I entered the room. I found him, to my surprise, in full every-day dress on the top of the couch, but out my hand. He grasped it excitedly, and said, "Sit down, Mr. Talmage, right there." I sat down. He said, "Wife, I wish you would take these strings off me. There are strings 'spun all around my body. I wish you would take them off me." I saw he was delirium. "Oh," replied his wife, "my dear, there is nothing there, there is nothing there." I knelt down and prayed, conscious of the fact that he did not realize what I was saying. I got up. I said, "Good-bye; I hope you will be better soon." He said, "Good-bye, good-bye."

The Close of a Ruined Life

That night his soul went up to the God who gave it. Arrangements were made for the obsequies. Some said, "Don't bring him in the church; he was too dissolute." "Oh," I said, "bring him. He was a good friend of mine while he was alive, and I shall steal him now that he is dead. Bring him to the church."

As I sat in the pulpit and saw his body coming through the aisle, I felt as if I could weep tears of blood. I told the people that day, "This man had his virtues and a good many of them. He had his faults, and a good many them. But if there is an angel in this audience who is without sin, let him cast the first stone at this coffin-lid." On one side the pulpit sat at little child, rosy, sweet-faced, as beautiful as any child that sat at your table this morning, I want you. She looked up wistfully, not knowing the full horrors of an orphan child.

Oh, her countenance haunts me to-day, like some sweet face looking upon us through a horrid dream. On the other side of the pulpit were the men who had destroyed him. They sat and looked at the coffin like statues gazing at the carcass of a lamb whose heart they had ripped out! I cried in their ears as plainly as could, "There is a God and a judgment-day." Did they tremble? Oh no, no. They went back from the house of God, and that night, though their victim lay in Oakwood Cemetery, I was told that they blasphemed and they drank, and they gambled, and there was not one less customer in all the houses of iniquity.

Again: Any amusement that gives you a distaste for domestic life is bad. How many bright domestic circles have been broken up by sinful amusements! The father went off, the mother went off, the child went off. There are to-day the fragments before me of blasted households. Oh, if you have wandered away, I would like to charm you back by the sound of that one word, "Come." Do you not know that you have but little more time to give to domestic welfare? Do you not see, father, that your children are soon to go out into the world, and all the influence for good you are to have over them you must have now? Death will break in on your conjugal relations, and alas, if you have to stand over the grave of one who perished from your neglect!

A Dying Wife's Reproach

I saw a wayward husband standing at the death-bed of his Christian wife, and I saw her point to a ring on her finger and heard her say to her husband, "Do you see that ring?" He replied, "Yes, I see it." "Well," said she, "do you remember who put it there?" "Yes," said he, "I put it there," and all the past seemed to rush upon him. By the memory of that day when, in the presence of men and angels, you promised to be faithful in joy and sorrow, and in sickness and in health; by the memory of those pleasant hours when you sat together in your new home talking of a bright future; by the cradle and the joyful hour when one life was spared and another given; by that sick-bed, when the little one lifted up the hands and called for help, and you knew he must die, and he put one arm around each of your necks and brought you very near together in that dying kiss; by the little grave in the cemetery that you never think of without a rush of tears; by the family Bible, where amidst stories of heavenly love, is the brief but expressive record of births and deaths; by the neglects of the past, and by the agonies of the future; by a judgment-day, when husbands and wives parents and children, in immortal groups, will stand to be caught up in shining array, or to shrink down into darkness; by all that, I beg you give to home your best affections.

Ah! my friends, there is an hour coming when our past life will probably pass before us in review. It will be our last hour. If, from our death-pillow, we have to look back and see a life spent in sinful amusement, there will be a dart that will strike through our soul sharper than the dagger with which Virginus slew his child. The memory of the past will make us quake like Macbeth. The iniquities and rioting through which we have passed will come upon us weird and skeleton as Meg Merrilies. Death, the old Shylock, will demand, and take the remaining pound of flesh and the remaining drop of blood; and upon our last opportunity for repentance, and our last chance for heaven, the curtain will forever drop.

THE FIFTIETH BIRTHDAY
OF THE Y. M. C. A.

A NOTABLE JUBILEE

BY REV. JAMES H. ROSS

AN INTERNATIONAL CELEBRATION IN BOSTON

THE fiftieth anniversary of the founding of so beneficent an institution as the Young Men's Christian Association on this continent could not be allowed to pass without appropriate celebration. Accordingly preparations have been made for a representative meeting at Boston, Mass., June 11-16, in memory of the event. Besides a large assembly from all parts of the United States and Canada, delegates to a number of one hundred and upwards are expected from Great Britain, France, Spain, Russia, Belgium, Switzerland, and other lands.

The first organizations on this continent were effected almost simultaneously in Montreal and Boston, in 1851. They were in great measure due to reports of the beneficial results of the movement in England originated by George Williams, of the dry goods firm of Hitchcock, Williams & Co., in 1844. The Montreal Association resulted from the visit of David Nasmyth, of Glasgow, who organized a young men's society in the Baptist Chapel, in St. Helen's street. Later a young man who visited London and saw the working of the Y. M. C. A. there, brought a report of it which led to the expansion of the Montreal work on the new lines.

The credit of introducing the organization to the United States is mainly due to Mr. George M. Vanderlip, a native of New York State, who, while taking a course at Edinburgh University after graduating from the University of New York, wrote to a Boston Journal a description of the London Y. M. C. A. His letter was published October 30, 1851. The story made a deep impression on Captain T. V. Sullivan, who was then conducting a Marine Mission in Boston, and he at once undertook the work of organizing a similar institution to that described by Mr. Vanderlip. Subsequently Mr. Vanderlip returned to this country and found how large a harvest had resulted from his letter. He joined the New York Y. M. C. A. and his name appears in the first list of members issued by that institution in 1853. He will be an honored participant in the coming Boston celebration.

The subsequent history of the Y. M. C. A. is known to all men. It does not need to be detailed here. Suffice it to note that 6,192 branches now exist, with 521,000 members, among 50 nations, speaking 351 languages. The 1,439 American Associations have 2,000 members, of whom 32,000 are college students, 3,000 railroad men, 5,000 soldiers and sailors, 1,650 miners, 1,000 colored men, 23,000 boys. There are now over 250 Associations in the non-Christian lands, with about 11,000 members. Twenty-five new Associations have been added during the past year, and there has been a marked increase in the membership of the four leading city Associations, Tokio, Japan; Madras, India; Colombo, Ceylon and Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

The Jubilee Convention will be historic and international. Many distinguished men and secretaries from many lands will attend as delegates and participants in the programme. Among them will be Lord Kinnaird,

SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS
Founder of the first Y. M. C. A. in London, in 1844 who has been connected with the Y. M. C. A. work for fully thirty years, since 1874, on the Central Committee, and since early in the eighties on the National Council. His lordship occupies a place in the front rank of public men who have advocated this cause. No one except Sir George Williams has rendered more constant personal service, while his lordship has been second to none in his gifts to the work, and has been a warm supporter of every movement for its extension both at home and abroad. Lord Kinnaird is president of the Young Woman's Christian Association, which was founded by his mother, Lady Kinnaird, and is in close association with all the work of the Y. M. C. A.'s. Lord Kinnaird is also president of the Scottish National Council of the Y. M. C. A.

Another distinguished delegate and speaker will be Lord Strathcona, of Montreal and London. He is Canada's "Grand Old Man." He is as old as Sir George Williams. In 1896 he retired altogether from political life, being then appointed to represent the Dominion in London as High Commissioner. Queen Victoria knighted him in 1886, and in 1897 she raised him to the Peerage as Baron Strathcona and Mount Royal, of Glencoe in Argyll, and of Montreal in Canada. At the time of the Queen's Jubilee, 1887, he with Lord Mount Stephen, gave a million dollars for the building and endowment of the Royal Victoria Hospital, Montreal, which sum was supplemented with a further donation for maintenance. To McGill University, of which he is Chancellor, he has given many practical proofs of his interest in higher education. In 1896 he erected and endowed the Royal Victoria College for the higher education of women.

The International Y. M. C. A. Committee whose headquarters are in New York, has the responsibility for the advisory management of the International Y. M. C. A. movement. Lucien C. Warner, M.D., is its chairman, and Richard C. Morse its secretary. The preparation of the programme is a part of their executive work. Both will make reports to the convention. Dr. Warner is a well known business man and philanthropist, identified with numerous religious organizations, inclusive of the American Missionary Association and the American Board of Foreign Missions.

Secretary Morse belongs to the celebrated Morse family of New York, being a son of the founder of the New York Observer, grandson of the great geographer, and nephew of the inventor of the electric telegraph. He was brought into the work of the Y. M. C. A. by Robert McBurney, the famous secretary of the New York Association, and began his work in October, 1869, as editor of the Association Monthly. For thirty years he has been in his present position and has been largely instrumental in guiding the organization through all these years of phenomenal growth and development. One great feature of the convention will be an immense historical exhibit, showing the origin and evolution of the Association movement.

Baptists and Congregationalists in England Combine in United Assembly

MEETINGS have been taking place in London recently which, as Carlyle would have said, are significant of much. For many years past the chief events of the religious world in England at this season are the annual meetings of the great denominations. Occupying an important place among them are the Congregational and Baptist Unions. Heretofore, each denomination has held its own separate celebration; but this year they have met together. For the first time in their history, the two denominations assembled in joint session, the Chairman of the Congregational Union presiding, and the Chairman of the Baptist Union delivering the principal address. An unexpected, but altogether appropriate event was the appearance at the joint session of Principal Rainy, who is the Moderator of the United Free Church of Scotland, and is therefore an embodiment and a representative of the spirit of union in Scotland. It was a graceful and fraternal act on his part to attend, and offer his congratulations on the happy combination of the two churches in England. If there were any persons present at the great meeting in the City Temple who were nervous at this fraternization, fearing that either Baptists or Congregationalists were surrendering the principles for which the two denominations respectively stood, they must have been reassured by the account Dr. Rainy gave of his own experiences of combination. Referring to the two churches in Scotland which have united in electing him their Moderator, he said:

"As to the mass of the two churches—that were two, and are now one—we find ourselves in the best of circumstances. We are finding out one another's good qualities. For as long as denominations, even denominations as near as yours, keep quite separate, there is a percentage of people in both of them that have a great aptitude for finding out the bad points of the other's denomination. I know that ever since the Reformation we are all agreed that there may be good and constraining grounds for separation; that, without saying that Christ has forsaken a given denomination, we may find it our duty to separate ourselves from it. I hold that. I hold also the grand unity of the Church of Christ in Christ, and by its relation to him. At the same time, I do very strongly hold that people who needlessly keep outwardly separate from one another and unfold competing banners before the world, are seriously misrepresenting the Church of Christ to the world—and that it is a service that is due to him to endeavour by all means to replace separation by unity when, with a good conscience and with a due regard to the views of men that are to be consulted, that can be brought to pass.

"Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty; for when we come under the blessed dominion of Jesus Christ, then we are set free inwardly from every yoke, but the yoke of truth and the yoke of goodness. It has not been given to all Christians to be so consistent as to see how true this is, and how effect should be given to it; but I desire very earnestly to assure you how strong the impression of it is on our minds. And though we are Presbyterians, yet I will claim for us, and on every side, as well as for you, that our effort has been in devising and working our church arrangements and our church machinery, to have a conception that expresses the genius of religion—the Christian religion—as conceived in the evangelical way, as implying those relations of the soul to Christ, and to God through Christ, which we connect with the term evangelical religion. Now, I don't suppose, that we shall agree as to which has been most successful—all of us, I suppose, have been more or less imperfect—which has come nearest to a right view of how that problem is to be solved. But I think we shall give one another credit for having been honestly in earnest in endeavoring to work out that great thought, and no greater service could be rendered to Church history than the effort to do it. And the truth is that all along, although there have been memorable and lamentable periods in which, I suppose, perhaps the hardest task in the world that could be set a Congregationalist was to love a Presbyterian—although I admit that, yet I do think that the ties between us have not only been strong, they have been felt all the line. "We pray God to bless the work of the ministers and the people of both denominations which here recognizing the tie between them, and who here coming together in order that they may perse again to new and more eminent and successful work for Christ." Eloquent addresses were made by Dr. Maclaren and Dr. Parker, showing cordial were the new relations. Other meetings were also held in which the Temperance Societies and the Missionary Societies of the two churches united in celebration of their organization. One of the chief speakers at the Union meeting was Prof. Fairbairn, head of the Congregational College at Oxford, who happily described the principles which separated and those which unite the two denominations. He said that the two denominations did not minimise their differences, but the thing abhorrent was the assumption that, because one brother did not hold another's view, therefore he was outside the covenants of God. It was not Baptism that made them Christians; they thought as they did of Baptism because they were Christians. To Baptism, Baptism was a symbol of conversion, which could only be realised by an adult, and a sign of complete public confession of faith. To himself as a Congregationalist, Baptism spoke of a nature sanctified from within, a birthmark, of a beginning of a life within, rather than without, the kingdom of God. It bore witness to a transcendental unity in which the parts were welcomed as heir to their spiritual heritage a soul God had made and Christ redeemed. Each side had its own idiosyncrasy of the symbolism of Baptism. After adding to the present political situation in England, Dr. Fairbairn pointed out the need of a vigorous stand by the churches against greed and luxury, and the necessity of righteous men standing together in insisting on the Government pursuing a righteous policy. In conclusion, he said: "I appeal to you as representatives of the Free Churches to rise up in your thousands, in your churches, to live unflinchingly, unhesitating, resolved to build Christ's Kingdom in England."

All the more impressiveness was lent to this great occasion by the fact that the chairmen of the two unions are acknowledged to be the chief and most representative preachers, respectively, in their denominations. Dr. Joseph Parker, the Chairman of the Congregational Union, and Dr. Alexander Maclaren, the President of the Baptist Union, have each rendered such services to their churches and to the world at large, by tongue and pen, that their presence together on the same platform implies the concurrence of the members of the denominations in the union organized by their leaders. It is evident that, at last, the greatest thing in both churches have turned their attention away from the points of difference to the points on which they are agreed, the result is one on which every Christian may congratulate himself. It may be the beginning of a movement, which will not end until the forces of unrighteousness, of atheism and materialism, find themselves opposed, no longer to an enemy divided in counsel and operation, wasting its money and efforts in expensive separate organizations and cumbrous duplicate machinery, but an enemy united and one in defense of Christ's cause and the principles of righteousness. So at last this century may witness the fulfilment of our Lord's hope and the answer to his prayer: "That they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

MISSIONARIES PLEAD FOR CHINA'S DYING

THEY CALL ON CHRISTIAN AMERICA TO HELP THE SHANSI FAMINE SUFFERERS

THE desperate condition of the famine-stricken people of Shansi and Shensi in China for whom Li Hung Chang lately appealed to Americans, through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, graphically described in letters just received from returned missionaries, extracts from some of which are given below. These eloquently reinforce the appeal of the Chinese statesman for his perishing people, and constitute a strong argument for the sending of prompt relief.

In a letter to the North China Herald, a missionary, who has had years of experience in the present famine, and who is now in Hankow, writes, telling of the sufferings of the natives, rich and poor alike, in language that reads like a page of the terrible story of India's action. Seven-eighths of the inhabitants of the immense Hsian plain are destitute. In some villages, of one, or at most two, families have any food. Farmers this year reaped less than they had sown. Rice is sold at quarter its value to buy a morsel of food. The wood-work of houses is pulled down and sold to raise a meal. All the oxen have been killed. Caravans of famished men, women and children are ceaselessly traveling, hoping to leave the blighted territory and to find relief elsewhere.

Terrible Famine Scenes

In some districts, the mandarins are distributing rice to women, children, and feeble old men—a soup of flour and water. The scenes at the relief stations are pathetic. Thousands come holding tickets, and take their places in a semicircle, waiting frequently for hours for the meagre allowance of thin gruel to allay their hunger. In most towns the shops are closed, and those in which the shops are still open are the rendezvous of crowds of the famishing. Men have become like birds of prey—long, lank, cadaverous, and they snatch from the hands of the few fortunate ones any morsel of food that may be exposed. Every day many die, and are cast into the common pit.

It is noticeable among the starving, that the complexion changes, the yellow skin, being bloodless, grows dark. Even the once plump Chinese babies are reduced to skin and bone, their little hands and feet dangling like, as though the muscles and tendons had dried up. Women and children are being sold, or given away. Fanticide is frightfully frequent. In every district, hundreds of pagan children will be cast on the Christian missions.

Desperation of the Sufferers

The same missionary gives some personal experiences among the famine-stricken. A woman pleads that her child be taken in at the mission; for herself, she begs. A pagan mother throws her starving baby at the mission door and runs away. A weeping mother (a woman formerly of wealth and social position) comes to the missionary and says she cannot bear to hear the crying of her hungry children.

One of the most startling developments of the famine is that it has emphasized the pagan disregard of death.

It is quite common to hear a famished man or woman threaten to commit suicide, unless they receive immediate help. "Buy my land, or I'll make you responsible for my death," cries one who is in despair. "A morsel of bread, or I will destroy myself at your door," exclaims another. "Satisfy my hunger," screams a wretched, emaciated woman, "and I will follow you." A mother, weak with weeping, looks at her starveling babe, and holds it up to the stranger, saying, in broken voice, "Take it for a little alms for food!"

Even the strongest ties of love and affection seem to experience. He adds, "the native Christians are in great need." Shansi was not a Boxer province.

Faithful Shansi Christians

Mr. McKie, a missionary in Shensi, escaped during the Boxer troubles, by coming through Shansi. In Tai-Yuen-fu the Christians were faithful to the last; not one denied Christ. When the missionaries, through the perfidy of the Governor, Yu Hsien (who favored the Boxers), were beheaded, the native Christians of Shansi were compelled to kneel down and drink their blood, and were killed while they knelt. The native Christian girls of the mission schools were taken into the wicked Governor's Yamen and asked: "Do you follow the foreigners?" "No," they said bravely, "we follow Christ." "Do you read the foreigners' books?" persisted the Governor. "No," they replied, "we read God's word." How many among ourselves would stand such a test as these Shansi Christians stood?

All the missionaries agree that the people of Shansi are peaceful, and that no trouble would ever have occurred there had not the Governor, Yu Hsien, with his Boxer followers, been the sole cause. They are now perishing in great numbers from the worst famine that has ever afflicted the province. It remains for us as a Christian nation, whose workers have been engaged for years past in spreading the Gospel in Shansi, to prove to these people the reality of Christian professions, and to show love and forgiveness. A liberal response to the appeal for aid for the famine-sufferers now will not only save life and elicit lasting gratitude, but it will pave the way for the resumption under brighter auspices than ever, of Gospel work among the natives.

snap asunder in this furnace of terrible trial. A husband, torn with hunger, looks at his suffering wife, and then at the stranger, and says at last: "My wife is yours for a few strings of copper."

Rev. C. A. Stanley, another missionary, now in the United States, writes that the mortality is very great. The Shansi people have always been friendly to the missionaries. Missionaries should distribute the relief sent, having the Government's guaranteed protection. Mr. Stanley, during the famine of 1878, organized relief work in Shansi with three helpers, and had 20,000 destitute natives on his list, and has, therefore, practical that sturdy people. Now they are facing a new famine. Surely, God is paying the way for a spiritual harvest.

These natives are most worthy of help. They are industrious and peaceable. We always felt safe with them. Had it not been for Yu Hsien our loved ones would still be living. Won't you pray for this people? Won't you aid by sending your mite, however small? God will take care of the results.

My own woman and our Bible woman has told me with tears running down her face, how she longed for her daughters; but she sold them to buy food in the former famine. "Why did I not suffer death rather than part with them? But no one had told me that it was wrong. I saved my boys; but oh, my daughters!" Can we not spare more aching hearts by our help now?

GODLY WOMAN'S APPEAL FOR CHINA

BY ALICE M. WILLIAMS, a Returned Missionary from Shansi

It is truly gratifying to learn that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is taking up the cause of the sufferers of Shansi. The Chinese are a people that will suffer long without murmuring, so that when we hear that they are in need of help there must be genuine distress.

The Shansi Plain from north to south is very fertile, when they have rain. They have two harvests in the early summer and autumn, if one season fails they have the other. They live principally upon wheat, millet and sorghum. Poor rarely use flour—that is a luxury; but they grind the seed of the sorghum and that is their flour. In the spring of 1900 Miss Bird made special pleas for help to carry on relief work, and a few of the families were being supplied each by the foreigners.

The condition of the people now? I fear that it is past human description. One faithful helper, Mr. Tu, escaped to the coast. He brought the tidings that eighty of our Tai-Ku Christians had been killed. Another "heard that they had met for worship, when the Boxers came and killed all but two. There is scarcely a home without bereavement, and their homes are robbed and plundered." Think of what their condition must have been this last winter. They are worse off than the poorest beggar. They have some place to creep into, but our native Christians were denied even that. Have they escaped the cruel ravages of winter? I fear not. Why are we so slow to aid them?

The country and people have barely recovered from the terrible famine which swept over Shansi about twenty years ago. This was the means of opening our great work among

Vneangelized Homes on the Plain
... The Story of a Mission Tour ...

IN these days of widespread Christian effort, when the Gospel is carried to the farthest ends of the earth, it is almost incredible that, within the boundaries of the United States, there could be found a single white family in whose home the name of Jesus is unknown, save as an expression of profanity. Yet this is the remarkable assertion made by missionaries of the American Sunday School Union, who are now doing evangelistic work among the people of the northern counties of Nebraska. The facts set forth in the following letter, from Mr. S., one of the missionary workers, tell a pitiful story of the needy spiritual condition of these districts, and of the importance of sending the message of the Gospel to the people of the plains.

"I have just returned from a missionary trip in Nebraska, in company with a brother missionary. Each day we visited some town along the Fremont and Elkhorn Railroad, and each night a stereopticon lecture was given in some church.

"In the northern part of the State are some exceedingly large counties—Holt, Rock, Brown and Cherry—and there are but three resident ministers in these counties. So you can readily understand we were doing some pioneer work. Very few of the people had previously heard anything of our work, and they displayed great interest as we told them of the three hundred thousand neglected children outside of Sunday School in Nebraska alone, and the eleven millions or more in the same condition throughout the country.

"On my own field, revivals and numerous conversions are reported in all directions. House-to-house work has been productive of some blessed results. In one home—a little log house—I found an aged couple, in almost destitute circumstances. The husband was one of those poor unfortunates, who are their own worst enemies.

For years the accursed drink habit had enslaved and impoverished him, until it culminated in the loss of the farm and home. I told them of God's promises, that not only would he receive all who came to him through Christ; and, on the other hand, I told them that no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of heaven. There was a genuine repentance.

"Traveling here, one can see how some of our Western people live. In one home were the grandfather, the next generation and the next six children under twelve years being in the miserable sod shanty, with roof of poles, straw and dirt. Christ was in this home. The children, I found, knew nothing about him, except they had heard his name in vain. The parents told me I was the first person who had ever carried to them the message of Christ. I had permission to read the Scriptures and pray with them. I told them the great love of Jesus that he loved and died for them—and begged of them to accept his love and proffered of mercy. They promised to do so, and to bring their little ones to Sunday School.

"In our Sunday Schools this winter many bright conversions have taken place, and I have no doubt several of these schools will soon blossom into churches. God has indeed blessed the work during the present year."

THE SOD HOUSE OF A FARMER ON THE PLAINS

MISSIONARIES MURDERED

NEWS comes from Australia that a horrible crime has been committed on the Island of New Guinea.

Rev. James Chalmers and his young colleague, Rev. Oliver Tomkins, with ten native students, have been murdered on the Fly River. Reports of the death of Mr. Chalmers have come before this, for he was a daring man, who went on expeditions which seemed utterly hopeless. So his friends hoped that this report also might be untrue; but the news has now been confirmed with such fulness of detail that no basis for hope remains. The story of his death is so likely to have been true, from what we know of the man, that it gains credence by its probability. There was, it is reported, a tribal fight; and Chalmers attempted to make peace and so lost his life, and his companions perished with him. This was not the first time, by many, that the "fearless Tamate," as Robert Louis Stevenson called him, took his life in his hand and marched in between the ferocious warriors of New Guinea. On one occasion he faced a furious chief, wrested the club from his hands, and, linking arms with him, led him from the field of battle, and would not let him return until he had solemnly pledged himself to peace. Many a time he was within an instant of death; but, absolutely fearless, he had always been delivered. Now, at last, he has fallen, and there is mourning alike among the savages, who loved him, and the Christian people of his own land.

Mr. Chalmers was sixty years old, but there was so much vigor and energy in his big, well-knit frame that when he was home on furlough recently he looked as if he might live twenty years longer. He was a Scotchman, born of humble parents on the estate of the Duke of Argyll. As a lad and in his young manhood he was full of fun and of the spirit of adventure. Twice he was brought home as dead by fishermen who had rescued him from the Loch into which he had plunged to save some life. At the age of nineteen he was converted, but there was no change in his bright, cheery spirit or his brilliant courage. He determined to consecrate his life to missionary work, and the more dangerous the field the more attractive it was to him. He studied at Cheshunt College, and soon after graduation he was appointed to the field in which John Williams suffered martyrdom. He was twice wrecked and nearly drowned before he reached the islands of the South Seas. Ten years he spent at Raratonga, learning the languages of the tribes and teaching in the schools. Then he went to the savage cannibals tribe of New Guinea and settled down to his discouraging pioneer labors. His great stature and his dauntless bearing produced a good impression on the native tribes. They conceived a respect for him which grew as they came to recognize the loving, noble spirit of the man. Early in his settlement there arose a fierce dispute which promised fearful bloodshed. Chalmers studied the points of difference, and interposed so successfully that the natives called him "the Peacemaker"—a name which he bore among them to the end.

Scarcely anything was known of New Guinea when Chalmers went there in 1877. He surveyed the coast, penetrated into the interior, and made friends with all the native chiefs. Not since the days of Livingstone has any missionary done such daring service as a pioneer. For more than a thousand miles he was known as a welcome visitor and as an arbitrator in tribal disputes. Few white men have ever so completely won the reverence of savages. When, at last, he had the joy of baptizing his first three converts, his cup of happiness seemed full. Then more came, and gradually a large company was organized into a church. Chalmers translated more than two hundred hymns into the native dialect. But the tide turned against him. Some plan-circulated, and Chalmers learned that certain chiefs had leagued together to kill him. With marvelous courage, he set out for the home of the leader of the conspiracy, to beard the lion in his den. No one ever expected to see him return. The unscrupulous character of his enemy was well known, and Chalmers would go unarmed. He entered his foe's abode, and sat down with him without a tremor. In the first minutes his life was not worth a moment's purchase, but before he left his enemy had become his friend. Respect for him increased throughout the island; and in the worst districts the news that "the Tamate" had arrived was the prelude to a settlement of differences. His influence was supreme, and the who saw most of him yielded to the Gospel that he preached. It must have been in a moment of frenzied passion that he was murdered.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

Wall Street's "Black Thursday"

ANY years will probably elapse before the exciting story of the great financial battle fought in Wall street on Thursday, May 9, is forgotten. Short-lived, yet exceedingly fierce was the struggle, and when its fury was spent, the street was littered with the wrecks of many thousands of speculators and petty investors, who had been involved in it when the entire list of active stocks went tumbling downward, as the result of the great fight between the "bulls" and "bears" for the control of Northern Pacific. For weeks the market had been buoyant and speculative stocks touched the highest figures known in many years. Tempted by the advance in prices, and lured by the possibility of making money easily, many thousands of investors all over the country bought stocks on margin, confident of a golden harvest on the "eve." A few experienced financiers had already sounded a note of warning, foreseeing the sudden break that must come sooner or later on an inflated market; but it went unheeded. The first intimation of the trouble came on Wednesday, May 8, when a strong "bear" clique (representing railroad and oil millionaires), made a raid which resulted in a decline of millions in stock values in a single hour. Next day the market saw the worst panic that has been witnessed in a generation. Concentrating their forces, the "bear" raiders renewed their attack, and the market dropped with unprecedented velocity. The mails and wires were crowded with selling orders from frightened investors. Prices fell from 10 to 60 points all along the line. The great host of "margin" speculators, who had counted on handsome profits, saw their money swept away in a moment. Between ten and eleven o'clock thousands who, that morning, had reckoned themselves comfortably well off, were reduced to penury. Scenes of excitement accompanied the crash quotations. Men grew frantic, and struggled like wild beasts, some shouting in others sobbing, but dry-eyed; when—for they, too, were caught by the gambling fever—fainted or grew hysterical as they realized their loss. Meanwhile, the greater battle between the speculative giants, raged wildly over Northern Pacific. They gave no heed to the multitude they were trampling underfoot in the struggle; they had no thought for the countless homes that would now be invaded by sorrow and starvation. Upward went the price of Northern Pacific, by great leaps. Other stocks were thrown overboard indiscriminately in the panic, and were sacrificed at almost any price. The "shorts" in Northern Pacific were making desperate efforts to get the stock, at a offered such fabulous figures that it jumped by quick stages from 170, the opening quotation, to 1,000, at which price 300 shares were sold for $300,000 cash. When the panic was at its worst, relief came to the market from the leading city banks, which decided to loan $1,000,000 at market rates. At the same time it was announced that the time for the delivery of Northern Pacific stocks would be extended. These combined to give check to the demoralization, and the worst danger was soon over. The two great rival financial factions, whose operations caused the panic, adjusted their differences satisfactorily. It is estimated that while it lasted, the panic of Black Thursday cost not less than $500,000,000, widely distributed. It has brought sorrow and distress to homes in many States, and is a powerful illustration of the folly of that love for sudden riches, which is a marked feature of our national character.

Riches make themselves wings; they fly away as an eagle (Prov. 23: 5).

Fortune Sold

The correspondent of a Boston journal describes an incident of business life that is full of significance. It relates to the engagement of a boy in a large department store. He was employed, as was customary in that house with new beginners, in the lowest capacity. The two partners at the head of the house began life in just that position, and they being both childless, were looking out for the right kind of boy whom they could train to reach the highest office and eventually to become a partner. This boy was exceedingly bright, active and industrious. Both partners liked his appearance and habits and agreed between themselves to watch him closely. If he proved to be the right kind of boy his promotion was to be rapid. The head of the department was instructed to watch him also and report. He did so from time to time and his report was always favorable. After a few weeks the partners consulted and agreed to give the boy six months' trial, and if at the end of that time he had still a good record his promotion would begin. Of course, no intimation of his good fortune was given to the boy, and the scrutiny was continued. The last week of the six months' probation arrived, when one morning the superintendent saw the boy slip something slyly into his pocket. He insisted on knowing what it was, and ultimately the boy confessed that he had stolen a quarter of a dollar. He was of course dismissed, and never learned how near he had been to the highway of fortune. He had sold the make a will, and when the survivor died recently their claims ignored. A distant relative of her foster parents has applied to the courts for permission to administer the estate and distribute it among the nearest of kin. The adopted daughter is opposing the application, and is endeavoring to establish her claim by witnesses who know of the promise that was made to her. No such difficulty can ever confront those who become the adopted children of God. Their heritage is secured to them by his love and his promise.

Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son then an heir of God through Christ (Gal. 4: 7).

Teaching the Blind to See

An Austrian physician, who has been studying diseases of the eye, reported the result of some experiments at a recent meeting of the Vienna Medical Association. His studies had convinced him that there were some cases of blindness which might be cured by careful training. He selected the case of a boy who, though practically blind, could distinguish between light and darkness. He placed him in a dark room, to which, after some time, he admitted one shaft of light through a hole in a shutter. The boy noticed the one ray and would turn his face toward it. The aperture was then closed and another one in a different part of the room was opened. Instantly the boy turned toward it, evidently perceiving whence the light came. As soon as he had become accustomed to this experiment and could quickly identify the rays of light, objects of geometrical shape were placed in his hands for him to familiarize himself with them by the sense of touch. They were then placed in the field of the ray in the darkened room and he was required to identify them by the sense of sight alone. After some practice, he succeeded in doing so. Then letters and numerals were placed in the field, and again he learned to identify them. It was seen that his power of vision was increasing. He has been eighteen months under the physician's care and has now been removed from the dark room to go through the same process in the sunlight. When the doctor introduced him to the Medical Association he could see dimly, but sufficiently to describe the furniture and the persons in the hall. It is believed that in a comparatively short time his power of vision will be normal. The doctor believes that whenever the power exists of discriminating between light and darkness, it is possible to develop the power of sight. It is so in spiritual things, and the apostle intimates that such power is given to all.

The invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead (Rom. 1: 20).

splendid position he might have attained, for a quarter of a dollar. We say how foolish, but the time will yet come when many who would never have committed so foolish an act will realize that they have sold an eternal possession for as beggarly a pittance.

He that sinneth against me wrongeth his own soul (Prov. 8: 36).

An Adopted Daughter's Suit

An action has been entered in the Supreme Court in New York to prevent the distribution of an estate left by a recently deceased citizen. Some years ago he and his wife, who were childless, offered to adopt a little girl whose father was dead and the mother scarcely able to support her. The mother was very reluctant to part with her child, but, reflecting that it would be for the girl's advantage and that she would be better cared for and educated in the home of the childless couple than under her own care, she consented to the adoption. The child went to her new home and her mother came to New York to earn her own living. The child was duly educated and her foster parents promised to leave her all their property. But, like many procrastinating people, they let the years slip by and neglected to

BRIEF NOTES

A new mission church has been secured in New York. Rev. R. Tjader has bought the stone church in Seventy-second street and Lexington avenue, and after it has been renovated will hold services there in English, German and Swedish.

The Y. M. C. A., of St. Petersburg, organized by Mr. James Stokes, of New York, celebrated on May 5 its first semi-annual festival. Prince Alexander of Oldenburg presided. The Society has already eight hundred members and its meetings are largely attended.

At the recent anniversary of the Pastors' College, founded by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon, it was announced that the total number of students received into the college has now reached 1,019, and 654 are still in the ranks as pastors, missionaries, or evangelists. There are 100 without pastorates, but eighty of these are still engaged in Christian work. Pastor Thomas Spurgeon said that not more than one applicant in ten could be received. More room was urgently needed.

THE work of Jesus did not end with the ascension. In the last lesson we learned how he continued to work on earth by sending the Holy Spirit and the apostles into all the world. In this chapter we see Jesus in heaven, where "he ever liveth to make intercession" as our High Priest. And that title carries us back to the picture Gospel of Old Testament times. We cannot understand any part of the Epistle to the Hebrews until we have taken a bird's-eye view of Leviticus. The Hebrews or Israelites, when they came out of Egyptian slavery, were grown-up children, like newly-emancipated negroes. We call such peoples "child races." So God prepared a sort of kindergarten to teach them how to be saved from their sins. There were colors, and bells, and movements, all of which meant something, as a red flag on the railroad means danger, and a church bell means "Come to meeting."

A leper, covered with boils, pictured the sinner (Lev. 14). That meant that hate, and envy, and selfishness in the heart seem as foul to the pure eyes of God as a leper's sores do to man. The leper was separated from the camp to show that sinful men are far off from God by wicked works. The leper could not come back, even after he was healed, until a priest interceded for him with God, and offered a bleeding sacrifice, in which the leper confessed his sin, and that he deserved to die, but hoped for pardon through the death of a substitute. Not lepers alone were considered sinners, but it was taught in many ways by the picture Gospel that every soul was unclean and displeasing to God, and could be reconciled to God only through a mediating priest and sacrifice.

Every blood-stained altar of the Old Testament taught that sin—(1) is exceedingly sinful; (2) separates from God; (3) requires atonement; (4) must be confessed; (5) may be pardoned and purged away.

The five Old Testament sacrifices made up a picture history of Christian truth and life.

First—The "sin-offering," a slain animal, was a symbolic way of saying, "I have committed deadly sin, and deserve to die, but I crave pardon through the Lamb of God, who shall die in my stead, typified by this bleeding lamb." They probably saw this meaning, as in a glass darkly, but "by faith" they certainly saw much more than was in sight (Heb. 11: 4, 17; John 8: 56).

Second—The trespass offering, also a slain animal, was a symbolic prayer to be cleansed from unintentional and unconscious sins. Christ is himself the sin offering and trespass offering of all sins of all men who accept him as such.

Third—The "whole burnt offering," a living animal, was a symbol of the consecration of human lives to God. "I beseech by the mercies of God that ye present your bodies (that is, your whole being,) a living sacrifice"—that is our whole burnt offering (Rom. 12: 1).

Fourth—The "peace offering," in which the square altar is thought of as God's table, pictures the reconciled sinner, in "peace" after fighting against God, eating in restored friendship and fellowship.

Fifth—The "thank offering," which was never an animal, but fruits and grains, expressed gratitude and loyalty, like gifts to a friend, and willing tribute to an acknowledged king.

All these five offerings are combined in the Lord's Supper, whose blood-red wine and broken bread point us to Christ, our sin and trespass offering, while the word "sacrament," meaning an oath of loyalty, makes the service a sacrifice of consecration, as we sing:

Love so amazing, so divine,
Demands my soul, my life, my all.
Here, Lord, I give myself away,
'Tis all that I can do.

The Lord's Supper is also a "communion" of restored fellowship with God, and a "eucharist," that is, a thank-offering for daily and spiritual bread.

The priest everywhere in the Old Testament was the mediator who interceded with God for sinful men, type of the final Mediator, in whom all priesthood should be merged, who is now the "one Mediator between God and man." The typical priest, even the high priest, must offer sacrifices (1) of other lives; (2) must offer for his own sins, as well as those of others; (3) must "offer continually," day after day. But the true High Priest, Jesus Christ, (1) offers himself; (2) but not for himself, being sinless; (3) and it is an all-sufficient offering, made "once for all."

All the picture Gospel of the Old Testament is brought together in the Tabernacle, God's tent. As the priest enters, he sees first, the great altar of sacrifice and forgiveness, which teaches us that the way to begin a Christian life is to be rid of the guilt of sin. It is not enough to stop sinning. Conscience must be washed of the guilt of sins already done. The brazen altar, with its bleeding sacrifices, pictures the great truth, that the veracity of God, the honor of God, and the government of God, all forbid the forgiveness of sin as a trifle without such a satisfaction of justice as the death of Christ in our stead on the altar cross of Calvary afforded.

The great laver of pure water, which comes next, tells us that after pardon must come on our part purity of life. At the laver we may well pause, for this story, told by Hugh opened for sin and uncleanness. He can make the blackest soul white.

Entering the holy place, the table of shew bread reminds us we must feed on Christ and his word. And the golden candlestick teaches that a spirit-filled life will shine with joy and helpfulness. The altar of sweet incense declares the importance of prayer in a holy life. The most holy pictures heaven, into which Christ entered to intercede as our High Priest, not one day in the year, but every day, the veil of his wounded body opening the way for us to get to God, without the intervention of any priest but Christ.

This Old Testament Gospel was most intensely pictured in the great day of atonement. In this golden frame (which may be a frame of gilt paper on a blackboard, or of yellow chalk, or only a frame "in the mind's eye") let us make out a picture of the beautiful tabernacle and let us "suppose" we can see all that is on, inside and out, on this greatest day of the Hebrew year.

Moving Pictures of the Day of Atonement

All about the tabernacle stand the solemn, fasting, people, millions of them, with these many dots will help us to see. The person is going alone into the tabernacle, dressed in pure white from head to foot. It is the high priest. He has with him a bullock, two young goats, and two horned sheep. He stops with the animals at the brazen altar. He lays his hand on the bullock, as if saying, "I lay my sins on the sacrifice." He does not understand all it means, but God is teaching him and the people what a little girl said clearly, whose mother asked: "Daddy, have you laid your sins on Jesus?" "No, but God did. The Lord hath laid on me the iniquity of us all." The priest, purged of his own sins, proceeds to offer sacrifices for the people, as the type and promise of Christ, our sinless High Priest. Now the high priest is casting lots on the goats which shall be killed—the other is to be the scapegoat, and to one of its horns he ties a string. But before he does anything he is selecting the goats, he takes a censer full of coals and incense, and pours it on the altar of incense, that he may enter the holy place in a cloud of sweet odors at pictures the outpourings of prayer. Entering the holy of holies, we see him sprinkling the atoning blood upon the mercy seat, the place of intercession, where he prays that the sins of the people may be pardoned "through the blood of the everlasting covenant." Now we see him go back, sprinkling blood on the altar of incense, and all about the holy place. Then he goes again to the brazen altar, and sacrifices the goat that was selected to die; with its blood he goes again into the holy room, and sprinkles the mercy seat once more. Then he goes back, bearing the blood of bullock and goat, mixed together, and sprinkles the horns on the corners of the great altar, as if to say that our very prayers for pardon need to be pure, and made sincere and pure. Now he goes to the living goat, and over him confesses the sins of the people, and sends him away into the wilderness to picture the truth in the Baptist taught more plainly when he pointed to Jesus, and said, "Behold the Lamb of God that beareth away the sin of the world." What that means, a little girl discovered, who was troubled about her sins. "Your sins," said her teacher, "are laid on Jesus, were they not, when he hung on the cross?" "Yes." "Surely they are not on him when he rose in purity and triumph from the grave. Where are they then?" "They are in his grave." That is the "land not inhabited," to which Christ, our scapegoat, has borne our sins.

All this special service of atonement or reconciliation is over, the high priest puts off his white robes, and puts on his "golden clothes." Upon his heart was a breast-plate of twelve precious stones, on which were inscribed the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, thus presented by name in perpetual intercession before God, suggesting that every Christian should bear his family, his class, his friends, his foes, upon his heart in prayer to God. After the regular evening sacrifice, he is escorted joyfully to his home by his people, who receive in the blessedness of him whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered.

Having surveyed this picture Gospel of the Old Testament, we are prepared to read understandingly the lesson for today (Heb. 9: 11, etc.).

"WE NEEDETH NOT, DAILY, AS THOSE HIGH PRIESTS, TO OFFER SACRIFICE"

MacMillan: There is a lonely little pool of water on the mountain side near Tarbel, Loch Lomond, called the Fairy Loch. If you look into it you will see a great many colors in the water, owing to the varied nature of the materials that form its bottom. There is a legend about it which says that the fairies used to dye things for the people round about if a specimen of the color wanted was left along with the cloth on the brink of the pool at sunset. One evening a shepherd left beside the Fairy Loch the fleece of a black sheep, and placed upon it a white woolen thread, to show that he wished the fleece dyed white. This fairly puzzled the fairies. They could dye a white fleece any color, but to make a black fleece white was beyond them. In despair, they threw all their colors in the loch, giving it its present strange look, and disappeared forever. This may seem a foolish fable, but it has a wise moral. What the fairies could not do beside the Fairy Loch the Spirit of God can do beside the fountain

Concerning Children

CHILDREN are as common as the daisies and the clover, yet sometimes I think we fail to comprehend so much as the alphabet of their beautiful little lives. For one thing, we are singularly arbitrary in our management of them, and amazingly forgetful of the fact that they are imitative beings, taking on our tones, our expressions, and our modes of thought with unconscious facility and enduring retentiveness. "Do not speak so impatiently, Edith," and the speaker added, "do not pucker up your forehead in a knot when you cannot get what you want." The governer, who knew Edith's mother, her aunts and her cousins, smiled, and then sighed, for a more impetuous,itable and emotional family she had never seen, one and all frowning when excited, and one and all spoke vehemently and clamorously for what their hearts were upon, whether it was the moon, or a shol of cotton. Poor little Edith, how could she help herself, how could she learn serenity and self-repression from a pronouncement of Example with little folk is worth far more than precept. A child who lives in an atmosphere of peace and gentleness will be gentle and peaceful. One brought up in turmoil and rush, will show the fruits of her environment.

So it is with truth. We require of our children the strictest truth-telling, and we punish any deviation from the fir-line of candor.quivocation, deceit, falsehood, a lie, we dominate them in a child, yet we deliberately utter the insincere compliment in the hearing of the intelligent small listener who knows, because she has heard us bear a different testimony in her presence, that we do mean it. We exaggerate, and the little one is a witness. A bright child said meditatively one day, after her mother had narrated, with additions, the commonplace incident of a previous week, so that it became rattling under the treatment, "When mamma tells out a thing, it's just an interesting story. When I tell it so, it's what they call a lie." We promise a child great, and we pass by the store and forget all about it. We make plans for a child's picnic, and the child is the qui vive; then we "change our mind," and down goes the child's castle in Spain, in the dust of disappointment. Our shifts and evasions, our fibs and pernsions distort the child's ideal of truth, and then we marvel that it is not a shining example of integrity. Children are commanded not to interrupt conversation. "Wait until the grown people stop," we tell them. "They never do stop," says little Genevieve, weary of waiting. We oblige them to be silent at meals, not realizing that their rights at the home table are the same as our own, that though they may not chatter endlessly and inconsequently, they have, or should have, certain privileges, among them, a share in the family conversation at the family meal. I count the snubbing of a child, the reproving a child before people, as a chief offense. When I see a sensitive little face flush, the lips quiver, the eyes fill with quick tears, my indignation waxes hot against the wantonness of outrage in the adults who take advantage of their greater size and strength to inflict a wound on the helplessness of childhood. It is Ruth McEnery Stuart who says, tenderly, speaking in Sonny of children's trials, "I think there ought to be a little heavenly book kept on purpose to put them down in, and it wouldn't be a bad thing if fathers and mothers could look over the record now and then."

"Except," said our Lord, "ye become as little children, ye cannot inherit the kingdom of heaven." What do you suppose he meant? No doubt he wanted us to be like the children, free from care, just willing to live

A Practical Step

SPEAKING of woman's work. American men have usually been willing to leave to their wives and daughters, one by no means easy task, the washing and ironing of the family linen. The Charity Organization Society of New York has undertaken to impart instruction to untutored women in laundry work, so that more of them may be skilled and able to undertake it to advantage. Great care is taken not only to train the pupils in this school to be expert washers and ironers, and to excel in correct manipulation, but also to impress upon them lessons of absolute fidelity and honesty. They must wash the clothes and make them clean, must not use injurious chemicals, not scorch and ruin garments by too hot an iron. Twelve lessons, each requiring one whole day, are included in the course, for which the fee is five dollars. A woman may pay this herself, or a benevolent friend may deposit five dollars, which will be used for a needy beneficiary. While learning their trade pupils are paid sixty cents a day and their luncheon is given them. After receiving a certificate, graduates of the school should have no difficulty in securing plenty of work at $1.25 per day. Mrs. E. V. H. Mansell is the principal, and the school is at 516 West Twenty-eight street, New York. Other cities and towns may here find an example worth following.

A Hall-Mark

Into a library, in a neighboring city, there walked, the other day, a rough-looking man, ill-dressed, with rough shoes, and a general air of poverty. The librarian asked him if she could be of service, and she spoke, expecting to be answered by one who was ignorant and illiterate. But the man turned, and, in tones that at once indicated the gentleman, replied to her inquiry by saying that he was looking for a book, which, being on an abstruse and scholarly subject, would not have attracted an unlettered reader. The instant he spoke the lady recognized the man as of the educated class. The voice is almost an unfailing index to the social belongings of the speaker. Dress of the finest may be purchased for money. But money alone cannot bestow the indefinable touch of elegance which comes from real good breeding, from familiarity with polite usages, and the practice of gracious manners. We used to hear many slurs on the American voice; it was compared unfavorably with the velvet voices of the English. Climate had something to do with it, no doubt; but latterly most of us are improving, and one does not hear nasal, or shrill, or disagreeable voices so often as formerly. Let those who speak too loudly remember that a sweet voice is a great charm.

The Best I Can

"It's not very good, but it's the best I can do," said wee Molly, as she put away her work. And her mother accepted it. So, will our Father be pleased if we offer him our best.

THE KINDLY EARTH

"ONE GENERATION PASSETH AWAY AND ANOTHER GENERATION COMETH, BUT THE EARTH ABIDETH FOREVER."

STILL, as the circling planets move
Our world is cradled in God's hand,
And nothing comes but by his love
To tossing sea, or furrowed land.
The men go forth in bands to toil,

The women gather leaf and flower:
And from the bosom of the soil,
Refreshed by sunbeam and by shower,
We reap as we have sowed, the spoil
And largesse, sent in Heaven's own hour.

by the hour, and to take from the heavenly Father whatever he chose to send. Children are not anxious about food and raiment, shoes and hats, shelter and school. Their father sees to what they need. Children have quick and warm affections. And as God is Love, and he that knoweth not love, knoweth not God, it is easy to perceive that to the child-heart is given the keys of the kingdom of heaven.

The Reply of the Grumbling Wife

A correspondent writes apropos of a recent communication on this page: "I, too, must plead guilty of grumbling, I fear. But we live on a farm. I have very few pleasures outside my house, and can never get away, unless my husband carries me. He is willing to do this if I ask him, but he very seldom asks me. If he would ask me sometimes, it would do me more good than tongue can tell." Husbands may here find a hint. Why are they so slow to take the initiative? In courting days they are not slow to show attention to the "best girl." When she becomes a wife, why not surround her with still sweeter courtesies?

OUR TENEMENT WAIFS

Children of the Poor Plead for Outings—Mont Lawn's Wide Influence

"CAN I GO TO MONT LAWN?"

LITTLE people down in Cherry and Hester streets and other tenement neighborhoods are beginning to evince lively interest in what is to them the most important problem of the heated term that will soon be upon us. Our missionaries as they pass along the street are besieged by small, ragged folk, who catch at their dresses and look up at them with wistful, longing eyes, asking, with a quiver of anxiety in their plaintive voices:

"Teacher, will the country open this summer?" Or,

"Please, teacher, may I go to Mont Lawn this summer?"

Last week, one lad stopped his missionary friend with this remark, mournfully uttered:

"Teacher, I had a birthday last week. I'm so sorry."

"Why, you ought to be happy. Why are you sorry?"

"O, teacher, I was twelve years old. I can't go to Mont Lawn any more!" and the brown eyes were full of tears.

"Teacher" gave him comfort. He was such a little fellow that she was sure an exception would be made for him. Rules are made for our children and not our children for rules. At twelve, our age limit is passed, for our Home exists for the benefit of the young and the weak, but many starved and stunted waifs of twelve are not nearly so large or strong as a normally raised child of ten, and these we do not turn away.

Mrs. St. James, a missionary, writes:

So many are anxious to go again; some from poor homes in 17th street, others from under the Bridge, come pleading. I pick the poorest. Some are afraid they can't get up enough clothes to go, and they plan to lend around among themselves; and when they've fixed themselves up their best, it's such a pitiful best! Children come to my door every week through the winter begging me not to forget to send them to the Home when summer comes.

Everybody will be glad to know that the little man in our picture (he came to the Bible House in person last week), has been made sure of his outing this summer. Little Ben is about five years' old. His father has been sick a long while; his mother goes out to work in the factory every morning; and Ben plays alone while she is away.

As to how the work at Mont Lawn affects the lives of others besides the children themselves, these extracts from letters by missionaries asking for outings for little folks, give some indication:

The whole moral tone of the E— family has been changed for the better. The family is a large one, and none of the children had ever gone to a Sunday School before their trip up to Nyack. Now they go regularly; and their parents come to the Mission.

In this family the word of God found a place because the children had learned to love it at Mont Lawn.

In one family, where they had never had a Bible, I told the children I was going to take a paper for them—full of lovely stories and pictures—or that I would give them a Bible with pictures in it. The mother said, "Please, ma'am, we'd all like the Bible. We've never had one." The children keep telling the good texts they heard at Mont Lawn."

Here is an instance where the blessed influence of this work for children was felt at a death-bed:

When Mrs. P— was dying last winter, she said: "O, children, sing me some of the songs you learned at Nyack!" Nobody can know how much the Fresh Air work helped that family. Mrs. P— was so poor, she had to work so hard, and she was always so anxious about the children—afraid they would be run over in the streets or fall out of the windows in the tall tenement where she lived. She had heart disease, and that made it harder for her. I know her life was prolonged and made easier by the children going up to Mont Lawn every summer. They learned lessons of tidiness and good behavior up there, too, and became helpful. These children need to go to the Home all the more this summer because their mother is dead. It is a large family, but I hope you can take them all.

All contributions for this work will be promptly acknowledged. Three dollars will give one child an outing of ten days, covering cost of transportation back and forth, medical examination, caretaker's attention, food, shelter, clothing, etc.; $6 will give this for two; $9 for three, and so on. Thirty-six dollars makes twelve waifs happy for ten days; $99 does this for thirty-three children. Could these sums accomplish as much good spent any other way? The following has been received:

HOW TO BE RID OF SIN

Pardon Through Christ to be Followed by Emancipation
From the Power of Sin :

HOW many souls, burdened by the consciousness of sin, have found light and life and peace through this declaration of the Apostle that, "the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." It seems to have been expressly designed to set at rest all doubt and all anxiety. There is no attempt at explanation, no philosophical argument—nothing but the authoritative statement that cleansing may be obtained by the blood of Christ. To the Jew, the statement was more simple than it is to us. Under the law the idea of ceremonial cleansing by blood was familiar. The sinner brought to conviction, realizing that the evil he had done had left an indelible stain upon him and had made him an outcast from God's presence, would have been in utter despair, if the way of restoration, through substitution, had not been provided. He could not forgive himself and he could not see how God could forgive him. The evil done could never be undone, and he must forever be estranged from God. By signs and symbols, the Jew was led to see in the system of sacrifices a way of restoration. Probably the unintelligent Jew believed that the animal offered did really die in his stead; but the more enlightened teachers declared that the blood could never take away sin and must be regarded as merely a type of that offering which was to come, which would forever redeem the sinner. Thus in the preaching of the Apostles, Christ appears as the sacrifice to which the whole Levitical system pointed, the one full and complete atonement which made all future sacrifices unnecessary.

Gradually, however, men began to realize that more was needed to redeem the sinner than the removal of the stain. It would have been a most unsatisfactory arrangement which would permit a man to deliberately commit a crime, with the expectation of being saved from its penalty by offering a sacrifice. The rich man, hating his neighbor, might consider the satisfaction he would get from killing him cheaply purchased by taking an ox to the temple to be slaughtered. That would be a compounding for evil that would have been degrading to the conception of God's justice. It could never lead to the supreme object that was sought of weaning men from their sins. David saw that, and in his fifty-first Psalm clearly shows that he realized the impotency of sacrifice alone to cleanse the soul. There must be sorrow and repentance and a hatred of sin before the sacrifice offered could atone. Thus the virtue of the sacrifice consisted in its being an expression of repentance, an acknowledgment of guilt, and a confession that punishment would be just. Sacrifice became no longer a bargain, by which a man could purchase immunity for his sins by making the prescribed offering; it was a recognition of divine holiness, and an avowal of the sinner's pollution. It was then a release, only so far as it was accompanied by a deep regret for sin and a realization of the fact that sin separated the sinner from God. The polluted soul must be cleansed in some way before it could be restored to God's favor. Thus there must be an intense desire for such restoration and a resolute endeavor to become worthy of it.

Christ's favorite mode of presenting God to the conceptions of men was as a Father, and this relation shows the principle which God adopts with men. When a father is horrified by his little son doing some bad thing, such as lying or stealing, his affection for the child would prompt him to freely forgive the little fellow, but he realizes that such treatment would be no true kindness to him. It might lead to his ruin. The child would grow up to become a criminal. He must be taught in some impressive way how bad is the thing that he has done. So it is in God's government of the world. Men must realize that sin is a horrible thing in itself. Not only should it be avoided because of God hating it, but because of its being bad and ruinous for the man himself. So in the old dispensation there was the picture teaching of sacrifice, and in the new dispensation the crowning offering on Calvary. How terrible must be the pollution and the degradation, if the death of God's own Son was needed to restore the race. That fact once thoroughly brought home to the human mind, the beginning of restoration has been made. The future must be free from the pollution which has involved so awful a calamity. Then the sinner learns that the sacrifice means more than pardon for the past, more than cleansing. It means power to renounce sin. It means that God has undertaken the work of delivering the sinner from his sin, and that the pardoned soul will be supplied with the grace he needs from day to day to resist the evil that would again enslave him.

FOUND CHRIST IN CHILDHOOD

The Christian Experience of Governor J. Hoge Tyler, of Virginia, and the Rev. Dr. Charles Frederick Goss

BY REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D.

It is a beautiful thing to see strong, and vigorous, manly men, who from childhood have grown up loving Christ, and counting Christian character a matter of first importance. I have brought this Governor and preacher-novelist together, because their experiences are much alike. In Virginia, the "Mother of Presidents," has given birth to many strong, Chris-time when the religion which had been inculcated in the home, and the faith in Jesus which he had inherited, and grown into, was disclosed to him, and he made a public profession of Christ. E. P. Hammond was the cause of this disclosure to him. Mr. Hammond was holding a revival in the city of Auburn, N. Y., when Master Charles Goss was twelve years old. Dr. Goss now says that he was

REV. CHARLES F. GOSS

public men, besides those who have sat in the Presidential chair. The Governor of that historic old Commonwealth recently wrote me this beautiful letter: "I feel ever glad to do or to say anything that might be considered helpful to young men, to make their decision in favor of Christianity, and an endeavor to lead a Christian life. While one naturally shrinks from so public an expression of personal experience, I can say that I would not exchange the faith I have in Christ, and the belief in the immortality of the soul through his atonement, for all the earth contains. My religious impressions were formed in childhood, under the training of pious grandparents, to whose care I was assigned by the early death of my mother. The tender care of these saintly ones, and the constant recitals of the Christian graces of my dear mother, early inspired me with a desire so to live that I might meet her in heaven. My belief is that early impressions are the best. Boys and young people should keep before them the memories of Christian childhood training." Truly it is a good thing for the affairs of the State in a great Commonwealth to be in the hands of men whose faith in Christ and whose hope in immortality is the greatest pillar of their lives, and who are filled with such tender and holy thanksgiving for the childhood teaching that led their young heart to love and trust God. Mr. Charles Frederick Goss has come, during the last year, into very great prominence before the people. His strong and vital book, "The Redemption of Did Corson," has introduced him to an audience of tens of thousands of men and women, a majority of whom may never see his face in the flesh. It is interesting to note that this strong and ardent preacher of the Gospel by voice and pen, also came to know the Lord in childhood. Dr. Goss writes: "So far as so obscure a matter is capable of analysis, I should say that I simply grew into it." Thank God for the children who are planted by their parents through inheritance, in the Lord's garden, and grow naturally into the love of Christ. And yet for young Goss, there was a so young that the whole experience seems very vague, and that its effect was not so much to produce anything as it was a disclosure. But such an hour of disclosure is a great thing for the human soul, and it is a blessed thing that it came early in life. I think there are many children who have been brought up in Christian homes, and in Sunday Schools, who need to experience what happened to Charles Goss when he publicly confessed Christ as his Saviour. They need to have it disclosed to their own hearts that they are the Lord's, and that it is their privilege, as well as their duty, to march under the banner of Christ and to show his colors to all the world.

CHRIST, THE GREAT HIGH PRIEST

Divinely Qualified by Human Experience for His Office
BY MRS. M. BAXTER

THE Hebrews understood the meaning of high priest. The day of atonement was to many of them, and is still to many a pious Jew, a time of settling matters with the living God. But the Epistle to the Hebrews tells of the anti-type, our great High Priest, who was only foreshadowed by Aaron and his successors. God be praised that he atones not for Jews only, "but also for the sins of the whole world." Who and what is he? "It behoved him in all things to be made like unto his brethren" (Heb. 2: 17). He is therefore "not ashamed to call us brethren" (v. 11), for he was sharer in our flesh and blood that he might die for, and deliver us (vv. 14, 15). And he was made thus "like unto his brethren" that he might be a merciful and faithful High Priest in things pertaining to God, to make propitiation for the sins of the people. "Merciful and faithful," our fellow-man, "sitting on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens" (Heb. 8: 1) to represent us! Man still; man wounded, "as it had been slain" (Rev., v. 6), in the place of supreme power, representing us! Let us adore him. Our cause is in his hands; he is our guarantee of eternal salvation. Wherefore "consider him" (Heb. 3: 1). Consider him, the apostle, or sent one, as he nearly forty times asserts in the Gospel of John. Consider him, "the High Priest of our profession," even Jesus, who was faithful to him that appointed him (v. 2). Like the high priests of old, he "is appointed for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sin" (v. 1). God appointed him to be for us in things which pertain to him. He is faithful to him that appointed him; will he be less faithful to us?

Our great High Priest is divinely appointed that he may offer both gifts and sacrifice for sins. The latter he did "when he offered up himself." But the gifts which please God—what are they? Paul understood when he wrote, "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service." We "present our bodies;" but he who calls us brethren offers them. He is ordained of God to present us to God as gifts which are acceptable to him! Oh how wonderful to know that we are not left to the confusion of face without which we could not offer to such Majesty such as we know ourselves to be. He offers us. Can we but be accepted? Not only is our High Priest God's appointed one for man, and who therefore ensures the cause of each one who confides that cause to him. He is also a Son over God's house, whose house are we (Heb. 3: 6). Moses was a faithful servant over God's house; our Apostle and great High Priest is a Son over that house of living stones whose builder and maker is God.

"Having then a great High Priest who hath passed through the heavens," having first passed through all things on earth (Eph. 4: 9), let us "hold fast" and let us "draw near." First, "let us hold fast our confession" (Heb. 4: 14), the confession of Christ, before an unbelieving world; there is the danger that we may "drift away" (Heb. 2: 1, R. V.), and we have not a High Priest that cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but one that hath been in all things tempted like as we are, and hath suffered being tempted (Heb. 2: 18), yet without sin. He has known temptation, and has proved, in all the weakness of a human body, dependent entirely on a power from outside itself, that God can be fully glorified. "Let us, therefore, do what the Jew of old dare not and could not do—"let us draw near with boldness unto the throne of grace;" our representative is there to present our prayers, "that we may receive mercy, and find grace to help in time of need" (Heb. 4: 15, 16). Is it not inspiring to know into whose hands we are committing our cause? We need not be occupied with the poverty and unworthiness of ourselves or of our prayers if they are according to his word. He offers them; that is enough. The High Priest has entered and taken them with him, within the veil (Heb. 6: 19, 20).

We, in him, are on the right hand of the throne of God. We, in him, are part of his being up there. He in us is our life, our wisdom, our all down here. O, it is wonderful!

TRANSFORMATIONS.

Curious Results When Coffee Drinking is Abandoned.

It is almost as hard for an old coffee toper to quit the use of coffee as it is for a whiskey or tobacco fiend to break off, except that the coffee user can quit coffee and take up Postum Food Coffee without any feeling of a loss of the morning beverage, for when Postum is well boiled and served with cream, it is really better in point of flavor than most of the coffee served nowadays, and to the taste of the connoisseur it is like the flavor of fine Java.

A great transformation takes place in the body within ten days or two weeks after coffee is left off and Postum Food Coffee used, for the reason that the poison to the nerves has been discontinued, and in its place is taken a liquid that contains the most powerful elements of nourishment.

It is easy to make this test and prove these statements by changing from coffee to Postum Food Coffee.

As he saw Margaret and Marjorie together daily he could not help realizing what it would mean to the girl to have such companionship always; while to himself it would be a rich blessing, indeed. But never by word or glance did he give sign of the thoughts that would constantly assert themselves, and September came and went, and Margaret was as care-free as Marjorie herself.

The middle of September they went to the Berkshires, and remained there until it was time for Marjorie's school to open in October, and then went back to the home which now seemed dearer than ever. Nothing was changed, and the daily life went on the same as it had done before the terrible days when it seemed doubtful whether the doctor would ever return to it.

The 30th of October was Marjorie's birthday, and, singularly enough, the 31st was Dr. Prior's, and soon after their return Margaret asked if she might have a double celebration.

"We will try to keep it from Marjorie, and add to her pleasure by giving her a surprise as well," she said.

"And may I invite to my half of the party the guests I most desire to have?" asked Dr. Prior, laughing.

"Yes, if you will promise to behave well at your 'half of the party,'" replied Margaret, laughing as well. "I had intended to ask you to make out a list of those you wish to have invited, and I think I can fill Marjorie's successfully, for I am pretty well acquainted with her friends now."

"Very well, I will leave everything to you; do exactly as you please, and for once, let us forget prudence, and be children again. Stop a moment, and I'll give you the names of those who are to head my list, and will add more later," and he sat down to his desk. Handing the paper to Margaret, he said:

"Remember to include these, no matter who else is excluded."

She looked at the list, and found the names of her own family.

"Why, Dr. Prior, do you intend to import the entire family?" she said gaily.

"Every one. You imported mine, and now it is my turn."

"But there is a slight difference in the size of my family; yours could be very easily tucked away, but mine will fill an ordinary-sized dwelling. Just think, there are five of them; you will hardly have room left for other guests."

"Then we won't have other guests. But if I can't have those I want I won't come to your party, so there now," and the doctor wagged his head emphatically.

"Mercy me! You shall have them, every one, if I can hale them forth," and she ran out of the room.

And so she had worked and planned, until the twenty-ninth saw all in readiness, and still Marjorie, busy with her school duties, suspected nothing. No need describe the festivity; it was like many others, and enjoyed to the full. Mrs. Drake and her family came on the twenty-ninth, and then the feline escaped from the bag; for when Marjorie returned from school that afternoon they were very much in evidence, and her astonishment was truly comical.

"What in the world are you all doing here?" was her rather inhospitable remark.

"Nothing, just at present; but we hope for something livelier later," replied Rodman, and Maud chimed in with, "we have come to see how you will look when you are fifteen, and help you celebrate the event."

Margaret had planned a New England Author's Party, and each guest had been requested to represent some work of a New England writer, and many and clever were the subjects chosen.

Margaret had chosen the titles which Marjorie and Maud would represent, and had planned their toilets so that by them alone the books would be at once made evident to any one bright enough to guess them. The dresses had been ordered from Boston, and when they were produced the two girls nearly went wild with delight, and declared that no one could possibly guess the secret. Brownie Maud's was a white organdie, sprigged with the daintiest of pink roses, and made over a delicate shade of pink silk. A cluster of the natural blossoms on one shoulder, a single beauty in her hair, and a bunch in her hands, tied with a long satin ribbon to match their delicate hue, brought out her soft, olive coloring to perfection.

Marjorie's dress was also a white organdie, but was sprigged with clusters of lilacs so natural that it seemed as though one could pick them off. It was made over lilac silk in the same simple style as Maud's, with lilacs on the shoulder, and a cluster for her hands, tied with a lilac ribbon. But Marjorie's hair was drawn high up upon her graceful head, and a cluster of lilacs fastened at one side with a pretty lilac bow. Truly, two of Miss Alcott's sweetest books were well represented, for Maud was, indeed, A Rose in Bloom, while dainty Marjorie looked very charming Under the Lilacs.

Prizes were to be given to those who succeeded in guessing the greatest number of titles correctly, and among the many clever and quick-witted friends invited, the contest was a keen one.

The night was one of the beautiful ones which so often come to us in the late fall, and make it possible to have open windows.

The piazza and lawn were hung with Japanese lanterns; palms and flowering plants were everywhere, and the great hall was banked with them to form a sheltered nook for the musicians. Margaret had thought of everything, and no detail was wanting.

"Who is that lovely girl with Dr. Prior's daughter?" asked a lady of Margaret, with whom she happened to be speaking at the moment. "She looks as though she had stepped from a picture, and the two girls together are perfectly charming, for the one with the beautiful dark eyes and hair is such perfect contrast to Marjorie's sunny beauty."

"She is my youngest sister, Maud," replied Margaret, blushing with pleasure, for praise of her pet was very sweet to her. "I am glad she pleases you. She is the baby of our family; may I present her to you?"

"Do, I beg of you. It is a pleasure to look at anything so lovely." Margaret motioned to the girls, who came over to her with their arms intertwined, girl fashion. Margaret presented her to Mrs. Harding, and Maud bowed and placed her hand in the one so cordially extended to her; while Marjorie laid her arm caressingly across Margaret's shoulder and leaned toward her to whisper:

"Oh, I'm having such a perfectly glorious time. I haven't missed a single guess and I never had such a good time in all my life; and I've got you, you, you to thank for it all," and she gave a final rapturous squeeze to emphasize her words.

Margaret pinched the soft pink cheek as she answered:

"Don't guess yourself to fiddle-strings, and get completely done up, or you will have me to thank for that too."

"I won't. I must go now, for they are to guess again. Good-bye," and they went prancing off down the big music-room, which, together with the parlors, had been pressed into service for the evening.

Twelve o'clock came all too soon, and at its stroke the musicians played "Sweet Home," and old and young came to take leave of their host and hostesses.

"Well, my little girl, have you enjoyed your evening, and do you think our birthday frolic has been a success?" asked Dr. Prior when the guests had departed and Marjorie came to bid him good-night.

"I never had such a good time in all my life, and I don't know how to thank you half hard enough."

"You must not thank me; it was my frolic too; for I am forty-three years old this very minute; look yonder at the clock. There is the one you must thank for this pleasure, as well as many others which have come to you since last January. I am afraid I'm a dull old codger for such plans," and he pointed to Margaret, who stood talking with her mother.

"Did she do it all?"

"Every bit. All I had to do was to follow out her suggestions, and it has been a delightful evening for us both."

"So it has. I wish I had some way of thanking her, and showing how truly grateful I am."

"You have."

"Oh, how? Tell me quickly, please, and I'll do it right off."

"I'll tell you in the morning. Good-night, my darling, and may you have many more as happy birthdays."

CHAPTER XVII

Dr. Prior's Birthday Gift

"I WILL join you presently, mamma, but I must speak a few words with Johnson, and see to the closing of the house first," said Margaret, as her mother was about to go upstairs.

"Very well, dear, I will go up with the girls, or they will spend the remainder of the night talking," and Mrs. Drake started upstairs, whence the sounds of laughter and a perfect Babel of voices gave proof that sleep had not been regarded as one of that night's blessings.

"Let me help you to set the establishment ship-shape," said the doctor, coming into the hall. "It seems to me you have done enough for one small individual, and it is high time your duties ended."

"I have not had time to think whether I am tired or not; for, although the duties have been incessant, they have been such delightful ones that they have given me no time to think of being fatigued," said Margaret, as she moved about, closing windows, laying aside articles to be carried upstairs and bringing order out of confusion.

"It has been as nearly perfect as much thought, a beautiful night, and happy people could make it," answered Dr. Prior, "I have never seen more perfect moonlight, I think; step out on the piazza one moment; the night is ideal," and taking up a fleecy shawl, which lay upon a chair, he laid it across her shoulders, and then held open the door for her.

It was a wonderful night. Mild beyond even the usual Indian summer mildness, and flooded with the softest silvery light from the full moon. The house stood upon an eminence which commanded a view of the valley and Wampum River, which shimmered like a velvet ribbon in the distance. A faint mist hung over the valley which lay so peacefully before them, and the odor of fallen leaves filled the air. Not a sound came from the night, and the silence beyond was most profound. But upstairs the murmur of voices, and an occasional peal of merry laughter told them that light hearts were beating, and that the pleasures of the evening were being lived over again.

Margaret stepped to the railing, and leaning her head against one of the columns, looked off into the sleeping valley.

Dr. Prior stood just behind her in the shadow, keenly watching the beautiful, expressive face before him.

"Such a night as this makes one wonder how any sorrow can come into a world so beautiful; and yet we, ourselves, have but recently passed through a very great one. Dear Marjorie, I hope she may never again have to pass through such a trial as our revels to night celebrated the happy termination of. Thank heaven, she has been spared the great sorrow of learning what it means to long day after day for a dear one," and Margaret's eyes filled.

"And, Miss Drake, do you know whom she has largely to thank that I am still with her, and again in perfect health? To thank for that and a thousand things beside?" and he stepped forward and extended his hand to her. She placed her own in it, and then glanced up in surprise at his earnestness.

"Yes, Margaret, you have opened a new world for Marjorie; and for me also.

AUTHOR'S SECRET

Food That Brought Back Buoyant Health

Newspaper writers have a time of it to get the right kind of food to nourish them. Of this profession who writes for a Boston paper says: "From the first Grape-Nuts I worked like a charm. My stomach had been failing to digest ordinary food, and my nerves were completely unstrung. I was about to give up work while preparing a series of articles for the press, but by a stroke of good fortune they began to feed me on Grape-Nuts. My strength gradually returned, nerves became steadier day by day, and I soon found I could do more office work with greater ease than ever before."

"There came to me that feeling of buoyant health and satisfaction with my work and satisfaction with myself. In short, I felt that life was worth living, and that I was 'girding up like a strong man for a race.'"

"In my opinion, Grape-Nuts is the perfect article of food invaluable alike to those that are sick and those that are well. W. S. Gidley, author of 'Happy-Go-Lucky Papers,' 'The Landlord's Story,' etc."

It is a fact that Grape-Nuts does support the brain and nerve centers with the elements necessary to rebuild, nourish and maintain. That brings health, strength, happiness, and the feeling of buoyancy Mr. Gidley speaks of.

When you came here you found a nervous, impatient girl fretting against the unnatural life she was leading, and a mother who, for nearly nine years, had lived in a "memories of happier things." I forgot the duties of the present; forgot that I owed a great deal to Madeline's child, and that all her happiness rested with me. Now that I look back upon the years, they seem to me like a hazy dream, from which I have recently been aroused to begin the real and wretched existence. It seemed a perfect station, and my very love for Marjorie's mother had become Marjorie's greatest misfortune. I see it all now, and although the old love will never wholly die but must remain a very sweet and tender memory with me forever, a new one has come to dwell with it, and I hope the object of it can find her heart large enough to accept both. Can she, dear? It is a strange thing to ask of you. I know; but I should be false to you at the very outset were I to say, "Be a mother to my child"; her own is entirely forgotten."

Margaret had turned to look at Dr. Prior when he began to speak, hardly knowing what to expect; but as he proceeded she could no longer misunderstand him, and, looking straight into the kind eyes regarding her so intently, she replied firmly:

"Dr. Prior, it would be folly for me to pretend that I do not understand you; and I honor you with all my heart for your truthfulness. I know, full well, that Marjorie's mother can never be forgotten, nor would I wish her to be; I should feel like the traitor to harbor such a thought for an instant, for Marjorie must never, never forget her, nor must you; and my most sacred duty would be to keep her memory a sweet and holy one. But whether I can give to you the love she gave I do not know. The past months have been very, very happy ones to me; and I have so grown to regard this house as me that it would grieve me sorely to leave it; but I feel that I have so little to give in return for the rich gift you offer me and Marjorie offers as well; for I know that I have won her love; and it seems I am accepting far more than I can return," and an appealing look came into her eyes.

Dr. Prior laid his hand tenderly upon her head and answered:

"Dear one, do you ever fully estimate yourself? Can't you see that I am asking a great deal of one so young as you are? I am nearly twenty years your senior, dear, and yet I dare ask you to join your life to mine, and in addition to that, assume the care of a grown daughter. These are not light responsibilities, and did not love you with all my soul, I should hesitate to ask you to assume them. But I have learned to know you so well, and am sanguine enough to hope that I can make you happy. Will you let me try, Margaret? You can bring the greatest happiness to us, and I cannot but feel that I shall win your love if, as you say, I have already won your respect."

"You have that, Dr. Prior, in an unstinted degree, and I should be untrue to myself if I say that affection is entirely wanting; for no one has ever held just the place you hold. And yet, I cannot feel that it is the same affection which made life so beautiful for my father and mother."

"His was the ripper love, which time and daily intercourse bring to those truly mad. We cannot hope to find ripened fruit in early spring-tide, dear. But give me the right to strive to bring into our lives the same richness which is such a beautiful memory to you of your parents. Will you do this, Margaret? and give to me this, the dawn of my forty-third year, a birthday gift and blessing beyond all price, by bringing into our home the greatest happiness Marjorie and I can know? to me a wife; to her a mother," and he held her hands tightly within his own strong ones as he waited for her reply.

Margaret stood silent a few moments, and then raising her beautiful eyes to his she said: "Please God, I will."

(To be concluded.)

BENEATH the clouds of darkness
That veil the spirit's view,
Beneath the stars that sparkle
In midnight's darker blue,
Beneath the crystal shining
Of Summer's noontide glow,
Among the blossomed meadows,
Where glittering streamlets flow,
We walk along life's pathway;
Its gladness and its gloom
Both play upon our spirits—
We journey to the tomb.

We journey through the gladness
To silence in the grave;
We journey through life's sorrows
To where the weary lave
Their tired feet in life's fountains
Of everlasting rest;
We toil, we sleep, we rise again,
We know not which is best.
We love the dear ones with us,
And those in heaven above,
And O! these vales of wild-flowers,
That bloom in Spring, we love.

While here below, we wander
The hills and vales of care,
With rocks and thorny places
Upstarting here and there;
But, heavenward, day is breaking!
Across the burning skies.
See! see!—the flush of morning
In holy, glad surprise!
While here below we journey,
Led by our Father's hand,
We follow, as his children,
To heaven's glory-land

While here below, we sing it—
The anthem of the skies—
The melody of praises
That ceaseless must arise
Beneath his stars of glory,
His spanning arch of love,
His noonday skies of rapture
That tent the clouds above.
Heaven kisses earth with yearnings,
And so earth learns to know
The path of life immortal
While we are here below.

Missionary Summer "Rest Home"

FOR the last five years, the picturesque little island known as Bell Island, on the Sound, near New York, has been known as a summer resting-place for missionaries and Christian workers. Elmhurst Home, the building dedicated to this work by the Rev. William James, will shortly be re-opened, and within its hospitable halls, even the poorest missionary or slum worker will be welcome. Mr. James desires to state through this journal, that he would be pleased to increase the number of guests this summer, if friends who are interested in a work of this character will aid him in bearing the burden of the additional expense. Any letters or contributions should be addressed to him at Bell Island, Rowayton, Conn.

STAKING OUT TOWN LOTS

HOUSEKEEPING UNDER DIFFICULTIES

STARTING LIFE ON THE CLAIM

THE LAST OF THE "FREE LAND" RUSHES

Thousands Preparing for the Opening of the Kiowa and Comanche Reservation --- Woman as a Frontier Civilizer

WITH the opening of the Kiowa and Comanche Reservation in Southern Oklahoma, which takes place in August, the West will see the last of border life. Thousands of people, who have been accustomed to camping along the border of new country and entering it when thrown open to settlement, will find their occupation gone. The outlaws, who have been in the habit of shooting out of lights in stores and new "boom" towns, will learn that hereafter their amusement will be dashed by the hand of law. Sod houses and treeless plains in the Southwest will soon have passed from sight forever. The homeseeker will have no more lands to enter.

Thus one sees the picturesque life of the frontier passing from modern existence. Vacant lands are no more. On every quarter section there is a farmer, and the wire fence has destroyed the vastness of the once great cat-tranches. A wonderful change has come about in the West. It has been tried and absolute-conquered.

How has this reformation come about? I have lived along the border, and camped with the impatient multitude waiting for the opening of a new country that they might race for claims. I have spent months in the new frontier towns. To the officers of these communities belongs much credit for keeping peace; but for the real refinement of a community, I give credit to the woman who braves the evils of a frontier life, and comes there to settle down with her family.

When a new country is about to be opened to settlement, of course there are people from every part of the United States who come to the borders and wait impatiently for the official proclamation which declares it opened. Then, with a mighty race, they rush for farms, and those who reach there first secure the choicest of the lands. Fifty thousand people will be camped along the Kiowa and Comanche borders before it is declared open, among them thousands of women. Some are unmarried, and come from the larger cities, with the hope of winning a farm and running it to their own profit. The experiment of women running, winning and managing their own farms has been tried in the Cherokee Outlet with success, and this has acted as a stimulus for others. The women must cook in the open air, sleep in wagon-beds and have no society; they must endure all the harsh words of drunken cowboys who make a border their rendezvous, and they must work from morning until night, while waiting for the opening. Then, if they woman, and glared at the other man. He, too, repeated the action of his rival, and both turned and left the woman in undisputed possession. Thus, through the gallantry of her rivals, a small fortune passed into the woman's hands undisputed.

First, a tent walled up with rough boards is used for a house, and six months later this is perhaps supplanted by a sod-house. After the first crop, a wooden two-room "shack" is erected, if the crops have been sufficiently large to justify it. The woman who comes in with her husband, assists to work in the field, and does the regular house work as well. On Sunday, she goes to church, first having called among the neighbors and raised enough money to send for the minister. In a few months, she has taken up enough funds to start to work building a church.

In the average frontier town a woman must endure the cowboy soirees until she has wielded enough influence to run the "knight of the saddle" out of the district. This class of men are wild, but very bashful. A woman can go among them on a Sunday morning and with kind words induce two-thirds to accompany her to church. When collections are taken, the cowboy gives liberally. In this way he hurts his own cause, for this money is used in attempting to tame him and in closing the numerous saloons and gambling dens. Out of a score of this class in the "boom" town of B—, three reformed and went into business, while the remainder "hit the trail" for New Mexico, when they found the women were getting a hold on the community. It is told of a once noted desperado, that when he rode into Dodge City in the early days, and found that a woman had been employed to cook in a local restaurant, he left the place, vowing never to return. And he kept his word.

All of Oklahoma gives credit likewise to the women who entered the Territory when it was new, and with might and main endeavored to rid the country of its wildness. Women are not allowed to vote in Oklahoma, but a measure is now before the Legislature which gives them that privilege, and it mentions their bravery, and offers them the suffrage as a just compensation.

are good horseback riders, they take an equal chance with the men in the race.

I saw a rather novel incident while riding into Oklahoma, seven years ago. Two men and one woman reached a claim at the same moment. All three plunged their stakes into the land simultaneously. After a few seconds, one man jerked his stake out, bowed to the

The Scales Invisible

TEXT, Proverbs 16: 2:

THE LORD WEIGHETH THE SPIRITS

THE subject of weights and measures is discussed among all nations, is the subject of legislation, and has much to do with the world's prosperity. A system of weights and measures was invented by Pheidon, ruler of Argos, about eight hundred years before Christ. An ounce, a pound, a ton were different in different lands. Henry III. decided that an ounce should be the weight of 640 dried grains of wheat from the middle of the ear. From the reign of William the Conqueror to Henry VIII. the English pound was the weight of 7,680 grains of wheat. Queen Elizabeth decreed that a pound should be 7,000 grains of wheat taken from the middle of the ear. The piece of platinum kept at the office of the Exchequer in England, in an atmosphere of sixty-two Fahrenheit, decides for all Great Britain what a pound must be. Scientific representatives from all lands met in 1869 in Paris and established international standards of weights and measures.

You all know something of avoirdupois weight, of apothecaries weight, of troy weight. You are familiar with the different kinds of weighing machines, whether a Roman balance, which is our steel-yard, or the more usual instrument consisting of a beam supported in the middle, having two basins of equal weight suspended to the extremities. Scales have been invented to weigh substances huge like mountains, and others delicate enough to weigh infinitesimals. But in all the universe there has only been one balance that could weigh thoughts, emotions, affections, hatreds, ambitions. That balance was fashioned by an Almighty God, and is hung up for perpetual service. "The Lord weigheth the spirits."

This divine weigher puts into the balance the spirit of charity, and decides how much of it really exists. It may go for nothing at all. It may be that it says to the unfortunate: "Take this, and do not bother me any more." It may be an occasional impulse. It may depend upon the condition of the liver or the style of breakfast partaken of a little while before. It may be called forth by the loveliness of the solicitor. It may be exercised in spirit of rivalry, which practically says: "My neighbor has given so much; therefore, I must give as much." It is accidental, or occasional, or spasmodic. When such a spirit of charity is put into the balance and weighed, God and men and angels look on and say there is nothing of it. It does not weigh so much as a dram, which is only the one-eighth part of an ounce, or a scruple, which is only the twenty-fourth part of an ounce. A man may give his hundreds and thousands of dollars with such feelings and amid such circumstances, and he will get no heavenly recognition.

The Divine Balances

But into the divine scales another man's charity is placed. It starts from love of God and man. It is born in heaven. It is a lifelong characteristic. It may have a million dollars or one penny to bestow, but the manner in which that giver bestows it shows that it is a divinely implanted principle. The one penny given may, considering the limited circumstances, attract as much angelic and heavenly attention as though the check given in charity was so large it staggered the cashier of the bank to cash it. It is not the amount given, but the spirit with which it is given. "The Lord weigheth the spirits."

Perhaps no one but God heard that good man's resolutions, but it amounted about to this: "From this present moment to my last moment on earth, God helping me, I will do all I can to make this world a purer world, a better world, a happier world." But the resolution shines out in his face, sweetens his conversation, enlarges his nature, controls his life, and shows itself as plainly in the contribution of one dollar as though he had the means to contribute five hundred thousand dollars. When that charity is put into the royal balance the heavens watch the weighing and invisible choirs chant from the clouds, and I catch one bar of the music: "Now abideth faith, hope, charity—these three; but the greatest of these is charity."

So also in the celestial scales is placed the spirit of faith. In most cases faith depends on whether or not the sun shines, and the man had sound sleep last night, and whether the first person he meets in the morning tells him something agreeable or disagreeable. Some day the sales in his store do not amount to so much as he expected, and he goes home with enough complaints to fill the house as soon as he enters it. Another day the sales are twenty or forty per cent. larger than usual, and as he is putting the key into the door-lock his family hear him whistling a tune most jubilant. He has faith that everything in his own affairs and in the affairs of church and state are tending toward better conditions, until something depressing happens in his own personal experiences or under his own observation.

There are Christian people who had faith that China would be redeemed, and for thirty years have been contributing toward that object, but they changed their minds, and now despair of the "Flowery Kingdom," since the "Boxers" began their massacres. There are those who were busy in New York missions, and expected the salvation of our American cities until recent developments showed that the police were in complicity with crime, and now these Christian workers are despairful, as though all were lost. Of what worth is such a man's faith? When weighed, will they have what the chemists call atomic weight—the weight of an atom? No; such faith is no faith at all.

Triumphant Faith

But there is another man who by repentance and prayer has put himself into alliance with the Almighty God. Made all right by the Saviour's grace, this man goes to work to make the world right. He says to himself: "God launched this world, and he never launched a failure. The Garden of Eden was a useless morass compared with what the whole world will be when it blossoms and leaves and flashes and resounds with its coming glory. God will save it anyhow, with me or without me, but I want to do my share. I have some equipment—not as much as some others, but what I have I will use. I have power to frown, and I will frown upon iniquity. I have power to smile, and I will smile encouragement upon all the struggling. I have a vocabulary not so opulent as the vocabulary of some others, but I have a storehouse of good words, and I mean to scatter them in helpfulness. I will ascribe right motives to others when it is possible. If I can say anything good about others I will say it. If I can say nothing but evil of them I will keep my lips shut as tight as the lips of the sphinx which for three thousand years has looked off upon the sands of the desert and uttered not one word about the desolation. The scheme of reconstructing this world is too great for me to manage, but I am not expected to boss this job. I have faith to believe that the plan is well laid out and will be well executed. Give me a brick and a trowel, and I will begin now to help build the wall. I am not a soloist, but I can sing Rock of Ages to a sick pauper. I cannot write a great book, but I can pick a cinder out of a child's eye or a splinter from under his thumb-nail. I now enlist in this army that is going to take the world for God, and I defy all the evil powers, human and satanic, to discourage me. Count me into the service. I cannot play upon a musical instrument, but I can polish a cornet, or string a harp, or applaud the orchestra."

All through that man's experience there runs a faith that will keep him cheerful, and busy, and triumphant. I like the watch-word of Cromwell's "Ironsides," the men who feared nothing and dared everything, going into battle with the shout, "the Lord of hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge. Selah!" The earthly weighman counterpoises on metallic balances the iron, the coal, the articles of human food, the solids of earthly merchandise, but he cannot test or announce the amount of things spiritual. Here is something which the Attic and Babylonian weighing systems of the past and the metric weighing system of the present cannot manage. "The Lord weigheth the spirits."

A Healthy Ambition

Put also into those royal scales the ambitious spirit. Every healthy man and woman has ambition. The lack of it is a sure sign of idiocy or immorality. The only question is, what shall be the style of our ambition? To stack up a stupendous fortune, to acquire a resounding name, to sweep everything we can reach into the whirlpool of our own selfishness—that is debasing, ruinous, and deathful. If in such a spirit we get what we start for we only secure gigantic discontent. No man was ever made happy by what he got. It all depends upon the spirit with which we get it, and the spirit with which we keep it, and the spirit with which we distribute it. Not since the world stood has there been any instance of complete happiness from the amount of accumulation. Give the man of worldly ambition sixty years of brilliant successes. He sought for renown, and the nations speak his name. He sought for affluence, and he is put to his wit's end to find out the best stocks and bonds in which he may make his investments. He is director in enough banks, and trustee in enough institutions, and president of enough companies to bring on paresis, of which he is now dying. The royal balances are lifted to weigh the ambition which has controlled him a lifetime. What is the worth of that ambition? How much did it yield of usefulness and heaven? Less than a scruple, less than a grain of sand, less than an atom, less than nothing. Have a funeral a mile long with carriages, let the richest robes of ecclesiastics rustle about the casket, capture the scene by choirs which chant "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." That man's life is a failure, and if his heirs scuffle in the surrogate's court about the incapacity of the testator to make a last will and testament, it will only be a prolongation of the failure. The son, through dissipation, spent his share of the fortune before the father died, and so was cut off with a decedent. The daughter married against his will, and she is disinherited. Relatives whom he could never bear the sight of will put in their claim, and after years of litigation, so much of the estate as the lawyers have not appropriated to themselves, will go into hands which the testator never once thought of when in his last days he bade tearful farewells to the houses and lands and government securities he could not take along with him to the sepulchre."

Planning a Career

But look into the dream of that schoolboy who, without saying anything about it, is planning his life for a career. From an old book, partly written in Hebrew and partly written in Greek, but both Hebrew and Greek translated into good English, he reads of a great farmer like Amos, a great mechanic like Aholia, a great lawyer like Moses, a great soldier like Joshua, a great king like Hezekiah, a great poet like David, a great gleaner like Ruth, a great physician like Lucretia, a great preacher like Paul, a great Christ like no other on earth or in heaven, because the superior of all beings—earthly or celestial. He has learned by heart the ten commandments and the sermon on the mount, and as splendid theories about everything. Between that fair-haired boy and the achievement of what he wants and expects, there are obstacles and hindrances known only to the God who is going to discipline him for his sins magnificent. I have no power to prophesy the different experiences of his encouragement and disappointment, of his struggle or his triumph, but as sure as God lives to make his word come true, that boy, who will sleep to-night nine hours without waking, will be final victor. I do not know the intermediate chapters of the volume of that young man's life, but I know the first chapter and the last chapter. The first chapter is made of high resolve in the strength of God, and the last chapter is filled with the rewards of a noble ambition. His obsequies pass out to the cemetery, the poor will weep because they will lose their best friend. Many in wise temporal welfare and eternal salvation he bore a part, will hear of it in various places, and eulogize his memory, and God will say to the ascending spirit: "Thou that overcometh wilt I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." In the hour of that soul's release and enthronement there will be heavenly acclamation, as in the royal balances "The Lord weigheth the spirits."

A Perfect Standard

Other balances may lack precision and fail in counterpoise. Scales are affected by conditions of atmosphere and acid vapors. After all that the nations have done to establish an invariable standard, perfection has never yet been reached, and never will be reached. But the royal balances of which I speak are the same in heat and cold, in all weathers, in all lands, and in all the heavens. Just and true to the last point of justice and truth. The same balance that weighed the tender spirit of Adam under the fruit tree, and the spirit of Cain in the first assassination, and the spirit of courage in Joshua during the prolonged daylight, and the spirit of cruelty in Jezebel, and the spirit of grief in Jeremiah's lamentation, and the spirit of evangelism in Paul between the road to Damascus, where he first saw the light, and the road to Ostia, the place of his beheading, is weighing still, and never yet has varied from the right one milligramme, which is about the one-fifth part of a grain. The only perfect standard of weights and measures ever established was established in the heavens before the world was made, and will continue to do its work after the world is burned up. To measure the time, we have calendars. To measure the lightning, we have the electrometers. To measure the heat, we have the thermometers. To measure the atmospheric pressure, we have the barometers. To measure souls, we have the royal balances. "The Lord weigheth the spirits."

In the same divine scales the spirit of nations and civilizations is weighed. Egyptian civilization did its work, but it was cruel and superstitious and idolatrous.

and defiant of the Almighty. It was cast out and cast down. The tourist finds his chief interest not in the generation that now inhabits the regions watered by the Nile and sprinkled by her cascades, but in the temples that are the skeletons of ancient pride and pomp and power—her obelisks, her catacombs, her mosques, the colossus of Rameses, the dead cities of Memphis and Thebes, the temples of Luxor and Karnak, the museum containing the mummified forms of the Pharaohs. It is not the Egypt of to-day that we go to see, but the Egypt of many centuries ago. Her spirit has departed, her doom was sealed. The Lord weighed her spirit.

The Weighing of Rome and Greece

Now cross over the Dardanelles or Hellespont and see Grecian civilization put in the royal balances. Surely that is an imperishable spirit. Had Athens prayerfully listened to Paul's sermon on Mars Hill and adopted his precepts of brotherhood and divine worship, she could have stood in her old power to-day, and all Greece would have stood with her, and that civilization long dead under the carved pillars of her shrines and under the marble of her pentelicon mountains would have been, perhaps for all Asia, and for much of Europe, a living civilization. But for her arrogance she was cast out and cast down. The Lord weighed her spirit. Wander along the banks of the Tiber and you come to another civilization which is put in the royal balances—the Roman civilization. Its capital was the mistress of the world. Surely here is something that will last as long as the earth continues to swing in its orbit. Here Caesar reigned, and Trajan and Titus and Constantine brought home their victorious armies. Here stood glittering in the sun the Coliseum, combining in its architecture the best Doric, Ionic and Corinthian, eighty-even thousand spectators gazing upon the gladiators in a bloody struggle. But the empire was plunged into extravagance and dissoluteness, and it takes the four great volumes of Gibbon to describe her decadence. We go there now to see her ruins. Its spirit was an impure spirit, an all-conquering spirit, and "The Lord weigheth the spirits."

And so the spirit of our American nation is put into the royal balance, and it will be weighed as certainly as all the nations of the past were weighed, and as all the nations of the present are being weighed. When we go to estimate the wealth of this nation, we weigh its gold and silver, and coal and iron, and copper and lead, and all the steel-yards, and all the balances are kept busy. So many tons of this, and so many tons of that; mountainful of this metal, and another mountainful of another metal. That is well. We want to know our mining wealth, our manufacturing wealth, our agricultural wealth, and the bushel measure and the scales are an important work. But know right well there is divine weighing in this country all the time going on, and I can tell you our country's destiny, if you will tell me whether it shall be a God-honoring nation, reverential to the only book of his authorship, observing the "shalt not" of the law of right given on Mount Sinai, and the law of love given on the Mount of Beatitudes, one day out of the week observed, not in revelry, but in holy convocation, marriage honored in ceremony and in fact, blasphemy silenced in all the streets, high-toned systems of morals in all parts of our land, then our institutions will live, and all the wondrous prosperities of the present are only a faint hint of the greater prosperities to come. Richer harvests will rustle in the fields, a higher style of literature will turn its leaves in our libraries, nobler men will adorn our state and national legislatures, and there will be Washingtons, and Hamiltons, and Patrick Henrys, and John Marshalls, and Abraham Lincolns in the future, quite equal to those of the past. And the last day of the world's existence will find our free American institutions permanent as the mountains before they begin to fall, and glorious as the seas before they begin to die.

But if our character and behavior as a nation are reversed, and good morals give place to loose living, and God is put away from our hearts, and our schools, and our homes, and our people, and our literature be debauched, and anarchism and atheism have full sway, and our American Sabbath becomes a Parisian Sabbath, and infamous laws get a place on our statute books, and the marriage relation becomes a joke instead of a sanctity, and the God whom Columbus prayed to on the day of his landing from stormy seas, and whom Benjamin Franklin publicly revered when he moved, amid derisive cries, the regular opening of the American Congress with prayer, shall in our national future be insulted and blasphemed, then it will not be long before we will need another Edward Gibbon to write the decline and fall of the United States Republic, and it will not be another case of destruction by the Goths, and Huns, and Tartars, and Tamerlanes, and Attilas of foreign opposition and hate, but it will be a case of world-astounding national suicide.

A King's Vain Search

The wish of this sermon is to emphasize the invisible—to show that there are other balances beside those made of brass, and platinum, and aluminum, and set in earthly storehouses; that the spirit is the most important part of us; that the scales which weigh your body are not as important as the scales which weigh your soul. Depend not too much for happiness upon the visible. Pyrrhus was king and had large dominion, but was determined to make war against the Romans, and Cineas, the friend of the king, said to him, "Sir, when you have conquered them, what will you do next?" "Then Sicily is near at hand and easy to master." "And, what when you have conquered Sicily?" "Then we will pass over to Africa and take Carthage, which cannot long withstand us." "When these are conquered, what will you next attempt?" "Then we will fall in upon Greece and Macedonia, and recover what we have lost there." "Well, when all are subdued what fruit do you expect from all your victories?" "Then," said the king, "we will sit down and enjoy ourselves." "Sir," said Cineas, "may we not do it now? Have you not already a kingdom of your own? and he that cannot enjoy himself with a kingdom, cannot with the whole world." I say to you who love the Lord, the kingdom is within you, make more of the invisible conquests. Study a peace which the world has no bushel to measure, no steel-yards to weigh. As far as possible we should make our balances like to the divine balances.

Weighing a World

By joint resolution of Congress, in 1836, the Treasurer of the United States was ordered to send a complete set of the standard of weights and measures adopted by the National Government to the Governors of all the States, so that there might be uniformity and accuracy, and that distribution was made. So now, the Ruler of earth and heaven, having established forever the right standard, sends to us and to all people a copy of that standard—the standard by which "The Lord weigheth the spirits." What a world this will be when it is weighed after its regeneration shall have taken place! Scientists now guess at the number of tons our world weighs, and they put the Apennines and the Sierra Nevadas and Chimborazo and the Himalayas in the scales; but if weighed as to its morals at the present time, in the royal balance, the heaviest things would be the wars, the international hatreds, the crimes mountain high, the moral disasters that stagger the hemispheres on their way through immensity. But when the Gospel has gardenized the earth, as it will yet gardenize it, and the atmosphere shall be universal balm, and the soil will produce universal harvest and fruitage, and the last cavalry horse shall be unsaddled, and the last gun-carriage unwheeled, and the last fortress turned into a museum to show nations in peace what a horrid thing war once was; then the world will be weighed, and as the opposite side of the scales lifts as though it was light as a feather, the right side of the scales will come down, weighing more than all else, those tremendous values that St. Peter enumerated—faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, charity.

God forbid that it should ever be written concerning us as individuals or communities or nations, as it was written on the wall of Belshazzar's banqueting hall the hour when Daniel impeached the monarch, and translated the fiery words which blanched the cheeks of the revelers, and made them drop their chalices brimming with wine: "Thou art weighed in the balances and found wanting."

MANY SOULS WON AT PIQUA, OHIO

THE First Presbyterian Church of Piqua, O., has just passed through one of the most blessed seasons of revival in its history. In 1892, as the result of a Union Meeting, in which all the evangelical churches of the city were interested, an increased number of persons united with the Church. But as an outcome of a meeting in which this church alone as active nothing more satisfactory is recorded. The pastor of the church, Rev. James L. Black, D.D., was greatly impressed with the earnest spirit of his congregation during the Week of Prayer. The lecture-room was crowded every evening, and, without special evangelistic effort, twenty-one persons united with the Church at the communion following. The pastor was at that time a stranger, having been in charge of the church at six weeks, but he was sure his unusual interest pointed to even better things. The whole congregation was in a tender and teachable spirit. The beloved pastor had died suddenly a few months before, and the lessons of that event had sunk deep into many hearts.

The session of the church was of one mind with the pastor, that an effort ought to be made to have revival services, and their plans met with the cordial support of the people from the very start. At the suggestion of Dr. J. W. Chapman, Prof. W. S. Weeden was engaged to help the pastor. He came here a day or two ahead of the meetings, organized a chorus choir, which began with forty voices, and later reached as high as seventy. His presence was a great help from the beginning. The pastor addressed an earnest appeal to every communicant of the church, closing with these words:

"I shall preach the best I can, trusting in God for help, and I ask you to do the best you can, trusting in the same Helper. First, bring yourself, and then another. Pray for the leaders, yourself and lost souls. God will surely bless."

The meetings, planned for three weeks, were a success in every direction from the first night. After two or three nights in the crowded lecture-room the trustees of the church saw the necessity of building a large sor Weeden, by his wonderful solo singing, inspired the large choir and congregation to pour out their souls in song. He quickly created a splendid chorus out of the congregation and held them together to the end of the meeting.

One Sabbath morning in the Sunday School, 110 persons signed cards declaring their purpose to henceforth live a Christian life. These ranged in age from young men and women ready for college to boys and girls of ten and twelve years. It was a wonderful sight when nearly all in the school, not already Christians, stood up and openly confessed Christ. On the morning of Easter Sabbath, the ingathering took place. Fully 600 communicants were present and seventy-one persons stood in a double circle around the pulpit platform and publicly renounced their sins and pledged their lives to the service of Christ. Sixteen persons were baptized during the same service. These meetings, extending really through about three months, brought ninety-two persons into the Church, seventy-one on confession of faith, and secured from members of the church definite written pledges to a more consecrated Christian life to the number of 150.

The three weeks of special effort of the pastor and people, in which they had the aid of Professor Weeden, were weeks of splendid work and delightful relations on all sides. All who engaged in the work were blessed, and in membership the Church increased until, with its 728 active members, only five or six Presbyterian churches in the Synod of Ohio are larger. A great tent work, under the leadership of Professor Weeden, is now being planned for the coming summer.

II. THE TESTIMONY OF THE MOUNDS

BY...
REV. THEODORE F. WRIGHT, D.D.

THE surface of Palestine has been correctly described as being like corrugated coral, so that in going along, unless one keeps to the crooked course of some valley, one is constantly going up or down. This peculiarity of surface led to the towns being set on hills, while the tillage was done in the valleys. This explains the words, "The pastures are clothed with flocks, the valleys also are covered over with corn" (Psalm 65: 13), for the sheep and goats pasture on the hillsides, and the grain is grown in the lower ground.

Not only were the towns generally set on hills, but they caused the hills to rise higher in this way: a town was very compactly built with a thick wall, and houses all made of sun-dried bricks. These bricks were made of earth, perhaps with stubble intermixed. They measured about two feet square by three inches thick. The roofs were thatched with straw, or covered with earth, resting on twigs and rolled hard enough to shed water. Now, if war and fire destroyed such a city, the exposed walls would soon crumble back to earth again, and would so far increase the height of the hill. But when the war was over, and the people began to restore their homes, they would build on the mound of earthly ruins. At last, perhaps some more thorough massacre would cause permanent abandonment of the site, and then the mound would cover itself with grass.

Such a mound is called a tell by the Arabs. They make it now a place for their tents, but they no longer add anything to the height. Even in Bible times we read of places whose names begin with "Tel," and a careful count has revealed the existence of about two hundred tells in Palestine, every one covering one or more cities. Here, then, is the archaeologist's mine, and most carefully he goes to work to get at the contents of the hill. To take one place and speak more definitely than would be possible of a number at once, let us choose Lachish, which the Arabs call Tel-el-Hesi—the old name indeed slightly modified by modern speech. Lachish is about twenty-five miles southwest of Jerusalem, on the hills overlooking the Philistine country.

We first hear of Lachish as a town existing before the Israelites conquered Canaan. It joined with Jebus, Hebron, Eglon and Jarmuth to fight against Israel at Ajalon. Israel won, and it afterward besieged Lachish two days and destroyed it. This is told in Josh., 10th ch.

Four hundred years afterward Lachish was fortified by Rehoboam, son of Solomon, II. Chronicles 11: 9. A later king, Amaziah, took refuge there from conspirators, II. Chronicles 25: 27. Still later it was taken by the Assyrian king, Sennacherib, who besieged it "with all his power," II. Chronicles 32: 9; and here he rested while he sent officers to Jerusalem to demand its surrender. This siege is depicted on a slab found at Kouyunjik. Lachish was reoccupied by the Jews on their return from Babylon, Nehemiah 11: 30; and there the Bible record ends. The spade has removed only about one-eighth of this tell, but it has revealed the wall, of which some lower courses still remain, and we find that wall to be no less than twenty-eight feet thick! This reminds us of the saying that the spies who viewed the land saw "cities great and walled up to heaven," Deuteronomy 1: 28. Lachish was right in their path and must have looked impregnable.

We have found a gate through the wall protected by a narrow and extensive passage, through which only one could walk at a time, so that it would be easily defended from above. By the side of this gate was found a stone cut with an ornament upon it, and this ornament may be said to be the earliest bit of Palestinian art known to us. It reminds one of the finish of the altar with a rim ending in a horn, and may give the very form of the horns of the altar.

Another very important discovery was a kind of fur-ascertained by going into and through a layer of sherds and coming to one of plain earth, and then going through this and coming to another layer of pots of a different type, and so on, until he had found no less than eight cities. This seems marvelous, but we must remember that on level ground, as at Cai, a new city would be set on one side of the old heap of ruins, but that a hilly country causes the city to leap the same spot. How many Jerusalems were there? Solomon's, Nehemiah's, Herod's, the one after the destruction by Titus, the one after the destruction by Hadrian, and so on. In some places the ruins lying upon the original surface are a hundred feet deep. Now, Bliss analyzes each layer of Lachish very carefully, and places the Lachish of Joshua's time at the middle of the series.

Of course he found many important bronze objects, but the most important thing was a little tablet not three inches square, when covered over with Babylonian characters and imploring the aid of Egypt against an enemy. Zimride, the royal writer, is also named on the Tel-el-Amarua letters, and he certainly meant this one to be delivered there, but perhaps the enemy was too quick for him. The letter reads as follows:

"Is it not sent to the great chief of our fathers? Lo, thou knowest that they have fortified the city Atim (probably the neighboring Etam of I. Chronicles 2: 32). And to the feet of him who is established as the chieftain, I, Zimride, humbly bow. Supporter of cities, behold! O Saviour of the people, I have rent my garments. Three or four years the foe has been resting who desires my country. Now they have entered my land to lay waste. The city which we inhabit he is surrounding. He has gathered to besiege it. Strive he who has come down. He has gone with strength. May his land perish!"

The letter did not reach the Egyptian suzerain, but it now comes forth to us, from thirty feet below ground and Zimride, being dead, yet speaketh.

The Gift of a Bible

DEAR SIR:—The red letter New Testament received. I gave it to an old prospector here—an earnest Christian. When I gave it, he said: "Well, God bless you for this. It's what I needed, for my old Bible is going ap."

I wish to tell you how much we enjoy THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I would rather give up all my other papers and jokes than it: it is full of interesting things that are taking place in the world. I often wish I were wealthy, instead of a poor ranchman, that I might give generously to the good causes advocated by you.

nace. Only the lower part remained, but it showed the arrangement of the draught, and the inner surface showed the effects of intense heat. We know that the Philistines were workers in iron, and it may be that this was a furnace for smelting it; but that is not certain as yet, because so far nothing like it has been found anywhere. The statement has been made, however, by people of ability in such matters, that a patent for a similar furnace was taken out in London early in the nineteenth century. The Lachish furnace is probably three thousand years old and may be older. As the explorer, our American, Bliss, went down with his work, he came to evidences of a series of cities. This was

A STORY OF DECORATION DAY

By Mary Lowe Dickinson

It was desolate and dreary enough outside. It was cosy and comfortable enough within the old Bowery Mission. The rain's slow, disconsolate drip, sounding as if it never hoped to stop, was lashed into a storm by the whistling wind. Everything in the street scurried for shelter, except a rather forlorn-looking group of wayfarers, huddled together in the Mission vestibule.

Suddenly, out upon the storm broke the sound of the old familiar hymn, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul." At the first strain, a well-dressed man, hurrying on with his head bent to the blast, halted and hesitated—th as they sang

While the nearer billows roll,
While the tempest still is high,
I med slowly on. But the music must have called after him, for the words,

Hide me, oh, my Saviour hide,
Till the storm of life is past, he turned back, and with quick, strong foot-fall, entered the Mission door.

The music was the closing hymn. Seated by the door, the stranger got many a questioning look and friendly nod as the people filed out. One man asked him if he would like to see the Superintendent, and before he could answer No, a kind hand was offered, and a kind voice bade him welcome. "A stranger in the city, perhaps," asked the pastor. "Can we do anything for you?"

"Oh, no, not a stranger, but just returned after a long absence. I came in because I heard the singing. I'd like to stay as long as it goes on."

"Certainly! By all means! As long as you like. The lady at the piano is waiting for her brother. They are good friends of our work. He comes down sometimes to speak to the men, and his sister to help with the music. He is in the next room talking to a poor, discouraged fellow now. I told him I would send for a carriage for him; but he'll be back again."

The stranger was in no haste for his return, for the music had begun once more; just simple old hymns, played with a tenderness and feeling that showed the hand of the musician guided by the heart of the Christian. Quite unconscious of a listener back there in the shadows, the lady sang softly,

Come ye disconsolate, where'er ye languish,
Come to the mercy seat, fervently kneel,
Here bring your wounded hearts—here tell your anguish—
Earth has no sorrow that heaven cannot heal.

Before the last words died away the man went out. Meeting the Superintendent at the door, he slipped something in his hand. "A little gift to help some other man," as your meeting has helped me," he said, and hurried forth into the darkness just as a car drove up to take the Rev. Mr. Bryce and his sister Bertha to their home.

Did you notice that dark, soldierly-looking man who came in last night?" asked Miss Bryce, as they drove up Madison avenue. "No, he was gone before I came out; but the Superintendent said he gave him money, something handsome, and said he had been helped so much by the music. You had your misgivings, Bertha, about its being worth while for you to go down so often with me, but you see it does the poor souls good."

"I'm afraid it will be my last Sunday though, for the present. I've a letter from Mrs. Wade, in Alton; that dear old country place where we all went when the children's mother was alive. Mrs. Wade writes we may come again, at once. For Nellie's sake we ought not to delay. She is so languid, and the doctor says she must have immediate change of air."

The good man fidgeted uneasily on his seat. Delicate like Nell, and Ralph, his rollicking boy, and this brave, manly sister, who mothered them all, going away, and he left in the desolate parsonage alone! He did not say a word; but Bertha understood, and answered the unspoken question.

"Never mind, brother. Mother Wade writes there are to be no other boarders, and you will spend your vacation there—at least me—there's Decoration Day just at hand. Be sure you come up then to help me keep Ralph in order. He's always so wild about the soldiers."

"I hope Ralph isn't growing too much for you to manage, Bertha. He is a great responsibility; a noisy, active boy. Perhaps I better keep Ralph."

"No, brother, not this time. Ralph's frolic and fun are a part of Nellie's medicine; she needs him in large daily doses, and you can't keep him in your study nor in your pulpit. He's twelve now, past the rocking-horse age. But I shall need you Decoration Day. Two years ago I heard him bullying old Hannah, Mother Wade's 'help,' because she wouldn't let him have the soldier cap and sword that belonged to Mrs. Wade's boy who was wounded at Bull Run."

"Wonderful old lady, that Mrs. Wade!"

"Indeed she is. Gave three boys—all that she had—to her country. Two of them brought home to the old churchyard. No one to work the farm, so she let it go, field after field, and she couldn't have kept the old house and garden without summer boarders, and she couldn't keep them but for Hannah, that marvel of devotion and pluck."

"I'm afraid the two children will make you a lot of work," said Mother Wade to Hannah, who took her hands out of the dishwater, and stood, bare arms akimbo, while her mistress read Bertha's letter.

"Neow, Miss Wade, I know you don't never hanker after no boarders, but ef we hev to hev enybuddy, Miss Bryce is they had to pay to keep the others at it. More'n likely your relations paid. Folks gin'ally did, and it cost some on 'em 'bout all they was wuth. Never you mind 'bout the cart-wheel. It'll be too hefty for ye anyway. You can invite all them little fellers that carries it up to our pyazza, and I've got cakes and custards and things, and you can give 'em a treat."

"But can't I decorate?"

"Yes, Mother Wade 'll be glad to hev ye decorate for her boys."

"Which one, Dick or Ned?"

"Well, nuther one nor tuther. But there was Harry. He went and fit and was killed, so we heerd; but we ain't never knowed eggzactly where his grave wus. By good rights, it orter be just betwixt the other two. All these years didn't nobody never decorate for him. So that's jest where you lay your posies deown. Understand?" And Ralph understood, and Hannah turned away with her apron to her eyes.

It was a fine procession as it wound through the churchyard, headed by the boys with the mammoth wreath. And close behind with the other bearers of flowers was Ralph, with his banner and his bouquets. At a curve where the crowd passed, a big boy pushed Ralph aside.

"You needn't get in the way with your banner. We don't need any city boys," and a second push sent him staggering into the arms of a tall, strong man.

"So, so, little comrade. Quarrelling in the ranks. That's not soldierlike."

"I've as good a right," began Ralph, angrily.

"No, he hasn't any right at all to crowd in before me. My father fit and bled and died, and he didn't even have a big brother in the war."

"Never mind that. Every child in the land ought to carry a wreath for the poor dead soldiers who didn't have any little boys. Come along with me. I had two soldier brothers, and I haven't any wreath. Come and put yours on their graves for me."

"So you are a city boy," said the gentleman pleasantly, "and none of these brave fellows belonged to you?"

"No, but they did to Mother Wade. She had three soldiers; but there's one whose grave she never found. And my wreath was just for him. I was going to put it between the other two. Hannah said I might, but I know she'd like me to divide with you, since you haven't any flowers for your brothers. But there's Auntie and Mother Wade and Hannah now, there by their own soldiers' graves. I'll run and ask." But the other child—the man-child—went faster even than he, and Bertha, turning suddenly, saw again the man she had seen at the Mission. And close folded to his heart was dear old Mother Wade, and beside him Hannah, open-mouthed and arms akimbo, staring in dumb surprise. She found her tongue, however, for as Bertha drew Ralph away Hannah rushed past them, talking hard to herself:

"I might er known he'd come, and he never did come that he wasn't hungry as a bear, and I've gone and given them cart-wheel boys every airtly thing in the house that's fit to eat."

Of all the boys, Hal had been the wayward one before the war, and the wandering one after. True, he heard his mother was dead and the old home sold. True, that God sent him repentance, and that his life came back to manliness and prosperity long before that Bowery Mission night. But on that night he heard once more the hymns his mother sang, and on that night he began to long to do some work to show his sorrow and his love. On that night he resolved to go back to see if the old home could be bought, and made a summer rest for the needy ones reached by the work of the Mission. He lingered in the city to plan for this, and had come to Alton just in time to mingle with the throng on its way to the churchyard.

All this was long ago. There were yet some blessed years for Mother Wade. And there came to be in time an orphanage for soldiers' children on the old farm, and long before old Hannah rested from her labors there were boys enough "racketin' round" to fill her heart's desire.

FAMINE-STRICKEN CHINA'S CRY HEARD

AMERICA TO REACH OUT HANDS OF HELP TO THE SHANSI SUFFERERS

FROM every quarter of the Union come letters of warm approval of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD's action in opening its columns for the relief of the Chinese famine sufferers. This was done in response to the cabled appeal of Earl Li Hung Chang, an appeal which has received the prompt endorsement of the most eminent Americans, including the President, the Secretary of State, United States Minister Conger, and many others. Better than all, it has met the approval of the great body of God's people throughout the land, who are always ready to answer the cry of human suffering, and contributions for the work are already flowing in. Should these come in sufficient volume it may be practicable, before the next issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD reaches its readers, to authorize acting United States Minister Rockhill, at Peking, to take the necessary steps for forwarding the first cargo of food to the starving multitudes of the province of Shansi. Mr. Rockhill stands ready to undertake this work in behalf of Christian America. We would, therefore, urge all who desire to have a share in this benevolent work of saving human life, to act quickly, and, by forwarding their contributions now, enable us to send substantial relief at the earliest possible moment into Shansi. All relief measures will be under the supervision of the United States Acting Minister and a responsible missionary committee. Every contribution will be duly acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The contributions thus far received for the relief work are acknowledged on another page of this issue.

A Shansi Missionary's Letter

One of the missionary laborers in the Shansi field, the Rev. Harlan P. Beach, has sent to us the following article, which throws a great deal of light upon the Shansi famine:

"The strong appeal for relief flashed beneath the ocean to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by China's Bismarck, Li Hung Chang, calls the attention of the American people to piteous suffering. Famine-stricken Shansi one can easily find on any good map of China. More than half of the province—it is a trifle larger than Illinois, and quite similar in shape—is elevated more than a mile above sea-level.

"Let the reader imagine himself at the northern port of Tien-tsin, en route to the famine district. His first objective is Pao-Ting Fu, the capital of Chihli. This city can be reached by houseboat, propelled some of the time by wind, but towed for a greater part of the journey by a brawny crew; or the traveler can take the railroad to Peking, and thence to Pao-Ting Fu. The Peking route is twice as long, but the journey will be accomplished in one-sixth the time, and with far less discomfort than on the native houseboat. From the provincial capital one must proceed wholly in native fashion—either on foot or in carts resembling a mammoth Saratoga trunk with the front end removed, and placed on wheels.

"Upon the Shansi plateau, one sees few evidences of wealth of any kind, though the city houses are better built perhaps than in the towns on the Great Plain. In other respects the impression is one of decided poverty, and the traveler must look beneath the soil to discover the remarkable wealth of the province. Baron von Richtofen, the highest authority on the mineral resources of China, asserts that this is one of the most remarkable coal and iron regions of the globe. It is these immensely rich deposits that have attracted to Shansi a horde of syndicate promoters, and made Germany anxious to secure the province of Shantung, of which the province of Shansi is a hinterland.

TERRACES NEAR TAI-KU, SHANSI, SHOWING CHINESE FARMING METHODS

A Glimpse of Famine Work

"Shansi finds itself after the drought of last summer in direst need. One can only think of what universally happens when famine visits this region—and how often that is may be seen in a Chinese record, which describes more than eight hundred famines and droughts during the thousand years preceding A. D. 1643. The greatest of recent date was the famine of 1877-78, which was so awful in its ravages that from nine to thirteen millions died in this and three adjacent provinces. Beside such figures even the harrowing story of India's recent sufferings seems small. One who participated in Chinese famine relief work writes thus:

The visitor was often met by a solitary remnant of a large household, to hear from him a harrowing recital of suffering and death, fitted to shock the most callous of humanity. Again, he would come upon the corpse of one recently fallen in the vain effort to walk to a neighboring town, and about it a lazy pack of wolves squatting—gorged and stupid from the fullness of many ghastly meals. At other times, a silent dwelling might be found giving shelter only to the cadaverous bodies of its former inmates; or, anon, a ruined house would tell where the timbers had been plucked out and sold for a little bread. The last extreme of famine, cannibalism, which cropped out here and there, it is hardly necessary to add notice and description.

"Include in this picture other features, such as pitiful children, naked, and with distended abdomens filled with earth and other indigestible substances, which are swallowed to relieve the awful pangs of hunger; women grubbing from the ground, to eat roots, or robbing trees of their bark, to hush the wailing of their infants; fathers bearing about in baskets children to be sold for less than a dollar each; husbands consigning for a mere trifle their wives, or fathers their daughters, to a life of shame. These scenes, which are not but be common at such an awful time, ought to evoke the sympathy of every one who believes in human brotherhood. A larger population may succumb to hunger than perished away in the well-known horror of the last two years in India, unless speedy succor arrives.

The Christian's Opportunity

"And who will stem this life-destroying tide? Not the Chinese Government, for it is itself overwhelmed in financial disaster. As in former visitations, so now, Christians, both native and foreign, must be the almoners of Occidental Christians. Never was there a better time to exhibit the Christian spirit in love shown to one's neighbor. It is not Li Hung Chang who makes this urgent appeal; it is that Man of Sorrows, who at the Judgment Day will pronounce upon those who heed the cry a blessing, because they fed his hungry brethren in China."

A CHRISTIAN MARTYR, MR. LIU AND HIS FAMILY

TRAVELING ON THE HAU RIVER

“SAVE · THE · REMNANT · IN · SHANSI!”

Missionary Dreyer, who Escaped Massacre, Pleads in Christ's Name for Help for Starving Native Christians

EW workers in the Chinese famine field have had such opportunities of observation as have fallen to the lot of the Rev. F. C. H. Dreyer, of the Ping-yang Fu Mission. Mr. Dreyer was one of the last to escape during the terrible “Boxer” raids. He gives, in a recent issue of China's Millions, a touching picture of the fidelity and sufferings of the native Christians, many of whom were martyred. Their survivors are now perishing of famine. The missionary writes:

As early as May and June last, the distress was acute. The prices of all varieties of grain had risen to twice their normal value, and were still continuing to rise; so that many of the poorer classes were eking out a miserable existence on weeds and roots of various kinds, prepared in various ways, and some bark and seeds of trees, etc., together with the scantiest allowance of coarse, adulterated flour. Pious appeals for help were made to us. We repeatedly heard of deaths from starvation, and it was fully evident to all that each succeeding week would but deepen the distress and enlarge the circle of those affected.

The various guilds supported the officials in exacting the long list of taxes for securing rain, defused by the various forms of divination, and by the “three religions.” Frequent and prolonged public fasts were proclaimed; the southern gates of the cities were closed, fires were buried alive; famous temples, shrines and springs were visited, and sacrifices were offered and the gracious rain poured—in fact, all that superstition could suggest was done, but without success. The people were under a tremendous strain of anxiety and suspense.

This fact has, perhaps, been undervalued in considering the “Boxer” outrages in Shansi. With the indescribable horrors of the great famine of 1877-78 still fresh in their memories, it is little wonder that they shrank from the repetition of such heartrending scenes. . . . Now, large numbers of men, women and children are physical wrecks through the terrible opium habit, so that, with the double craving of hunger and opium, neither of which they are able to satisfy, the most succumb the more easily. Then (in the former famine), there were large reserve supplies of grain on hand; but now there are practically none, owing to the tremendous expense of the cultivation of the opium poppy, requiring, as it is, the choicest land, there is much less grain on the market, and, through official corruption, the Government granaries are practically empty.

This ominous outlook could not but affect the Church. During all this time prayer for rain was continually upon the lips and in the hearts of God's people. Special days of prayer and fasting were set apart. In the private devotions of individual Christians, as well as in the public services of the Church, the cry for rain was constantly heard.

Things have not improved since we left the province. Mr. Chang (who has rendered such valuable services to the missionaries during this crisis), in a recent letter, closes a lengthy description of the persecutions of the native Christians with these words: “Very many of the Christians have been without food and clothing since the commencement of the persecution, and at the present time (September 19th), rain has not yet fallen. The Christians are helpless, and those who have not been killed by “Boxers” will die of hunger or cold. I have ventured to take 200 taels of the money which was left in my hands, and have sent it to Ping-yang to be distributed among the suffering Christians. What must be the outlook for those whose relatives have been killed, and could come. The more we discussed the subject, the darker the outlook appeared. To our sad hearts, the famine seemed a terrible calamity, and almost overwhelmed us. We believed, however, that ultimate good would result therefrom. Famine was the door through which the Gospel gained its first entrance into Shansi, twenty years ago; why might not another famine be the instrument for an abundant increase of blessing throughout its length and breadth? Coming, as it does, close upon the heels of terrible persecution, is it not at least an opportunity for Christians in our more favored lands to literally obey the command: “If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head” (Rom. 12: 20)?

There is in Shansi a scattered remnant of the Church of God in sore distress. May we not hope that many who read these lines will definitely join in earnest prayer, that ways and means may be found of helping these persecuted, naked, destitute and starving Chinese Christians.

Native Christian Martyrs

In the “trying times” of the “Boxer” rising, the native Christians of Shansi were loyal to their new religion and many gave up their lives for the faith. One of the photographs on this page is that of Mr. Liu and his mother, wife, son, daughter, son-in-law and grandchildren. Mr. Liu was the first Christian victim in the Taiku massacre. His body was cut to pieces and sent to the different villages. He was widely known as a preacher of power and many natives were brought unto the Church under his ministrations; many hundreds of other native Christians won the martyr's crown. Concerning the wretched condition of the surviving Christians, a missionary writes: “The Christians are helpless, and those who have not been killed by ‘Boxers’ will die of famine.”

TYPES OF CHINESE VILLAGERS AND LOCAL OFFICIALS who are without homes to live in, without agricultural implements and the necessary animals to work with, without seed to sow and without the means to keep body and soul together until the harvest can be reaped next spring. Their condition is inexpressibly sad, and unless something is immediately done for their relief we fear the whole church in this province will be utterly blotted out!

The missionaries, whose interest and sympathies lie in the temporal as well as in the spiritual well-being of those among whom they live and labor, convinced that a famine was imminent, resolved to do all they could to help the people, especially the Christians, in their distress. Early in June, it was felt that the time had come to acquaint the world with the seriousness of the situation, so a statement was drawn up by Mr. Duncan Kay, of Ku-wu, setting forth, in substance, the facts recorded above. As far as is known, this statement was signed by all but one of the missionaries of South Shansi. The area affected is very great, for we learn that in many parts of Chih-Li, Shantung, Northern Honan and Shensi, as well as in Shansi, the continued drought has caused great distress. But confining oneself to the district represented by those who signed that letter, it is roughly 20,000 square miles. At Ping-yang Fu, the building fund contributed by the church was used in purchasing grain, and the missionaries themselves united in buying a considerable quantity of wheat, intending to bring with it the relief work necessary ere outside help

VIII. Address all communications intended for this department, Editor The Mail-Bag, The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

These Questions will be Answered July 3

1. If a person should make a vow and be convinced afterward that he ought not to have made it, would he be justified in breaking it?
2. Does sound exist, outside and independent of the delicate mechanism of the ear, or is all nature silent and is sound produced only by the impact of the air waves upon the auditory nerve?
3. At what point and under what conditions in a successful business career might it be said of a man that he no longer controlled his wealth, but that the money was master of the man?
4. Is there any benefit derived from the oath as it is administered to jurymen and witnesses in a court of justice, or to office-holders on entering on their duties? Will either the good or the bad man do his duty more faithfully because he has taken the oath?
5. Is vivisection ever justifiable? That is, can it be right to torture a living animal in order to show a class of medical students the operation of the muscles, etc., when the same cannot be shown on a dead animal?

Questions of the Week

1. In what sense, other than spiritual, may poverty be regarded as a blessing, and riches as a handicap?

In a physical sense, poverty may prove a blessing, tending to produce those habits of temperance, of simple living and of daily industry, that conduce to health and vigor; while the rich are apt to be enervated by luxury and to suffer from that dire disease, ennui. Intellectually, riches are often a handicap, for the cares and distractions they entail are greater foes to the intellectual life than poverty itself. Socially, the rich are handicapped, being to a certain extent cut off from human fellowship just because they cannot understand most of the experiences of the race. They are often afraid of being married for money, and cannot always be quite sure of their friends. As regards even the spending of money, they do not know its full enjoyment, because they never economize and manage before they spend. With a golden spoon in one's mouth from birth, one can never know the joy of having; as Browning puts it,

Sighed deep, laughed free,
Starved, feasted, despaired, been happy.

But, whatever the comparative advantages or disadvantages of poverty and riches, the wise will desire neither, but rather make the inspired prayer of Agur their own.

AMELIA HOYT.

Poverty may be regarded as a blessing when it serves as a stimulus for exertion and leads to a concentration of energy; when our activities are developed thereby, and our sympathy for others becomes deeper and more intelligent; when we are restricted by necessity from yielding to harmful indulgences or sinful desires, and led to form habits of industry, thrift and perseverance in overcoming difficulties; when toil is crowned with conquest and labor sweetens rest. Riches are a handicap when they possess the man and he becomes the slave of his wealth, and esteems it so highly that he forgets his responsibility and the need of his fellow-men, while he devotes his life to pleasure and self-gratification, or larger acquisition. They are a handicap in the sense of exciting envy, jealousy, distrust and hatred. The requirements of business and the demands of society leave the possessor of great wealth but little time for intellectual pursuits, and he grows away from, instead of up toward, his earlier and better ideals.

M. R. D. DINGWALL.

2. A friend asserts that an evangelist is not justified in counting his converts, and announcing confidently that "so many have been converted;" another friend, with equal emphasis, claims that such a course is thoroughly Scriptural, and that the spiritual laborer does right to claim for Christ every soul which accepts openly the offer of salvation? Which of the two is right?

There may be outward confession, without inward conversion. A few practice this great deceit wilfully. But the majority deceive themselves. Many think they are saved. The imagination is so colored by religious enthusiasm that they see pictures and not realities, and mistake a passing emotion for a permanent change. Others stand or go forward to the altars because their companions do so. For the same reason they would follow them into a saloon or gambling den. A third class are really touched for the moment, but are not saved forever. Now, to count all these as "converted," is but to count false coin among the true; to count the wolves with the sheep, and to reckon the dross with the gold.

R. T. EDWARDS.

If worthy motives, such as the glory of Christ, the encouragement of God's host and the witness to the laborer's call, prompt to such an enumeration, it is right and clearly in harmony with Scripture. The fruit of Pentecost, is stated as being "about three thousand souls" (Acts 2: 41); and the number of believers at the time of the imprisonment of Peter and John "about five thousand" (Acts 4: 4); and Paul and Barnabas are said to have "rehearsed all that God had done with them"

(Acts 14: 27). On the other hand, all anxiety to accumulate mere numbers, as manifested in the practice of recording as converted all who signify a desire to be Christians is wrong, and evinces a want of thoroughness on the part of the worker. He who seeks names and numbers more than souls, will make spurious converts. An expressed desire to be a Christian, though good in its place, is not necessarily a decision of the will for Christ, and where an evangelist "announces confidently that so many have been converted," his announcement ought to be based on a well-grounded belief that the reported converts have intelligently decided for and accepted Christ.

H. A. FINLAY.

3. Is a man who has a house for sale, justified in selling it, asking no questions, to a bidder, when he has reason to suspect that the proposed purchaser may use it for a gambling house, or for some other wicked purpose?

No, for the following reasons: 1. Consideration for others. If the man himself were to live in the neighborhood, he would object to a nearby gambling house or other public nuisance; therefore, he should consider that others in the vicinity would also object. If the house is located in a quarter of ill-repute, he should still follow the golden rule, perhaps thereby raising the standard of morality in that quarter. 2. That his example may not influence his neighbors or others to do wrong. 3. From principle. It is self-evident that if no one sold property to be used for wicked purposes, gambling houses and the like would soon be exterminated. The man who maintains a principle may not gain worldly prosperity, but he gains the gratitude of all right-minded people and retains his own self-respect.

ELIZABETH E. STOW.

Forfeiture clauses are very easily inserted into deeds before they are given, that demand that the property so sold shall not be used for the purposes stated. Any one who thinks more of the moral use of a property than of the money he gets for it, can carry out that purpose. But if financial considerations really mean more than moral, whatever he says or thinks, it will go to the highest bidder, with a languid desire that the new owner be a good citizen.

G. F. GOODENOUGH.

4. If a Christian sees a burglar fleeing with his property and cannot overtake him, is he justified in shooting at the man?

He has a legal right to do so, and perhaps, as far as the interests of society are concerned, a moral right. It is, of course, the duty of all Christians to prevent crime and apprehend criminals, and if the Christian shoots at the man with this thought in his mind, and is free from malice and revenge, it seems reasonable that God will charge him with no crime, even though he should kill the man. The case is analogous to that of Christians going to war. All acknowledge their legal and moral right to do so, and I have never heard a Christian express any remorse for having shot men in battle. So much for society and law. Personally, I will say, that I would under no circumstances shoot at a man fleeing with my own or another's property. Rather suffer any loss than to live with the stain of blood upon my hand, even though shed justifiably or accidentally. The sacredness of human life should appeal to Christians who realize the value of an immortal soul.

L. T. RIGHTSL.

No. Better lose a little property than be means of the burglar losing his life in the world and his soul in the world to come. A Christian shoots a robber for stealing property, and wounds or kills him, he inflicts a punishment which is greater than the crime demands. That is neither merciful nor just. If the burglar was caught, the law would neither wound nor kill him; and the Christian who would either or both, breaks the law, and so becomes the greater criminal. But, it may be argued, "if he escapes, he will get no punishment at all." Yes, he will, even if he escapes; he cannot escape God, who says: "Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord."

R. T.

5. When a drunkard or some other person is himself to Christ, should he be urged to join a church at once or should he be put in a period of probation first?

Undoubtedly, let him be received into the Church at once. That was D. L. Moody's idea, as also that of many successful winners; though some excellent Church people recommend a probation of several months before the new convert shall receive baptism. I would baptize as soon as possible, and receive into the Church and full communion. And for these reasons: 1. The Scriptures examples: those on the Day of Pentecost he Ethiopian eunuch; the jailer at Philippi and Lydia. 2. Joining the Church will be a good source of strength and grace to the "drunkard or other person," who has "given himself to Christ," and at a time, too, when greatly needed.

JOHN H. SHERRA.

He should be on trial first. Infinite mischief has been wrought by receiving people into the Church who were Christian or awhile, but backsliders after awhile. The method of the Methodist Episcopal Church is an excellent one and cannot be improved. Those who profess conversion are received on a six months' probation. If they backslide during the six months they are rejected, but if they run well, they are received into full membership. The six months' probation is a severe, yet fair, test of the candidates' confession, and the false or true is soon discovered. Other changes have been made in the Discipline of that Church, but none has ever desired to change that rule which has saved the Church from many scandals and much sorrow.

R. T.

Richard A. Boyd, Wilmore, Ky., writes: The term, "Scotch-Irish," does not mean a mixture of Scotch and Irish races; it unquestionably means "Scotch-in-Ireland." The Scotch-Irish are descendants of the Scotch by whom Ulster was planted, mainly during the seventeenth century. You are right in one sense, however, in saying that they "partake of both nationalities"; for they have inherited the resolute, "canny" disposition of the Scot, and have assimilated, by contact in business and otherwise, the lively, wide-awake quality of the Celt.

THE CHILD-TOILERS OF A GREAT CITY

BY...
MYRTA
AVARY

IN 1870, of 5,604,000 children in this country, between ten and fifteen years of age, 739,000 were wage-earners; in 1880, of 6,649,000, 1,118,000 were wage-earners. The figures for 1890 are not available for purposes of accurate comparison; but careful students and observers of the situation do not accept the happy conclusion that child labor is on the decrease. The Chief of Pennsylvania's Bureau of Industrial Statistics placed Pennsylvania's child-workers at 125,000 for 1887. As long ago as 1875, Mr. Brace, founder of the New York Children's Aid Society, estimated the child-toilers of New York City and its vicinity at 100,000. What it is now, it is impossible to say with certainty. It must be much larger than in 1875, although, because of public sentiment and legislation on the subject, it has, perhaps, not kept pace with the growth of population.

In 1900, New York's legalized addition to its great army of child-toilers was 22,296, as shown by employment certificates issued by the Board of Health. These certificates aver the applicant to be not less than fifteen, a statement necessarily based on the affidavit of parent or guardian, which is, alas! in a multitude of cases untrustworthy. The Board refused 1,714 applications. The permits cover only branches of work which come under the heads, "Manufacturing Establishment" and "Mercantile Establishment." So, that the above quota must be taken as a very small fraction, indeed, of one year's contribution to childhood's legion of industry. We have made advances since 1875, in the employment of children in some forms of industry prohibited by law, and the State lays down commands about the age at which children may be taken to factories and mercantile establishments, their hours of service and the conditions under which they labor; has set inspectors to keep guard over them; there is advance, too, in the fact that charitable and reformatory agencies, which watch over the interests of children, have increased in number, strength and efficiency. Another notable consideration is the efforts which the many large factories and mercantile establishments make for the betterment of their child help, such as the provision of first-class sanitary arrangements; of schools, in which little workers may receive instruction during certain hours granted them; membership in benevolent societies, which care for them in sickness, etc. Still, cannot be denied that there are yet many fearful abuses of power, and many cruel advantages taken—particularly in the sweat-shop system—of the need of the poor, which forces the children on to a treadmill of labor, when they should be playing in green fields.

Outside of the legally-recognized army of child-workers a second and a larger company, whose labors come under no such classification, about these, we need to be most seriously concerned, for may be said that the child employment under the permit of the State, receiving regular salary; looked after, a measure, by the big business concern for which it labors, and under the necessity of keeping clean and dressing neatly, is in far happier case than the child of the slums, who stays at home (or on the streets) and does odds and ends to eke out or to make the family's living. In the great body of child-workers unrecognized by law, in that the law grants them no permits to ply their trades, are messengers, errand-boys, boot-blacks, newsboys, push-cart tenders and venders; pedlers of flowers, shoe-strings, matches, penny pads, etc.; street musicians; carriers of sweat-shop clothing, of wood, coal, laundry, and burdens innumerable. Indeed, it is against the law for children under sixteen to engage in any of these occupations, but in interpretation of the law, the Supreme Court, the Gerry Society, the truant officers, and other good guardians of the city's children agree that discretion must be used, for it would be doubtful mercy in some cases to enforce it. A child has a right sometimes as well as a crying need to perform a reasonable duty in helping parents, sisters and brothers, and in laboring for its own support. The writer has had occasion to enter very many humble tenement dwellings, where it would seem a crime to restrain the children from their tasks. One felt that one must simply help the little workers. Who could be such a "little mother" to the motherless brothers and sisters as the oldest girl—though she might not yet be in her teens? And, where the hard working mother was living, who should help her scrub, and wash and iron, if not her little daughter? Who should sell papers, or black boots, or peddle shoe-strings and bring pennies home to help mother, if not her little laddie? But one's heart aches over little forms bent and little hands hardened by unnatural toil. The two small maids in our picture came first under observation as candidates for outings at Mont-Lawn. The missionary who presented them gives their history thus:

Mary's father has been ill for over a year. Her mother goes out to work very early in the mornings and returns very late at night. There are two children younger than Mary. Mary supplied the entire family with fuel and various other necessities last winter. There was a good deal of building going on in the neighborhood, and the men in charge and the workmen favored her and let her gather up odds and ends, not only to carry home but to sell to the neighbors, who wanted to encourage her. Tilly's mother died when she was a baby. She has a sister seven years old, and two brothers. With their father, they live in one poor, dark basement room, where, at night, beds are laid around on the floor. The father is a good, hard-working man—comes straight home from his work every night, and scrubs, washes and cooks, patches and daps and sews on buttons. The midday meal the children get as best they can, and Tilly, when her father's work brings him near enough, delights to take his dinner to him. He was so thankful when the children went to Mont-Lawn last summer, and so proud when they came back in the neat little garments that had been given them.

Many a small needlewoman (like the one on this page), feels it no hardship to sew for the motherless brothers and sisters clustering around her. One picture shows a tenement room on Saturday, after the "little mother" had tidied up everything, and turned her attention to the family wash. The saddest part of it all is that these busy tots have little time for play, and that they live in stuffy, ill-smelling tenements with evil influences around them. It rejoices one to think that such a beautiful home as Mont-Lawn-on-the-Hudson—Mont-Lawn with its greening fields, its song of birds and wealth of wild-flowers—exists for such children as these; and that a great company of tenement waifs are made as happy there every summer as beautiful surroundings and loving, tender care can make them.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD welcomes co-operation in this excellent work. Some Thoughts on the Mails

NO more signal proof of civilization in its finest modern development is shown than in the transits of the daily mail. We drop a little letter, enclosed in a thin envelope of paper, and fastened merely with adhesive gum, into a slit in a door, or a box at a street corner. We have affixed to it a bit of red or green or blue paper, bearing the magic imprint of our Government, and for this we have paid two cents, or four, or five, as may be—but a trifling sum. Our letter may contain the outpouring of our very soul; it may be an offer of marriage; it may be overbrimming with the lavishness and glory of love; it may be tempestuous with scorn and anger (though if so it is a great pity); it may tell of birth, of betrothal, or of death; it may carry a sum of money; whatever it is, it usually traverses ocean and land, climbs mountains, dips into valleys, rounds curves, spans lakes, and crosses continents, with speed and safety, and arrives at its destination as fresh as when it started. The latest triumphs of science have produced nothing more satisfactory than the daily mail.

There are people who rarely receive a letter, it is true, and to them a letter is an event. There are others who get so many that the number is a burden. Whether the sum total of our correspondence is larger or smaller, we all have a stake in the post-office, and a robber of the mails is very summarily dealt with. He is as mean as a robber of the church, and deserves rigorous treatment. Fortunately, the bulk of the men who handle the mails are men honest and true, and they can be trusted. In our towns, the familiar figure of the uniformed postman is a pleasant sight, and he is very much the friend of the families on his route. In rural places, the post-office is a centre of neighborly gossip and of friendly meeting.

If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. I. John 2: 15.

Value of the Negative

FAR too many good, honest people have come to believe that it is ungenerous and discourteous to say No! This is a pestilent sophism, especially among young people, who have been betrayed to injure their own and their friends' best interests. There seems to be something so benevolent to the casual observer in that soft, pliant disposition, which cannot pain another by a refusal; and which secures a temporary regard for what is esteemed to be genuine good nature. We ought to come to a proper understanding of the value of the negative, and that too often it is more studied selfishness of our own feelings than another's when we hesitate to say No! It is not so much the pain it will give them we are apt to think about, but the pain of saying it gives us. Tried in the fiery crucible of exact, candid logic, it is not benevolence, but sheer selfishness. The young mother cannot deny her child its wildest demands, because, she tells you, she cannot bear to wound it with the pain of a refusal. But would she hesitate if there were no pain to her own feelings involved in that refusal? Is it generosity or selfishness to sacrifice the child's best interests to her own feelings? Ah, what a rare school for the training of men and women as to the value of the negative, and culture of will power into a firmer habit, and braver readiness for denial, exists in every home among us! How many a father has come to understand the value of a stern but loving refusal to his son's requests, when it was too late to undo all the mischief by his weak acquiescence. Look on all the various ramifications of that life that makes up home and family, and remember whether you are a child there, or a parent encountering the temptations of youth, or those of maturity, that God has set you there pre-eminently to put the weak pliant will in you under the yoke of an early, steadfast discipline, and that the truest grandeur of life consists not in yielding, but in refusing to yield; and to maintain the dignity and value of saying No! The great sage of Concord, Ralph Waldo Emerson, said once, in speaking of character in the merchant: "In his parlor I see very well that he has been hard at work all day, with that knitted brow, and that settled humor, which all his desire to be courteous cannot shake off. I see plainly how many firm acts have been done, how many valued negatives have been spoken, when others would have uttered ruinous Yeas." That fatal facility in saying "Yes" has dragged more fair and prosperous barks down to ruin than any financial storm that ever swept the ocean of commerce! Some concession, both weak and wicked (wicked, because it involved not only his own ruin, but the ruin of others), to plausible solicitations to indorse a neighbor's paper, to divide risks in some gigantic speculation, to launch out in habits of living neither suited to one's means, or education, are all occasions when many a man of business, and even our best Christians in mercantile pursuits, have tasted the bitter fruits of a timid, ruinous reluctance to say No! The value of the negative is also seen when the courage, and firmness, and promptness, and persistency, with which one could have so refused, have been the four corner-stones of all a man's subsequent success! Thousands of our best young men in all our churches to-day need to study more and more the value of the negative in their social circles, in choice of amusements and associates, in selecting a life profession, and in that more crucial period of a marriage engagement! While ever ready to say Yes to God's claims to the heart's loving and loyal submission, be alert to give the negative to what he cannot approve and your own conscience condemns!

The blessing of the Lord, it maketh rich, and he added no sorrow with it. Prov. 10: 22.

Home Reading

A MAN who provides well for the family table, sees his boys and girls growing up around him in sturdy bodily vigor. Potatoes, sugar, flour, meal, meat, eggs, milk, fruit, all these are supplied, and the father is glad and proud when his children enjoy the daily feasts. The same man may be a niggard in supplying the mind with proper food. He may refuse to subscribe for a good weekly paper, a daily paper may not enter his door, and books may be almost unknown in his home. If he happen to have clever and bright young people around him, who have a thirst for information, they may borrow books which will poison their minds. A bad book is as deadly as a snake in the grass. Its venom distils an incurable plague and may mean the death of manly impulse and of moral health.

Boys like books of adventure, and many of these are wholesome and inspiring. The young of both sexes enjoy history if told in a pleasing manner, and many are fascinated with heroic biography. Books about animals are very attractive, and are useful in developing a kindly sentiment to the creation just below us, to our friends the beasts, who, whether domesticated or wild, have features not very unlike our own.

An eminent clergyman said lately that he had been brought up on three books—the Bible, Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, and Fox's Book of Martyrs. To these, repeatedly read in his childhood, he attributed the love for literature which had accompanied him all his life.

The name of the Lord is a strong tower: the righteous runneth into it, and is safe.—Prov. 18: 10.

The Saddest Phase of Polygamy

SPEAKING of the desperate plague-spot of Mormonism, and the shame of polygamy as a tolerated evil in our native land, the very saddest phase of all is one indicated by Dr. Sarah J. Elliot, who has lived as a practicing physician eight consecutive years in Utah. Dr. Elliot says that whereas a generation ago women revolted from the degradation of their lot as plural wives, their daughters, born and bred in Mormonism, accept it with indifference. They no longer feel the curse, nor, as a mass, strive against the infamy. Individuals still suffer, but, accustomed from infancy to the polygamous home, there are American women to-day who are as apathetic as Mohammedan women, under the creed which declares them to be only the sixteenth part of their superior, man, and only able to go to heaven when conveyed thither by the husband to whose retinue they belong. This lowering of womanly instinct is the saddest phase of polygamy in Utah to-day.

Dealing with China

THE wisest Government represented to-day in China is the United States Government. We are bargaining out as fast as we can. First of all, the nation need to realize that the damage done by the Boxers can never be fully paid for. The severest loss has been loss of life, and who would dare to attempt to reckon value in monetary terms? Next, we are to remember that the Chinese nation is not able to compensate dollars and cents for the property destroyed, and naval and military expenditures of the allied nations. The proposition to ask them to pay $400,000,000 is an international jest. They cannot pay the half of it.

Furthermore, we ought to remember that these horrors enacted in China are only the echoes of the cruages, a quarter of a century ago heaped on the Chinese in America. Do you know how those foreigners were induced to come to our country? In the year 1784, the first American flag was seen in Chinese waters. Fifty years our nation was begging and coaxing the Chinese to come out and be neighborly. In 1844 the Government of the United States practically said, "Oh, you dear Chinese, do come over and see us; come, bring your work with you; come and stay; come, hundreds and by thousands; do come." In 1867 the Government of the United States sent out Mr. Burlingame, a skilful ambassador, and the United States Government said through him to the Chinese nation, "Oh, you dear Chinese, when will you come? We wait long, we expect: do come, do come." Mr. Burlingame presented the case in so genial a way that when he died the Emperor deified him, and he is one of the gods of China to-day. "Well," said the coy and Chinese, "will you treat us well if we come?" "Yes," we said, "we will not only defend you, but we will welcome you; you can wear your hair as long as you please; you can worship the gods you please; only come, and we'll be so happy!" Over-persuaded, against all the prejudices of the Chinese nation, they came.

Well, how have the Chinese been treated in America? Brickbatted and slain; taxed before they could touch ashore, for the privilege of landing; taxed for street-sweeping, when not one dollar of the money raised went for the cleansing of the Chinese quarters; taxed for the United States Government which gave them no deference; the way from the steamboat wharf to their stopping in the Chinese quarters one long scene of blasphemy and bloodshed, and no police. In other words, the United States Government broke its treaty. Eight hundred thousand dollars by the Chinese Government twenty or twenty-five years ago, cheerfully paid as indemnity for Americans that had been abused in China. The United States Government refused to pay for wrongs done the Chinese in America. In the name of Almighty God, the Maker of nations, he who hath made of one blood all people, I impeach the United States Government for its perfidy toward the Chinese twenty years ago.

Twenty years ago, standing in my pulpit in Brooklyn, I foretold the recent massacres in China. I had a prophetic power to see what was coming, but I knew that our maltreatment of the Chinese would result in their maltreatment of us. Such considerations ought to lead us to practice leniency toward the Chinese. The awful sword they recently wielded against us, was wielded against them. The question which we asked in pulpit, and by printing-press, and everywhere asked, was "Must the Chinese go?" For that cry the Chinese substituted the cry "Must the Americans go?" Must the Germans go? Must the English go? If, when a man must go in an emigrant-wagon six months to cross our country to the Pacific coast, many went, do you think Americans will go to China when they can come there in five weeks, when they are fully persuaded of the treasures of that great land? It is the will of Providence that the whole world should be on wheels, and the nations are going to move north, move south, move east, and move west. The nations will intermarry, and far down in the future men will have the blood of many nationalities in their arteries, and there will be in all the earth only one great nation—one nation on five continents—a grand, homogeneous, great-hearted, allimated, five-zoned, world-encircling, universal Christian nation.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

The Glasgow Exhibition

WHILE America is holding at Buffalo, N. Y., the great Exposition of the art and industry of this continent, the great commercial capital of Scotland is crowded with visitors, to see the collection of manufactures and works of art gathered from all parts of the British Empire and from European lands. The Duchess of Fife, the King's eldest daughter, opened the exhibition on May 2, and throngs of admiring spectators are now inspecting the triumphs of brain and hand displayed in the huge and graceful paces reared in Kelvingrove Park. The immense edifice covers an area of seventy-three acres. It is surmounted by a great dome and four towers, and has the appearance of marble. The dome is constructed of steel, and bears a figure representing the age of electricity. The Industrial Hall, covering six acres of ground, is connected with the Machinery Hall by an avenue one thousand feet in length. A grand concert hall capable of accommodating four thousand persons, contains a large organ, and daily concerts will be given there free of charge while the Exhibition is open. To the right of the Concert Hall is the Canadian section, which is the chief Colonial feature, though Rhodesia and South and West Australia are also well represented. Beyond this is the Russian section, which contains the most important of foreign exhibits, and the French section, containing treasures from the Paris Exhibition. Austria, Denmark, Japan, Morocco, Mexico, Persia, and the United States have also contributed to the exhibits. The Fine Art section contains paintings, sculpture, and relics of the history, antiquities, and literature of Scotland. In conformity with the Scottish character, there is an utter absence of the questionable exhibitions and entertainments, which shocked visitors to the French Exposition last year. While the Scottish city fully holds its own in the use of the beautiful products it exhibits, it has too much regard for the teachings of the Bible to enter into competition with any other capital in things that debase and degrade.

The merchandise and her hire shall be holiness to the Lord; they shall be for them that dwell before the Lord (Lev. 23:18).

A Dangerous Pose

An ambitious young man met his death a few days ago in British Columbia through an attempt to pose for his portrait in a dramatic position. He and a friend, who is an amateur photographer, were taking a holiday in a mountain district near Rossland, B. C., when they noticed a tree growing on the edge of a cliff. One branch of the tree projected a long way over the chasm, and the young man thought it would be fine to have his portrait taken as he hung suspended from that branch. He quickly climbed the cliff and crawled along the branch. Then he wrapped his arms tightly around it and dropped. His friend promptly snapped the kodak and called to him to get back on the branch. This, however, was not so easy. He made several attempts, but though he put forth all his strength he could not draw himself up. Finally, in one desperate effort, his foot slipped and he fell to the bottom of the chasm and was taken up dead. There are many who would not have been so foolish as to do a thing of this kind, who have met even greater disaster through going into wild resorts, trusting that their own moral strength would keep them from falling.

There is a way which seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death (Prov. 14:12).

A Horse Hitched to a Train

Connecticut farmer had an unpleasant experience last week. He had occasion to visit the freight depot of the railroad in the nearest market town. He could not find the man with whom he wanted to transact his business, so crossed the yard to inquire for his office.

Fearing that the sensitive horse he was driving might be frightened by passing locomotives, he hitched him to the wheel of a car standing in the yard. While he was away, a freight train backed down to the car, and it was attached by the company's employees, who, in the gathering darkness, did not see the farmer's horse and buggy. When the farmer returned, the train had a good headway, and the horse was making frantic efforts to keep up. It was impossible then to notify the engineer, and the farmer gave up his horse and buggy for lost. But the horse stumbled and fell, and the hitching-rope broke. That fall saved him, and he was caught practically unharmed. It is safe to predict that the farmer will be more careful in future in hitching his horse. We may hope, too, that in his moral and spiritual life, he will see to it that his reliance is placed on the things that remain, and not on those that are liable to pass away.

Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world; for the world passeth away and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever (1. John 2:15-17).

Income from Expenditure

The story of how a man made money by spending it, comes from Lincoln, Neb. He is under arrest in that city for a curious offence, which he contends is no crime. The man has an agent in Mexico who has been shipping to him 400 Mexican dollars monthly. These coins look much like the American dollar, and the fact that they are worth only half the American dollar is unknown to many. His plan was to make a ten-cent purchase, pay for it with the Mexican dollar and receive ninety cents change, giving him a net profit of forty cents more the school house was afloat and drifting. The teacher went to the horse's head and forced it to tow the building, with the children in it, close to the high ground. She fastened the rope to a big tree and then helped the children to the land. The people in the vicinity are loud in praise of the teacher's heroism, to which, in all probability, the children owe their lives. We honor an act like this in which one person incurs risk to save others from danger, though we are too apt to forget Him who gave his life to save our race from perishing.

Who gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us (Gal. 1:4).

A Missing Man Finds Himself

A singular case of suspended consciousness is reported from Marion, Ind. Two months ago, a business man in Geneva, N. Y., suddenly disappeared from his store and home. For some months previous he had shown signs of worry. Some transactions in which he had been engaged had not resulted to his satisfaction and he brooded until he imagined himself on the verge of ruin. One morning he went to business as usual, but later in the day he was missing and no trace could be found of him. For two months search was made for him in vain, and his family came to the conclusion that he had committed suicide. But a few days ago one of his brothers received a visit from a haggard, bearded man, with his clothes in tatters, who had just arrived at Buffalo, N. Y., and instantly recognized him as the missing man. The returned wanderer said that he remembered going to the store on that February morning, but recollected nothing more until, sitting on a stoop, with his head in his hands, he realized that he was in a strange place. He asked a man who was passing what town he was in, and was informed that he was in Marion, Ind. How he reached a place so far from his home he has no idea. He was dazed, but gradually his senses returned to him. His pockets were empty, but kind-hearted people helped him, and, riding when he could, and walking when he had no funds, he at last reached Buffalo, and went to the house of his brother. He received a joyful welcome as of one recovered from the dead. So Christ said it is with those who wander from their Father's house, but when they come to themselves return.

When he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him (Luke 15:20).

BRIEF NOTES

The Epworth League Convention, to be held in San Francisco, July 18-21, promises to be the most successful yet held.

Mrs. Leland Stanford has promised the use of the grand organ of the University, and a chorus of two thousand voices is already organized.

The Board of Health announces that the population of Manila is 244,732, made up as follows: Americans, 8,642; Filipinos, 181,360; Chinese, 51,567; Spaniards, 2,383; and other foreigners, 660. The improved census of January, 1900, placed the population at 151,477, including 5,852 Chinese.

"The American Baptist Year Book for 1901" gives the number of regular Baptists in the United States as 4,233,226, showing a gain of 51,540 over last year. The number of churches is 43,259, and that of ordained ministers, 29,810. Georgia is still the State having the largest number of Baptists, 410,817.

The American Board has received another recognition at the hands of British royalty since that granted to Dr. R. A. Hume, of Bombay. The British minister at Peking has formally bestowed the Royal Red Cross on Miss Abbie G. Chapin, of the North China Mission, in recognition of hospital work during the siege of Peking.

Miss Susie Sorabji, a Christian Parsee lady, a sister of Miss Cornelia Sorabji, D. C. L., has arrived in New York. She conducts a Christian school in Poona, in which 400 children are taught in several separate departments. She is a well educated, refined lady, and speaks excellent English. During her stay in this country she will lecture on conditions in India. Churches, Young People's Societies, and Sunday Schools would do well to hear her. Applications may be sent to this office.

The programme of the Ocean Grove meetings for the summer has been issued. They will begin June 22d, and continue until September 1st. The great camp meeting will begin August 17th. Dr. Talmage has promised to deliver the oration on July 4th. The musical exercises will be under the leadership of Prof. Tall E. Morgan. Bishop Fitz Gerald is expected to preside at all the Sunday services in the auditorium. Children's day will be July 21st, Rev. C. H. cents. The more he spent the more he made, and he has been making a fine income. Unhappily, other people had to lose the money, which proves that his practice was fraudulent. There is, however, a law which is laid down in the Bible, and has been proved true by experience, that those who spend money in philanthropy and religion do find that the more they give away the more they have.

There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth (Prov. 11:24).

Saving a School House

The heroic act of a teacher in Nebraska is reported in a press despatch from Omaha. It appears that there is a small frame building on the banks of the White River, which is the public school of the district. For some days the river had been swollen, and one morning, when the teacher arrived, she noticed that the ground around the school was damp. She opened school, however, but when the doors were opened for recess there was general consternation. The school was completely surrounded by water. The teacher bade the children remain inside, and then she plunged into the river. It was already nearly three feet deep. Across the flood, on the high bank, a horse was grazing. The teacher caught him and brought him back through the water to the school-house, which was already undermined and beginning to rock. She found a rope in an outhouse and with this she secured the horse to the door jamb. In a few min-

CONSCIENCE AND CONVERSION

GOLDEN TEXT—I was not disobedient unto heavenly vision. Acts 26

By Dr. and Mr. Wilbur F. Craft

QUIET conscience is not a sure sign of right-doing. Strange it should be necessary to say that to any one who knows either human nature or history, especially the story of Paul. Let us study his conviction, conversion, commission.

There shone from heaven a great light round about me. This young man, Saul of Tarsus, like most young men of to-day, felt no need of light from heaven. He thought the dim lantern of conscience, "the light that lighteth every man," was light enough, and had no desire for the Sun of Righteousness, which could brighten even the moon. Besides, he had been educated in the Harvard of that time, the school of Gamaliel. In his youth, he was already church elder and judge as a member of the Sanhedrin. "What lack I yet?" so Paul said, "I know nothing against myself." That saying reached back to this period of youth, as did also the saying, "I have lived in all good conscience."

Seven years had passed since Christ was crucified, and the Jews were persecuting his increasing followers. When they condemned Stephen (Acts 8) this young judge was one of those who voted that he should die. For a brief period the Jewish rulers were in power, and could use their own punishments. Saul was so zealous that he had been appointed by the high priests chief inquisitor, and, with a troop of cavalry, was riding from city to city, breathing out threatening and slaughter, and dragging women and children to prison for the Conscience is not a guide-board, to point out the right path, but a thermometer of motives. We must learn from the Bible, from experience, and otherwise, what is right and wise in act. Conscience approves when we follow good motives, and when we do not it blames us. That is its exact function. To be conscientious is to be sincere, not necessarily to be right. And sincerity is no saviour. Only Christ can save from the blindness and guilt and love of sin.

That light from heaven blinded Paul, perhaps to remind him how blind he had been to his own sin without knowing it. Oculists examine classes in public schools and colleges, and find many have defective eyes, especially color blindness, who never suspected it. Let us hope that this story of Saul's sincere persecutions, of his blindness to supreme sins, will at least rouse the suspicion in other proud young men of our Sunday School classes that they may have been blind to their own sins. "Are we blind also?" "If ye were blind, and confessed it, and sought cure, ye should have no sin, but now ye say, We see, therefore your sin remaineth." Let us, with blind Bartimeus, cry to Jesus passing by, "Have mercy on me." Like Saul, when our eyes are quickened with heavenly light, we shall see we have persecuted infinite goodness in rejecting Christ, and that we have wronged him in every wrong we have done to man (vv. 7, 8). When, by such conviction, we have dug out the rubbish of self-confidence, we are prepared to lay the foundations, as this young Saul did, of a new, true life.

Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? The story of Paul's conversion is told three times in Acts, in the 9th, 16th, and 26th chapters, all of which we should read to get every particular in this miracle of grace, which stands only second to the resurrection of Christ among the early evidences of Christianity. It is an incontrovertible fact of history that Saul of Tarsus, a the wickedest of men. But the Spirit of Christ has come down, and plucked me as a brand from the everlasting burning." He appealed to Mr. Webster to be as good as he was great, and searched his soul with questions that resulted in Mr. Webster's confession and resecration. At Colby's request, Webster prayed for both, and then Colby what Mr. Webster afterwards described as "a pat stirring appeal to God." As Webster rode away, he said to his seat-mate: "I should like to know what the enemy of religion would say to John Colby's conversion. There is a man as unlikely, humanly speaking, to become a Christian as any man I ever saw. He was reckless, heedless, impatient. Whatever people may say, nothing can convince me of anything less than the grace of Almighty God could make such a change as I, with my own eyes, have witnessed in the life of John Colby."

Not long since, in the Missionary Review, Rev. I. Richards told of a Saul who became Paul in Africa.

A Paul in Africa Nioko, the son of a chief, bitterly opposed missionary work was begun in the Congo region. He would go about the fifty villages of his district to disturb Christian meetings, wherever he could find people to leave them, and join the dance and share the heathen amusements, and seemed to elicit them. When he could not thus draw people out of a village he would sometimes come in and break it up. In order to make money, however, and to escape being an under-carrier, this Nioko became a "kapita" or captain of carriers for the mission. Some of the under-carriers were Christians, and they would sing and talk of Christ whenever the carriers halted to rest. The heathen carriers could not always get away, and so Nioko heard the Gospel story said and sung, though he continued to oppose it. But one day he had to cross a great river to get more carriers, and when he came back alone there was no canoe-man within hearing of him across to camp, and he feared that when night came some alligator or panther would kill him. He remembered what he had heard Christians say of prayer, and in his desperation prayed for deliverance. A canoe-man came, and although he had no cloth to pay his ferriage he was taken across. In his gratitude he decided to be a Christian, but when he went into the mission the next morning, and said, "I am a Christian," no one would believe him. He went to another town, and there, too, he refused to believe that he was converted. Not till a third place he had procured a successful apostle, and led others into the faith he hoped, was he accepted and baptized, and sent forth an accredited missionary. This brings us to that same transition in Saul's life, when, after conviction and conversion, came his commission.

Thou shalt be his witness unto all men. Saul's eyes were opened.

Paul's Commission to Witness for Christ had seen might be "fixed" his soul forever. Then in the Damascus home to which he had been led, a good Ananias, in Christ's name, restored his sight, and commissioned him to be a missionary witness to the world of the power of Christ to save to the uttermost, in preparation for which, and in token of conversion already accomplished, he was washing away of sins, he was baptized.

Let us not think that while "conviction" and "conversion," the first and second points of our lesson, belong to the "commission" we are now considering belongs only to the preachers. Paul was commissioned to "witness," and that we all can and should do. We can tell the change God has wrought in us, not so wonderful perhaps as that wrought in Paul, but more like the conversion of all the other apostles, who quietly heard Jesus say, "Follow me," and so began a Christian life. But the change from Simon to Peter from cowardice to courage, from Judaism to Christianity, wrought more slowly wrought, was almost as great as the change from Saul to Paul. So, also, the change in John, the "thick-tongued" "Son of thunder," who came to be the incarnation of gentleness and love.

Here is a story of a little apostle, singly saved, who needed to save others by witnessing in childlike ways. On a Sunday when there was a great snowstorm, Dr. Stephen H. Young, Sr., the famous friend of children, found no one in the church for an audience. He waited awhile, but on one came, a little girl. He remembered how Jesus often prophesied to one, and how the shepherd hunted far for the lost lamb, and the woman long for the one lost piece of money, and so he beckoned the little girl up close to the pulpit. They sang together, and prayed, and there was a sweet hymn and a talk about the children's Saviour. The rest of the God saved little Mary's soul that snowy Sunday, and the preacher used to say that no service in all his ministry had done so much good, for Mary became a very earnest worker in the Sunday School, and in a few years had led more than seventy-five of her little companions to the Saviour. So let us Believe and receive and confess him That all his salvation may know.

A GATE OF DAMASCUS

crime of loving the Crucified One. All this he tells us he did with a "good conscience," with no sense of wrong-doing. "I verily thought I ought to do many things contrary to Jesus of Nazareth." Not till that light shined from heaven, showing the Christ he thought an impostor in all His holiness, was he convicted of his sinfulness.

Unconverted men and women, with rare exceptions, are as blind as Saul was to their own sins. Because a dull or dead conscience does not upbraid them they believe they are "all right," or "good enough" in any case. Like the ostrich, with eyes hid in the sand, which thinks itself safe because it cannot see its enemy, the sinner, with eyes blinded by the earthly, sensual, and devilish, thinks himself far from all wrong-doing, and the dangers it brings.

Only those unfamiliar with the real life of the vicious and criminal suppose they are consumed with regret and remorse. Mr. Moody went through a prison, and found at every cell, save one, no repentance, but excuses. He exclaimed, "God cannot save anyone here; no sinners." Only one acknowledged he was at fault, and he was saved. The others were there, as they claimed, by mistake. Somebody else was at least "more to blame." Love is said to be blind, but no love is quite so blind as self-love. As cocaine makes the eye insensible to pain, so the habit of sin makes conscience and consciousness insensible to it. A preacher visiting in France, was called to the bedside of a dying American. He said to the sick man: "Do you believe in immortality?" "I do, most firmly." "What is your hope?" "I hope to be happy forever in heaven." "On what ground?" "I have never done anything very bad in this world. My little faults, such as are common to all men, I am sure God will overlook." The man died in that same quietness of conscience, and with that same firm faith in himself. The minister, on returning to America, found this man had fled to France to escape arrest for forgery. To his sin-dulled conscience and consciousness, that had come to be thought of as only a "little fault." Such cases could be cited by the hour. If a man may be unconscious of the criminality of crime, much more may a man fail to feel the exceeding sinfulness of sin that wrongs God rather than man. If the purest soul needs to bring the trespass offering for unconscious sins, praying, "Cleanse thou me from unknown faults" (Psa. 51), how much more is the unsaved soul likely to be living in serious sin, though conscience is sounding no alarm.

We shall miss the greatest lesson of Saul's earlier history if we do not, in the light of that Damascus noon, correct our false conceptions of conscience. Certainly, conscience did not tell Saul what acts were right and what were wrong.

THE CITY OF DAMASCUS, SAID TO BE THE OLDEST IN THE WORLD

strong-minded scholar, was so much opposed to Jesus as a supposed impostor that he was ready to kill all who would follow him, and that suddenly he became so devoted to him that he was himself ready to die, as he did at last, in his cause. Lord Lyttleton, an infidel, undertook to find some other explanation of this right-about-face in Saul's history than the "heavenly vision," but instead of getting the supernatural out of the story, he was forced to take it into his own mind and heart. Nothing less than the revelation of Christ could account for such a change as unquestionably occurred in the life of Saul.

Saul had been in a troop, but Christ dealt with him singly. The others saw with fear the light from heaven, but they neither saw nor heard Jesus himself. God's way of "saving the masses" is by saving the ones. As one alone with Christ, Saul said, "What wilt thou have me to do?" A "pronoun religion," indeed, was that of Paul. The first step in a Christian life is for the divine "Thou" and the human "me" to come face to face. As the sick woman, forgetting all others, touched the Christ, and was healed, so Saul, forgetting all others, touched the Saviour at that hour, and was henceforth a transformed soul.

Christian history in every country has its Saul changed to Paul, its persecutor transformed into an apostle, a new miracle, a fresh evidence of Christianity and proof of the reality of conversion. One of the facts that confirmed the intellectual faith of Daniel Webster was the conversion of John Colby, a harum-scarum, godless fellow, much older than Webster, who had married the latter's half-sister. Webster heard of Colby's conversion, and, scarcely able to credit it, went to see for himself. Colby said to the great statesman: "You know, Daniel, what I have been. I have been one of

Occupations for Women 4.—THE DOCTOR

WOMEN not yet very old, remember clearly a period when the woman doctor was still a novelty. The first brave ladies who dared to attempt pioneer work in the medical field met with fierce opposition. Abuse and vituperation assailed them from press and platform, and when they ventured, under protest, to enter clinics, and undertook study in schools of surgery, they were reviled and flouted in no gentle language by young men, their fellow students, and were scarcely tolerated by the professors, who thought them very much out of the sphere. But the first to break a way through the virgin forest must always be in danger from the wild beasts of the jungle, as well as from the briars, thorns, and pitfalls of the tangled wilderness. It takes courage, resolution and pluck of a high order to be the first in new field, and so Dr. Emily Blackwell and her sister may well be garlanded with laurel, and take a high place in the hall of fame. They were women with the staunch courage of their convictions, they possessed an indomitable will and a serene faith in the purity of their own motives, and in God as their friend and helper.

Medical schools for women exclusively did not exist in the world a hundred years ago. Now they are found in most of the larger cities, and women are granted the widest opportunities to study the laws of healing in a scientific and systematic training, not inferior to that open to men. In Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New York, Chicago, and other cities, women may prepare themselves for the practice of medicine in families, or for a specialty. As a rule, the woman doctor treats the maladies of women and children, although she is not prevented from prescribing for men. She is as successful as her brother, in the ordinary medical practice which she undertakes, and she often makes a large annual income from her exertions. Seldom, however, do women undertake the more difficult and critical surgical operations. The great surgeons of the world are men.

In the foreign missionary field, the woman doctor is invaluable. A thousand silent prejudices, barriers, fragile as a spider's thread, yet strong as iron, prevent the attendance of Oriental women of male physicians. For countless generations women have borne their children in peril and anguish, unrelieved by intelligent skill; for centuries they have struggled through fear and distress as best they might, the fear of losing caste and the impossibility of being helped, rendering disease a nightmare of unspeakable horrors. Since European and American women have studied medicine, a star of hope has arisen in the Eastern sky, and the harem and the zenana, light and joy have penetrated.

It has recently been noted by a prominent woman doctor of New York, that the usual generosity of the sex handicaps the profession to a certain extent. The woman struggles with the doctor, so that the latter is prone to attempt too much. She does more dispensary work than she should, having an eye to her own strength, and she undertakes a great deal of gratuitous work among the poor. There are few doctors, however, who do not treat many patients without the shadow of a fee, and in no other profession is there found more unselfishness and more patient, unflinching service to humanity. Dr. Holmes acknowledged this for his brethren when, summing up the career of the physician, he said:

While Valor's haughty champions wait
Till all their scars are shown,
Love walks unchallenged through the gate,
To sit beside the throne.

The emolument which may be won by the doctor varies according to her background. If she reside in a country village she will make less money than if her home be in a city, but as she will have to spend less for office rent, for her wardrobe, and for other items, she

The Plenishing of a Bride

THAT the bride shall leave her father's house with some store of goods, is the general custom in all lands, and has been the fashion of the world in all ages. In the Hebrew story of Othniel and Achsah, told in the book of Judges, we find Achsah dowered by her father with the meadow land watered by the upper and nether springs, no mean setting out in a pastoral country where the herds and flocks needed good grazing and fresh water. The bride in our country furnishes the linen for her beds and tables, and is provided with an outfit of clothing sufficient to last her for at least a year. Often she does much more than this. A well-to-do father sometimes bestows on his daughter the gift of a home, either building or buying a house for her, and furnishing it from attic to cellar. But if means are limited and the bride and groom must begin in a very small way, let them not on that account be deterred from housekeeping. The very tiniest bit of a home, the most frugal furnishing is far to be preferred by the newly married pair to living in a boarding house or hotel, where the young wife leads a life of idleness, and the husband sits with her at a public table. Privacy is one of the requisites to successful home making at the start, and this should not be sacrificed to a foolish desire for display or to show of any description.

The real needs for a home are few and simple. A bed-room, a living-room and a kitchen are ample for two people. Parlors of the old type, where the best carpet and the best furniture are set away, and used only on great occasions, are not very much in fashion now, and most people prefer a pleasant apartment where they may dine, chat, have books and plants, and receive their friends—a refined living-room.

Mrs. Poke and Mrs. Rush

Mrs. Poke sets out to do a good day's work, but she loses a half hour here, and a quarter hour there, in considering what to begin with. Then, she has only a vague plan in her mind of what she means to do, and she starts two or three things at once and finishes none of them. She rips out her sewing because she has not succeeded in making every stitch invisible. In the middle of her baking she is attracted to the morning paper, reads it, omits her baking powder, and produces a batch of heavy biscuits. Mrs. Poke's work is never done.

Mrs. Rush is in a whirl from day dawn to dark. She is hammering and pounding, flying and fretting until her own nerves and those of her family are nearly worn to shreds. She scolds her children, nags at her husband, and cannot keep a maid. Nobody wants to live with Mrs. Rush. One of these days she will die of collapse and nervous exhaustion, and few will mourn for her though she is a good woman and an estimable member of society.

Mrs. Method is a more successful housekeeper than either Mrs. Poke or Mrs. Rush, and will live longer, be happier and do more good than they.

A specialist in nervous diseases might easily make a fortune if she proved able to treat successfully the numerous cases of city women who break down from exhaustion from the social strain and from too much society. No other woman is told the innermost secrets of the home and heart as the doctor is. She should fight the cowardice and selfishness which cause women to shrink from maternity, and should stand firmly in opposition to all tampering with narcotics and stimulants. Hers is a grand door to usefulness, a splendid opportunity "to serve the present age."

THE GOSPEL AT THE PAN-AMERICAN FAIR

A Great Interdenominational Evangelistic Campaign to be Carried Forward in the Tent "Evangelist"

BACK of every great achievement there is always a vision. The Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo is an illustration. Since we must have foreseen—not indeed the beauty of architecture and landscape gardening, the glory of electrical display flashing out upon the summer night, but the deep invisible meaning of it all—that which makes the Exposition at Buffalo to differ from all its predecessors in this exhibiting age: the immense and unique significance of an exhibition which should manifest the American spirit, in arts, architecture, commerce, manufactures, science, education, and all that goes to make up the individuality, one had almost said the personality, of a nation, a continent, a hemisphere.

Another vision like this, and yet unlike, arose last year before the inward eye of the editor of a religious paper in New York City. She saw in this unique and significant exhibition, then in active preparation, an opportunity such as it alone can furnish; she saw that, representing as it was designed to do, the spirit of America in all material and intellectual things it offered a splendid opportunity for a representation, never yet fully given on any large and significant scale, of the spirit of America in religion. And she resolved to embrace that opportunity, and inaugurate a work which would show to the American people what manner of spirit we are of, religiously, and at the same time minister to the religious needs of thousands who were far away from home and from their ordinary religious privileges and safeguards. Many of the visitors would be strangers, to whom our customs, usages and manners would be entirely unfamiliar, and who, therefore, would be unusually susceptible to the temptations necessarily incident to absence from home, and to a prolonged period of sight-seeing, unusually susceptible, too, to the hospitable and kindly influences of religious brotherliness, and alive to the comfort and the help it may bring in moments of perplexity and trouble.

Manifestly the Exposition authorities could do nothing of this kind. But what a group of officials might not undertake an individual or a number of individuals might do. The vision of the tent "Evangelist" was, in a sense, like that other vision seen by the prophet Isaiah two millenniums and a half ago—the Temple mount at Jerusalem miraculously walled higher than all the mountains, making the Temple visible to the whole world. So to the tent "Evangelist" would flock all peoples, of whatever nation, who might come to Buffalo this summer. To establish and maintain a work of this kind, it was estimated, would require not less than ten thousand dollars; but without hesitation the resolve was made to appeal to the American people to support the work.

The first step was to enlist the good will of the people of Buffalo. Ministers of all denominations and laymen of high standing, members of the Board of Management of the Exposition, and the Commissioner-General, Colonel Weber, gladly gave their names as members of the local committee. Mr. Milburn, President of the Exposition, gave his "heartly approval" of the plan.

The next thing was to form a National Committee, and in a few weeks 113 names were enrolled of men of national reputation. Vice-President Roosevelt and Governor Odell head the list. Presidents of universities, Justice Brewer of the United States Supreme Court, and Comptroller Coler of New York; editors, like Wm. Hayes Ward and Edwin D. Mead; philanthropists, like Gen. O. O. Howard and the Hon. W. P. Letchworth; leaders of great movements, like "Father Endeavor" Clark and John R. Mott; and half a hundred more.

way Gate, the chief entrance to the Exhibition from the city of Buffalo. The tent will seat 1,200 people in the annex 300; and, in case of need, the sides of the tent can be lifted and chairs placed on the ground around it. During the five months from the first of June to the end of October, there will be a preaching service every day by ministers of national reputation from every denomination. This service will be at the vesper hour seven P. M. The great multitude who will be streaming toward the Exposition to behold the wonderful effects of electric light ever displayed on many effects, which five years ago were hardly dreamed of, will be invited to turn aside into the tent "Evangelist," where the Light of the World will be held up before their eyes. A number of leading ministers, including Revs. Dr. Rainsford, J. Talmage, J. Wilbur Chapman, Josiah Strong, William Hayes Ward, Edward Everett Hale, Presidents J. I. Barnes and A. V. V. Raymond, Prof. Herrick Johnson, Prof. R. A. Torrey, E. Clark, T. S. Hamlin, F. K. Gunsaulus and Lyman Abbott, will preach from one to three on fine evenings in the tent "Evangelist."

On Sunday afternoons the Buffalo Y. M. C. A. will use the tent for a meeting place. On week days, the hospitality of the tent is offered to religious bodies of any denomination, to hold conventions. The Y. M. C. E., after its national convention in Cincinnati, will hold a supplementary meeting, July 11-13, in the "Evangelist." The International Y. M. C. A. will have a convention there; the Congress of Religion, the New York State Conference of Religion, the Federation of Churches, the League for Social Service, the McAllister, the King's Daughters, and other bodies are making arrangements for the use of the tent "Evangelist." In August, during an entire week, the Home Missionary Societies will hold an interdenominational convention there.

This work is worthy of the support of all Christian people. Less than half the amount necessary to carry on the work has already been raised. The time for dedicating the tent, Sunday, June 2, is at hand. Readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are invited to have a share in this evangelical work, which will reach out to the whole country, and to distant lands, as the hemispheres will be represented in the great arm of visitors to the Exposition. If every reader who directs to aid in spreading the glorious Gospel message at the Pan-American Exposition will send an offering to assist in carrying on the work of the tent "Evangelist," the success of the enterprise will be assured, and a great spiritual harvest may be looked for. In this year of noble revivals in all parts of the country, let us not overlook so golden an opportunity of serving the Master, and of bringing precious souls to the Kingdom. THE GOSPEL TENT "EVANGELIST" AT THE EXPOSITION GROUNDS, BUFFALO

Though the original plans were those of the one who initiated the movement, her part in the work is simply the raising of funds and its management, and the elaborating of the plans in detail are in the hands of a strong committee of Buffalo ministers and laymen. Its Chairman is the Rev. Henry Ward, D.D., for thirty years the successful pastor of a "downtown church" in Buffalo; the Secretary is Frank E. Sickles, Esq., a prominent Buffalo lawyer; the Treasurer is Mr. William C. Cornwell, President City Bank of Buffalo; and the remaining members of the Executive are the Rev. A. S. Coats, D.D., pastor of a large Baptist Church, the Rev. S. L. Beiler, Ph.D., pastor of a prominent Methodist Church, and Mr. Theophil Speyer, President of the German Y. M. C. A. Under such management the work is rapidly taking form. A large tent has been made, 70 feet wide by 128 long, with an annex tent 30x40 for office, ante-room and other purposes. This tent is beautifully situated just outside of the monumental Lincoln Park-

ANCHORED

MY soul is anchored safely, Lord;
I trust in thy unfailing Word;
No shadow falls across the page
That lights the world from age to age.

My soul is anchored! ever sure
Is Christ—the Rock which shall endure;
My shelter from the noon-tide heat—
In darkness, my secure retreat.

My soul is anchored safely, Lord;
My will, with thine, in sweet accord;
No morn shall break, no sun shall set,
But marks the victory nearer yet.

My soul is anchored! praise the Lord;
I fear no storm, no rising flood;
When all that is of earth shall fail,
His love and grace will still prevail.

The Transforming Vision

The Effect on Saul of Tarsus of the Sight of the Glorified Christ

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

N the Old Testament the Son of God had often appeared with more or less distinctness to the saints of God. To Moses, in the burning bush he appeared and announced himself as the I AM of Exodus 3; to Joshua, as "the captain of the Lord's host" (Joshua 5: 13-15); as well as to Jacob at Bethel (Gen. 32); to Gideon, Manoah, etc. But only appeared in his glory to Isaiah (6), to Ezekiel (1: 26-28) and to Daniel (10). And each of these three prophets of the Lord were taught to utter nothingness by the sight. Isaiah said, "Woe is me, for I am undone." Ezekiel fell upon his face; Daniel retained no strength, and his comeliness was turned in him into corruption. The blinding light of the Lord's presence withers the goodness of the flesh (Isa. 40: 6), and proves to be the "flesh" which the Word of the Lord declares to be. The spirit of man fails before him (1: 57: 16), and the souls which he has made. How self-consciousness withers before the glorious presence of God! How a sight of him as he is, seen by faith in the Word of God, enlightened by the Spirit, cuts at the root of our self-life, and we see, in those moments of holy awe when we perceive who he is and what he is, the utter ruin that we are in ourselves!

Saul the apostle, previously Saul of Tarsus, the disciple of Gamaliel, the Pharisee of the high priests (Acts 26: 5), the most zealous persecutor of the disciples of the Lord Jesus, who had not been broken, even when the Christ-faced face of Stephen was turned upwards to God and to declare that he saw heaven opened as Jesus sitting at the right hand of God. He conquered, nevertheless, by a revelation of Jesus to his own soul. There are, we fear, many conversions in which what Jesus has done for us figures much more largely than what he is. There is a reception of the fact that he died for sinners, that he has made atonement, that God is satisfied with his propitiation, and yet he himself is little known to those who thus accept his pardon. When he himself dwains upon a human soul, as changed; everything takes its form and color from him. When a sinner seeks simply pardon, peace and joy, he is not seeking Jesus, but something which he gives; and there is nothing in the mere reception of a gift which ministers to us, that has power to tear us out of ourselves and to change our nature.

Saul of Tarsus was already an upright and conscientious man; he says of himself that "aching the righteousness which is in the law" he was "found blameless" (Phil. 3: 6, RV). But there was nothing in this self-righteousness to show him the utter ruin of his own nature; he got the credit for his righteousness among his friends and acquaintances, and when, in what he believed to be righteous indignation against the followers of Jesus of Nazareth, he "persecuted this way of life, binding and delivering into prisons both men and women," he stood forth both with the priesthood and the rulers, and with himself, too. He verily thought of himself that he "ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth" (Acts 26: 9). Thus the self-life, which withers in the presence of the Lord Jesus, only grew stronger with all his religiousness, until the relation of the Lord conquered him. And this is only too true of many, even of Christian workers, who are full of zeal for work, who love to get the credit for it, and who would be most unhappy if the work they do was not reported, and if they were not "highly esteemed among men."

And what was the effect of the sight on Paul? He was broken, conquered, subdued. Up to this time he had been a leader, now he was his hand to be led. "What shall I do, Lord?" No making terms; no reservation. To Jesus whom he now knew to be the Son of God, and who made such common cause with all his disciples that he said it was he who was persecuted in them, this Jesus had revealed himself, and there was but one thing for him to do; he must be wholly and forever at his disposal. "What shall I do, Lord?"

was the keynote of his future life. What kind of conversion is it which does not at once produce a similar effect?

Saul of Tarsus must be put to a test. The answer to his question was, "Arise, and go into Damascus, and there it shall be told thee of all things that are appointed for thee to do." To Damascus? Would not that be the most difficult place for him to begin his new and changed life? Yes, indeed; but he who had appeared to him would not leave him. The man who had been such a leader of others, blinded by the light from heaven, was now led by the hand into Damascus. It was a foretaste of the future, in which he was to take no unguided step.

REVIVAL NOTES

Major Cole has been conducting a remarkable series of evangelistic meetings at Phenix, Ariz.

At Sodus, Mich., the M. E. and United Brethren pastors held joint revival services. Over sixty came to the altar.

Rev. Arthur Crane, of Charleston, S. C., has conducted very successful missions in Tampa, Fla., and Baton Rouge, La. Many have confessed Christ, and been added to the churches. He is now in Lake Charles, La., where the spiritual interest is very marked.

Waterford, Vt., has been receiving a blessing of the Holy Spirit. Rev. Ralph Gillam closed a twelve days' service, Sunday, March 31, with three services—the house was crowded at each service. During the meetings eighty-five signified their determination to lead a Christian life. Backsliders have also been reclaimed, the churches quickened and the pastor strengthened and encouraged. Mr. L. G. March assisted as soloist.

A notable revival has just been closed at Milan, Mich. Capt. Bernard and his singing brigade of the Salvation Army came there, and, together with the Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians and Free Methodists, conducted revival services in the different churches. In all, over 230 people confessed Christ. The meetings were the talk of the community. The rich and poor, laboring man and merchant, high school students, the old and young, all classes were reached.

Mr. William Phillips Hall, of New York, preached at the Congregational Church, Northfield, on a recent Sunday morning. Mr. Hall also preached at the Mount Hermon Chapel in the evening. He was accompanied by Mr. F. H. Jacobs, of Brooklyn, who sang very beautifully several solos. Rev. Dr. A. F. Schaffler, of New York, likewise preached on Sunday morning and evening at Northfield and Mount Hermon. Dr. Schaffler also inaugurated the Bible work at Mount Hermon for the summer term, during the first week in May. This work is very highly appreciated by the students, 180 of whom have assembled for the summer course in the school.

"My darling, may he grant your prayer," said Dr. Prior, his voice quivering with emotion, as drawing her to his side, he gently pressed her head to his shoulder and tenderly kissed the pure white forehead.

The morning following her birthday, Dr. Prior called Marjorie into his study, and, drawing her upon his knee, said: "My darling, you asked me last night to tell you what you could do to thank Miss Drake for the many pleasures she has brought into your life, and I am now going to do so. Yesterday was your birthday, and to-day is mine, and we have both received many lovely gifts. But there was one gift which I craved for you and one for myself which could only be obtained by asking, and which, if we received them, would place us each under a life-long obligation, because of their inestimable value."

Dr. Prior paused to stroke Marjorie's sunny hair, and she exclaimed:

"Why, Papa Checa, what makes you look at me so seriously?"

"Because I feel what I am saying to be very serious, and very sacred, dear. Last night, after you had gone to your room, I asked for these precious gifts, and, thank our dear Heavenly Father, obtained them. Marjorie, darling, they are a mother for my daughter and a wife for my home, and Miss Drake has promised to give them to me in December. Can you let her fill that place for you, my daughter, and learn to love her with the tender love she would then have the right to claim from you?"

As her father proceeded, Marjorie's face grew more and more serious, and when he ceased she laid her arms about his neck, and nestling close to him, for some time did not speak a word.

He kept perfectly quiet, knowing that in time she would give voice to her thoughts, and feeling that it would be better to let her have time to consider his words. Presently she raised her head and looking with tear-dimmed eyes straight into his, said: "Papa, yesterday was the happiest birthday I have ever known; for I was too little to remember those which came before mamma died, and I received every gift I had wished for. But all day long I kept wishing for just one thing more, and that was the one thing I thought I could never have—a mother. I watched Maud and thought that if I could have a mother as she had, to go to and talk about every little thing just as she does, and have her interested in all my pleasures, as Mother Drake is interested in all that Maud does, that I'd be willing to give up all the rest. Why, papa, Maud can't have a straw given to her without her mother being interested; and if she is going any where, or any one is coming to visit her, she talks it all over with her mother and they lay all sorts of lovely plans, and that makes it seem ten times nicer. And so I fretted and fumed, and made myself half miserable, even though I had so much to make me happy. But I couldn't help it somehow; and now I am to have that too; and, papa, it seems too good to be truly true. I have never loved any one as I love Miss Drake, and now she is to be with us always,—always; and I shall never have to worry about her going away; and I can call her—mamma," and Marjorie half whispered the word as though its very sound were too sacred to be lightly spoken.

"My precious daughter; my dear one," said Dr. Prior, as he gathered her close in his arms.

They were married early in December. Mrs. Drake remained at Dr. Prior's a week, and when she returned to Sunny Lawn took Margaret and Marjorie back with her; the former to prepare for the quiet wedding, and the latter "for safe keeping," as Maud put it, "for," added Miss Irrepressible, "who in the world could tell what might happen to her if she were left wholly to the care of the bride-elect, whose head is filled with thoughts of nothing but her chests and her Chester?"

CHAPTER XVIII

"Mamma, dear; dear Mamma"

IT was a very pretty wedding, with Marjorie and Maud for maids of honor. Only the most intimate friends were invited, for Mrs. Drake still wore mourning. Margaret made a very lovely bride and it would have been difficult to find a handsomer bridegroom, for Dr. Prior seemed to have grown ten years younger, and "as usual, has carried off all the girls and the glory," said Lloyd Prior, who acted as best man. "It's no use talking," he added, "'twas ever thus. This is the second time I've been best man to that fellow, and what good has it done me? Not a blessed girl will look at me. I go South, and get desperately ill, and he comes chasing after me. He gets ill, and what comes of it? The best looking girl in the land goes to hunt him up, and not content with that, has to fall in love with him into the bargain. I call it very hard lines indeed, don't you, Mrs. Drake?" and he turned to her with a most woe-begone expression.

"It is a very desperate state of affairs, but I do not see the immediate remedy for it," laughed Mrs. Drake.

But even then was little "Dan Cupid" busy with his archery, and ere the next year ended Marjorie and Maud were again called upon to walk before a bride whose brother led her to the altar, and who walked from it as Mrs. Lloyd Prior; and to again quote Maud: "Mr. Prior now had nothing whatever to grumble at unless he and Helen took to ruining their honeymoon."

Margaret and her husband left for Old Point Comfort immediately after their marriage, to be absent ten days, and Marjorie stayed with her beloved "Mother Drake," feeling that she now had some claim to call her so.

"Mamma," said Maud, as they sat at dinner the following night, "what sort of relations are Marjorie and I now say? Am I her step-aunt-in-law, or what?"

"Her what, child? Who ever heard of such an extraordinary relationship as that?"

"Why, no," broke in Rodman, who was nearly convulsed with laughter; "you are her aunt-by-courtesy, chum-by-choice, and torment-because-she-can't-help-herself."

"O, do go along with your nonsense! What is she, truly, mamma?"

"She is my dear adopted granddaughter, and, therefore, must be your niece; so set her a wise example, I beg of you."

"Take out an accident policy at once, Marjorie; you don't know what you're in for," cried Rodman.

The ten days soon slipped away, and on the eighteenth of December, exactly five months from the date that she had watched so anxiously before, only to meet with such cruel disappointment, Marjorie again went to meet the steamer which would bring her father home to her, and also one who was destined to make her life one long dream of happiness.

This time only joy was in store for her, and Margaret might well be proud of the pretty daughter who greeted her at the foot of the gang-plank, for Marjorie looked very lovely in her dark blue cloth suit, with its handsome collar and muff of silver fox, and the big black velvet hat with its nodding ostrich plumes, that were such a contrast to the bright hair beneath them.

They went directly to the Grand Central Station, where, after bidding Rodman farewell, they took the train for Mount-ville, and reached home in time for a seven o'clock dinner.

Johnson and Nora had outdone themselves, and the house was a bower of blossoms. Nor did Johnson mean that anything should be done by halves; but following out the good old English custom, he had every servant in the house, each with a wedding favor upon the left arm, waiting in the hall to welcome the bride; and he was self-elected spokesman; and right nobly did he deport himself. Margaret had a kind word for each, and when dinner was served was unstinted in her praise of its excellence.

All were weary from the journey and soon went to their rooms. Dr. Prior wished to read his letters, and so retired to his study for a quiet hour, but Margaret and Marjorie went upstairs.

Without lighting the gas Margaret removed her traveling dress, and slipping on a pretty Japanese bedroom robe sat down in a low chair before the open fire, whose cheerful light brightened the room. She could hear Marjorie's footfalls as she moved about in the adjoining room, and she wondered why the girl had said so little and bidden her good-night so quietly; for Marjorie had said almost nothing since their meeting, and had never once addressed her by name.

The doctor's study had not been changed, and, as he entered it, his first glance fell upon the portrait of Marjorie's mother which hung above the mantel. The light from the lamp fell full upon the beautiful face, which seemed to smile a benediction upon him.

Crossing the room he rested his hand upon the mantel shelf and looked long and earnestly at the sweet face above his. Looked as only a good and noble man can look upon the portrait of the mother of his child, when that mother having gone from his home forever, he has chosen another to fill her place.

"Yes, Madeline, it is better so. Better for our child and better for her father. Matilda could never fill your place," he murmured, as he turned to his desk.

Strangely enough, the first letter that he opened was from Miss Carver. "What!" he exclaimed, "can it be possible that she is so far recovered as to be able to write to me?"

The letter was dated at the sanitarium in New York, where Miss Carver had now been a patient for nearly a year, and after touching upon the subject of his marriage and wishing him all joy and happiness, she added, "And what a year the past has been for us both! Truly the dear Father has dealt very tenderly with us. To your home he has guided a noble and lovable woman, destined, I am sure, to bring happiness and joy to both you and dear Marjorie. Such joy and happiness as I myself might have brought had I realized earlier that in this great world of ours, even the sightless can do much toward making others happy, and that there is an inward sight far keener and more beautiful than the outward one. Ah! Chester, since dwelling here I have seen so much without eyesight, learned so much without resorting to printed pages, that I now realize what I might have been to Marjorie, and how far short I fell of filling Madeline's place to her. Some day I shall ask her to forgive me, as I now ask you to do for Madeline's sake."

"Thank God, I can once more see. Not alone with the restored eyesight, but with a soul sight, of which I can never, never be deprived. I can now look back upon the years I spent in your home, a home which I held it within my power to make so sweet, and in it carry out Madeline's beautiful ideas, and can realize how signally I failed to do so. When I lost my only sister it seemed as though I could never smile again, and then when the fatal day came which deprived me of my sight, it seemed to turn me to stone.

"Think what I missed in all those miserable years! I might have been Marjorie's world, and she would have been my sunshine.

"Sometimes it seems as though I could cry aloud when I think how she used to beg me to let her read to me, or sought my society only to meet with a repulse. Truly, I 'knew not what I did.'

"Marjorie's letters have been such a comfort to me, and I truly rejoice in the thought that her home is now what it should be; a home filled with joy and song. Her tastes are so like Madeline's, and in her love for all that is beautiful and fondness for music, I can see Madeline at Marjorie's age. Tell her that I have taken up my music again, and that she can hardly appreciate the pleasure I am able to give to these 'shut-ins.' Each evening as twilight approaches, I go into the little chapel here in the building and play for the patients. A few days ago we had a special treat, for Mrs. Lawton came to call upon me late in the afternoon and I persuaded her to remain long enough to sing at the twilight hour. You remember her, do you not? She still sings in the Hill Church in Hartford and her voice grows sweeter every year, I believe. It is simply exquisite, and when its clear soprano notes filled the chapel, it seemed as though the angels sang. I asked her to sing Madeline's favorite, 'One Sweetly Solemn Thought,' and she sang it as I have never heard it sung before.

"And now, Chester, the still delicate eyes are growing weary, and I am forced to end my letter. Give a world of love to Marjorie and to my dear sister, and accept a generous share for yourself. Believing me

Your truly penitent sister,
"MATILDA."

After reading the letter, Dr. Prior said aloud: "This completes my happiness, and will complete Margaret's and Marjorie's."

"I dare say the changed conditions seem a little strange to her, and I must give her time," said Margaret, softly.

But scarcely had the words passed her lips when there came a light tap upon her door.

"Come in," she called, and Marjorie opened it.

"May I come?" she asked.

"Certainly, dear; I was hoping you would do so," answered Margaret. Marjorie had never looked lovelier. She had put on a pale blue eider flannel dressing gown, and soft blue night slippers to match. Her beautiful hair, now loosened from its braids, fell far below her waist, and gave her a wonderfully child-like appearance. It seemed to Margaret as the girl stood in the doorway that she must be looking upon a vision of the angel mother; Marjorie was so like the portrait of her mother which hung in the doctor's study.

Marjorie hesitated as though not quite sure how to proceed, and Margaret, instantly divining her thoughts, held out both arms to her. Quickly crossing the room, Marjorie, with a happy little cry of: "Mamma, dear; dear mamma," fell upon her knees beside her, and was gathered into her arms.

"My own darling daughter!" said Margaret, with a happy sob, "my own to love and care for forever. Dear Father, give me strength and wisdom to fill the angel mother's place, and be to her child all that she would wish to have me."

Marjorie clasped her closer and closer, as though she could not be near enough to the heart which held so much love and tenderness for her; and Margaret held her there.

It was an exquisite picture, and Dr. Prior, coming softly upstairs an hour later, lest he disturb his dear ones, whom he supposed were sound asleep, felt his heart give a great bound as he saw them. Margaret still clasped Marjorie, whose head lay upon her breast, and gently stroked back the golden hair from her forehead, as the girl looked into her eyes as though she could never look her fill.

Dr. Prior stood watching them for several moments, reluctant to spoil the beautiful tableau; for they were unaware of his presence. Then coming up gently behind them, said, as he gathered them into his arms:

"God bless you both, 'my pearls of great price' my treasures."

..HOW TO ENTER CHRIST'S FAMILY*

The Conditions of Adoption Stated by Christ

MANY persons have thought that Christ was demanding a hard thing, when he insisted that all who aspired to be his disciples must love him better than father or mother, wife or child; but here is the complement of the demand: "Whosoever shall do the will of my Father, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother." Christ asks no more than he is willing to give. Here is a higher Gospel than the Gospel of the Kingdom, it is the Gospel of the family. Christ is the Saviour, we can never forget that. To him we owe deliverance from sin in this world, and all our hopes of the next world. He is also our King; we ought never to forget that. We owe him our allegiance and obedience. But here is another relationship, infinitely nearer and more tender. We may belong to his family. There is a tie that he regards as closer than even blood relationship, and by that tie the most insignificant of his people can be united to him. It is a most joyous, ennobling doctrine. We have people among us who plume themselves on their descent from men who fought in the Revolution, and others who can claim one of the Pilgrim Fathers as an ancestor. On the other side the Atlantic, there are people who boast of having royal blood in their veins, and others who belong to families founded by great warriors or statesmen, and all these, however poor they may be, cherish the pride of birth and glory in their high lineage. But how far above and beyond all such distinctions is this that Christ offers of identity with himself!

The principle of adoption by which this relationship is effected has its counterparts in our social life. When the girl leaves her father's house to become the wife of her lover, we hear her address his parents as her father and mother. She becomes their daughter, through her love and union with her husband. Honor or disgrace coming to a member of his family affects her, and she is partner with them, strangers as they may have been to her a few years before, in all that concerns them. Or the relationship may come through some favorite pursuit. A boy or girl may become a musician, or an artist. If there is genius, the love of such a pursuit may become a passion. The youthful aspirant almost worships the men who have distinguished themselves in that particular pursuit. The people at home have no such enthusiasm, and the young genius gradually drifts away from the old intimacy and confidential relationship. The brother and sister are superseded by the companions who have the same tastes and aspirations, and though family love may survive, the real comrades are those who have community in the common occupation. In the secret revolutionary societies of Europe such bonds are very strongly marked. The Carbonari of Italy and the Nihilists of Russia are examples of many others. A young man or a young woman, entering such societies, assumes obligations closer than any family tie. The devotion to some political ideal becomes so enthusiastic, that the members are drawn together by their common danger and their common efforts and sacrifices, and feel for one another an affection far stronger than they ever had to members of their families. Patriotism has a similar effect. It is not long since a distinguished politician, who had been born in Europe and was naturalized here, claimed a higher rank than the native American, on the ground that while the native American had no volition in his citizenship, the naturalized citizen was a citizen by choice.

So there is nothing incomprehensible in the tie of relationship which Christ proposes. He whose sole object in life was to do the will of his Father is prepared to recognize as his brother, his sister, or his mother, any who have adopted the same rule in their humble lives. The light of the lowly candle which illumines

the cabin is one in essence with the sun that lights the world. Christ's true followers become partakers of his nature, and in their order are one with him. Thus the conditions of such illustrious union become a question of paramount importance, and Christ reduces them to one. True, it is comprehensive, and implies other conditions that are not specified. Faith, and love, and loyalty are comprehended in it; but it is remarkable for its singleness of statement. "He that doeth the will," is a very practical test. No particular branch of the church is indicated; no rite is imposed, not even the creed, of which in these days we make so much, is defined. It is a question of life and conduct. We know that life and conduct are based on principle, and that right acting proceeds from right thinking; but the test is, after all, on the outward manifestation of the inward life. How important then that we learn how to perceive what is the will of God! In a general sense we know, of course, that the will of God is our sanctification, but that process differs in individual lives and we must be ready to recognize the means by which in our own lives that end is to be achieved, and to submit, even when they are painful. Then, too, there is a will of God as to our actions and our purposes. It involves a consecrated life. One thing is clear, and that should be the keynote to all our endeavor, if to do the will of God admits us into the family of Christ, it should be the supreme object of life to know that will and to do it.

The Newsboy Choirmaster

AT a recent high-class concert in New York City, the vast audience was fairly captivated by a new and unusually rich-voiced singer. Gustav J. Talleur received unstinted applause. He was the success of the evening; yet few realized what price he had paid in money, practice, patience, for that success—the skill that has captured that audience. Few knew that they were listening to a former newsboy, who had first made his mellow, rich voice strong and resonant by shouting out: "Ere's your 'Erald, Times, Tribune, Sun.'"

G. J. TALLEUR
The Newsboy Choir-singer

Mr. Talleur, now in his musical prime, was born thirty years ago in New York. He was educated in the public schools. Before school and after—far into the night—passers-by at Broadway and Forty-second street would see a stalwart little fellow, with a huge bundle of papers under his arm, crying out the latest news. The rich quaver of his voice attracted the attention of many, who would enter into conversation with him just to hear him articulate sentences; and then, as they passed on, would think "what a singer is shouting away his breath! If only the lad had a chance!"

One morning he attracted the attention of a choirmaster on his way to church, who said he wanted some boys for a choir, and asked Gustav if he would not come along and learn to be a singer; and so young Talleur found the first stepping-stone to the choir of the Brick Church, on Fifth avenue, where he has been singing for the last three years. While crying the papers had not hurt his voice, but had made it robust, it needed training. Gustav practiced conscientiously and made a scientific study of church music. From his mother, who had rare musical talent (as indeed had the whole Talleur family), he had inherited an ardent love for singing and he was an enthusiastic scholar.

After his conversion in the Universal Evangelical Church, he fully consecrated his talent to his Saviour, and his voice has often been heard at conferences and revival meetings; and frequently at temperance gatherings, for he is a staunch teetotaler and prohibitionist. He organizes a choir that now sings in the Universal Church, and in which he is the belated leader. He formed also the "Twenty-Century Quartette," and is at the head of a Choral Union. He believes in a Gospel that can be sung the world over. He likes to sing it in churches and mission houses. He often refers to his newsboy experiences, and says that crying the paper in the open air was good for his voice, and that it gave him a good start in life. He likes to help others, even as he was helped. He believes with David that God's House should be filled with song and praise.

WOULDN'T SELL IT.

Her Pure and Clear Complexion No Other Sale.

A Cornell girl was put on a Grape-Nuts diet and discovered some facts. She says: "While a student at Cornell I suffered from improper diet. The banquets and other social functions—with their rich refreshments—served to completely upset a stomach already weak from rich pastry, highly seasoned meats, and confections furnished by loving parents at home."

I became irritable, nervous, and my appetite became more and more capricious. Only rich, highly seasoned food suited me, and this further wrecked my health. I was sallow, having lost my pink and white complexion. I became dull eyed and dull brained, the victim of agonizing dyspepsia and intestinal trouble.

I was finally forced to leave school and came home an irritable, wretchedly sick girl. The plainest food disagreed with me, I bade fair to starve to death, when a physician advised my physician to put me on Grape-Nuts Food diet. To make a long story short, the transformation from wretched illness to good health was marvelous. I like the new food so well, and it agreed with my tortured stomach perfectly, regulated my bowels, my headaches left, and the color of my skin gradually grew better. In 8 months I am myself rosy, plump and strong.

I would not sell my clear complexion, bright eyes and general good feeling for the slightest, richest mess of Delmonican pottage.

I returned to Cornell, finished my course, and can now study, think and live. The food that enabled me to regain my health shall never be forgotten. Name furnished by Elum Cereal Co., Ltd., at Battle Creek, Mich.

TOOK CHRIST INTO THEIR LIVES

HOW THE REV. DR. WILLIAM V. KELLY, AND MRS. MARY E. CARTLAND CAME TO THE SAVIOUR.

BY REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D.

ONE of the scholarly leaders of modern Christianity, whose strong and cultivated mind, and whose gentle and pure Christian life are a benediction to multitudes, is the Rev. Dr. William V. Kelly, for many years a popular pastor, and at present editor of The Methodist Review. Dr. Kelly says that the two men to whom his conversion was most directly due were his father and Dr. Isaac W. Wiley, at the time president of the Pennington Seminary, and afterwards Bishop. William Kelly was brought up in a very pure Christian atmosphere, and he says, that so long as he was at home there was little opportunity for him to know anything but good. But upon being sent away to boarding-school, at Pennington, N. J., at the age of thirteen, the moral principles instilled into his childish heart at home were put to many severe tests though the character of some of his associates. There were not a few many students in the seminary who were irreligious, but among those to whom young Kelly was greatly drawn personally were two boys who showed no respect for religion. Their influence on him was not good. It resulted in an outbursting sin, but he became fully conscious that his association with them was a sort of disloyalty to his parents, and to the kind of training he had had at home. The knowledge that God and his parents must disapprove of him, became a burden to him. In the chapel talks and prayers of the principal, Dr. Wiley, searched his heart and troubled his conscience. This was his condition when vacation time came, the winter he was fifteen years old.

MRS. M. E. CARTLAND

Going home for the vacation, he found himself in the midst of a revival then proceeding in his father's church. He made no resistance, but welcomed the opportunity to make publicly a full surrender of himself to God. Coming home troubled and ill at ease, he wanted to be at peace with God and his own soul. Though the instructions heard from his eldest years, he knew the terms upon which he could have peace with God through Jesus Christ. With repentance, confession and consecration, he made the surrender, side by side with his only sister. The next Sabbath morning, his father received the son and the daughter—all the children he had—into his church. A few days later, on William's return to the seminary, the father transferred him a certificate to the Pennington Church. His outward life was changed by dropping the irreligious associations which had shamed him in secret, and by an earnest active participation in all the religious work connected with the school. His inward life was altered in its motives, and his conviction that the one supreme question had been decided and settled right, filled his heart with a great and growing peace. The intellectual awakening and peace were as great as was the moral inspiration toward the loftiest ideals. A noble beginning for a noble career!

It has seemed to me appropriate to join with the conversion of Dr. Kelly, this story of a sweet Quaker conversion, which is the fountain of the earnest and gracious life of service that has characterized the career of Mrs. Mary E. Cartland, leader of the temperance hosts in North Carolina. I think I must let Mrs. Cartland tell the unique and interesting story in her own words. She says:

startling or unusual. Of Orthodox Quaker parentage, the quiet peaceful lives of my father and mother, together with the direct influence of the Holy Spirit upon my heart, were the silent influences that drew me to the Saviour. My childhood days were spent in a boarding-school of which my father and mother were superintendent and matron. I remember, when about ten years of age, that one night my little room-mate and I became troubled, because we felt we were not Christians. In my distress, I went to my mother and asked her to forgive me. She remembered no act of disobedience, neither did I; but she re-assured me by saying she would forgive me, so I returned to my bed comforted, and was soon asleep. For some time after this I felt a longing to do right, that I might be acceptable to my Heavenly Father; but as time wore on, I became less thoughtful. But the Holy Spirit again came to me at the age of fourteen, while sitting in a quiet friends' meeting. I was melted to tears. I wished that a certain dear old lady would pray.

Usually I did not enjoy hearing her supplications. Scarcely had I felt the desire before she knelt in prayer. I failed then to publicly confess how precious the Lord Jesus was to my soul, and so I lived without the joy which should have been mine, though with steadfast faith for two years, when a beloved minister came to our community on a religious visit. Under his ministry, this truth was firmly impressed upon my mind: "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." I confessed before the people my faith in Christ; joy came into my soul, and since then I have been learning more and more of the blessedness of following the meek and lowly Jesus."

ANSWERED PRAYERS

Mrs. A. K. McC., New Castle, Calif., writes:

I can truly say the Lord will answer prayer. I have gone to the Lord many a time with a sad heart and he would make me glad.

V. G., Pittsburg, Pa., writes:

I wish to add my testimony to that of many others in your columns. I know from personal experience that God is an answerer of prayer, not only for spiritual blessings, but also for temporal needs.

C. E. M., Col. Falls, Mont., writes:

There was one thing which kept us from being happy. I prayed for it to be removed, and it was.

A. C. M., Picton, Tex., writes:

I have waited months for answer to one prayer, and been almost discouraged at times; but, thank God, in his own good time the answer came.

M. B. B., Santa Barbara, Calif., writes:

I want to acknowledge the Lord's care of me coming this long journey from Chelsea, Mass., to Santa Barbara. I have a sister, an invalid, who has lived here twenty-two years. I am a widow, over sixty years old and not used to traveling. It was quite an undertaking for me. All my children, save one son, are safe at home—our heavenly home.

Reader San Francisco, Calif., writes:

My husband and I prayed long and earnestly that God might grant our petition, when from man's standpoint it seemed impossible. He has heard and answered our prayer, as he ever does those who cry to him in trouble.

Mrs. W. F. H., Liberty, Ind., writes:

I want to acknowledge God's goodness in answer to my prayer in behalf of our beloved minister.

Mrs. J. P. F., Montpelier, Vt., writes:

For many years when about to begin a new piece of work, I have asked the Lord to bless that work, and I have found him better than my fears. I feel that we should ask God's blessing upon all that we do, just as we ask his blessing upon our food; and we should return thanks for his help in our work, as we return thanks to him for meat and drink.

COFFEE TOPERS

Get Saturated With Caffeine.

When a person has used coffee for a number of years and gradually declined in health, it is time the coffee should be left off in order to see whether or not that has been the cause of the trouble.

A lady in Huntsville, Ala., Mrs. S. M. Brazier, says she used coffee for about 40 years, and for the past 20 years was troubled with stomach trouble. "I have been treated by many physicians but all in vain. Everything failed to perfect and give permanent relief. Was prostrated for some time, and came near dying. When I recovered sufficiently to partake of food and drink I tried coffee again and it soured on my stomach."

I finally concluded coffee was the cause of my troubles and stopped using it. I tried tea and then milk in its place, but neither agreed with me, then I commenced using Postum Food Coffee. I had it properly made and it was very pleasing to the taste.

I have now used it four months, and my health is so greatly improved that I can eat almost anything I want and can sleep well, whereas, before, I suffered for years with insomnia.

I have found the cause of my troubles and a way to get rid of them. You can depend upon it I appreciate Postum."

THE SUNSHINERS' CONVENTION

NATURALLY those who could not go to the annual reception of the International Sunshine Society are desirous to hear about it. From 12 noon to 2.30 P.M., May 2, the parlors of the Hotel Savoy, New York, were filled to overflowing with guests, delegates and committee members. At 2.30 sharp, Mrs. Cynthia Westover Alden, the President-General, called the meeting to order. One thousand and fifty-nine branches reported, either by a delegate or by written report of the year's work. For two hours and a half the delegates listened to the interesting details of work done by the different Sunshine divisions. Every State in the Union but Nevada is organized for Sunshine work. The new Sunshine year begins, June 1, and branch work will be opened with the branches that have celebrated their International Day and thereby paid their dues for the year. As new branches become enrolled, they will be added to the branch enrollment, and all members to the general enrollment at headquarters.

Mrs. Alden stated, among other things, that over fifty thousand members are now enrolled at headquarters and branch presidents are still sending in their lists. A rough estimate, including the Baptist Juniors, makes the membership one hundred thousand or more. The officers, from the President-General down, all give their time and labor; stenographers alone are paid for their services, and the main expenses are embodied in the stamp and expressage account. Branches must not lose sight of the fact, that in the service of the express companies and of the post-office department we reach the isolated members from Maine to California.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Branch will be divided into circles, these circles are to report to Branch President Parsons, she in turn, to the President-General. Every week members will tell each other their plans and benefit by this "passing on" of individual ways of spreading good cheer.

H. M. Douglas, of West Haven, who belongs to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Branch, tells of a "Sunshine Garden" there. This can be copied, in some form or other, by every invalid in our different circles. He says:

THE SUNSHINE GARDEN

A friend, who has been shut in for the past six months, was much interested in the recent article in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD on the work of the Sunshine Society. She has just received a miniature garden, so beautiful and cheering to an invalid, yet so easy of construction that I must try to "pass it on" by description, hoping that many may be moved to make such a little Paradise of sunshine for some one.

The garden wall is eight inches long, one and a half inches high. It is truly the up-turned edge of a square of bark, stripped from a white birch tree. The outside has the delicate salmon tint of the inner layers. The corners are joined by a bow of green. Just inside of each corner is a baby pine swaying very softly to the breeze. The garden turf is soft, green moss, its fruit looking like grain. Masses of blooming hepaticas or pasque flowers fill the enclosure. They are the only forest flowers to be had for planting so early. Blue, pale purple, cream and white make a pleasing variety of color. A few small ferns, with leaves from foliage plants, furnish the green. Here and there, in open spaces, are snail shells. So there is a complete and delightful woodland scene, which may easily find a place upon the bed, bringing the charms of nature, to solace many a tedious hour.

Sunshine Through the Mail

The International Secretary, Mrs. Hans S. Beattie, told the Convention of the great amount of mail carried on in Sunshine—sometimes two thousand letters a week. By letter writing, more good cheer is done than any one outside of the regular daily work would ever imagine as possible.

This reminds me that I want to tell you of a young girl, only twenty-two years old. She lives right in the heart of a great city, yet she must depend wholly on letters for her amusement, and comfort, too. She is confined to one room all the time, and because of extreme nervousness is allowed few visitors. Her whole sunshine, therefore, has been to watch and wait for the postman. Her keenest delight is in reading and writing letters, though she can raise neither hand to her head—cannot move only when lifted. For seven years she has kept a cheery heart. When once dressed and put in her rocking-chair, she can read and write for hours every day. She has written me to find out what Sunshine is. Now is the chance for our members to prove to her that Sunshine is the most beautiful thought conceived and ever carried out. Although it took her two days to write her letter to me, she says she enjoyed it, because she knew she would get an answer.

Another letter from Noeton, Tennessee, written by Mrs. Emily A. Bradshaw, eighty-three years old, tells that she is a cripple from rheumatism—a shut-in—but gets much Sunshine out of knitting when her "fingers do not ache too much." She modestly asks for a few papers to read.

There is a call for Sunshine from a small family, consisting of a mother, father and three children, in Omega, Kingfisher County, Oklahoma Territory. It is almost impossible for them to furnish the books and papers necessary for the education of the children. They live in the country, thirteen miles away from a church. Will not some mother write to this mother and see what she can do to make her life the least bit more sunshiny?

Many beautiful stories were told by delegates from all parts of the country. Several Sunshine homes for the aged are being built; Sunshine clubhouses are being opened; Sunshine reading-rooms for newsboys, Sunshine libraries are being annexed to churches, particularly in the country. There are one or two churches supported by Sunshine, and also several schools. All the larger clubs have Sunshine committees. Sunday Schools have joined Sunshine in a body, each class being a circle of the Sunday School branch.

Thanks are due to the many members who responded to the call in the issue of May 1. We also wish to thank B. F. P. for her generous gift, which will spread a great deal of sunshine.

GOD'S MESSAGE

GOD is trying to speak with me, and I am trying to hear;
But the angry roar of an angry sea
Has told my soul that it is not free;
And my strange, imperfect ear
Has only caught, on the breast of day,
The strain of a song that is far away—
So I sit and listen and humbly pray,
For God is near.

God is trying to speak with me, and I am trying to hear.
Away with the gold that is won by death
Of mind and body. (O Nazareth!
O living, breathing tear!)
Away, away with the realist's hand,
Away with the tyrants that slave the land,
For the heart must sing and the stars command.

(Great God is near.)
And soothe and comfort the voice of pain,
Man's Eden must return again,
And the Christ that suffered must live and reign.
(Great God is near.)
And hush and silence the battle's din—
And lift forever the mists of sin
That veil the wealth of the God within.
(Great God is near.)
And strive, oh, strive to be brave and true;
The world is dying of me and you,
The deeds undone that we both might do.
(Great God is near.)

DIED FULL OF YEARS AND HONORS

An event which touched the hearts of many besides those who knew her personally, was the death of Mrs. Mary Sankey, mother of Ira D. Sankey, the world's great evangelist of song. On May 2, full of years and honors, she passed peacefully away at her home in New Castle, Pa. Mrs. Sankey

THE LATE MRS. MARY SANKEY
Mother of Ira D. Sankey reached the great age of ninety. When she was born, Western Pennsylvania was a dense wilderness. Her father, John Leeper, was an early settler. She grew up in the place of her birth, among hewn people, and at nineteen married Ira D. Sankey, who, some thirty years after his marriage, as a member of the Legislature, assisted in the passage of the bill organizing Lawrence County. He died several years ago. Of the eleven sons and daughters born to them but two survive, the Gospel singer and his brother, Wilson H. Sankey, of Brooklyn, N. Y. Mrs. Sankey was a member of the Methodist Church, and took an active interest in all good works and in the temperance cause. She filled with signal efficiency and devotion the sacred offices of wife and mother. In the letter announcing his bereavement to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Mr. Ira D. Sankey pays the beautiful tribute to his mother: "It was she who first taught me to sing the songs of Zion, and, by her beautiful Christian life and example, I was led to devote my life to the cause of Christ." "Think of how much good the world owes to this mother! How many souls have been brought to Christ through Sankey's singing! How many aching, despairing ones have found comfort in the promises of Zion, which reached their hearts through his songs, but had never touched them else! Mothers, you do not realize what great events, what issues for the race, hang on your being simply the good Christian woman, wife and mother, living the true life before your children until they, feeling its beauty, are ready to bring their talents, time and service as glad gifts to Him who is that life's inspiration.

A Tribute in Rhyme
A poetical friend sends us this clever and appropriate testimonial to the value of the Letter Testament:
Testament received to-day,
And with thanks, I now would say,
How can you sell one so nice,
For so moderate a price?
None but CHRISTIAN HERALD could,
None but CHRISTIAN HERALD would,
With its edges red and gold,
All so lovely to behold;
Binding good and types so plain,
Ne'er the like you'll see again,
All the words that Jesus said,
In this Testament are red;
Very sure to catch the eye,
When to search for them we try,
May THE CHRISTIAN HERALD kind,
Many new subscribers find,
And its editors be blessed,
With the gifts that are the best.

Greater New York Map AN OBJECT LESSON

IT TELLS ITS OWN STORY and shows the immense possibilities of Greater New York's real estate values.

In Greater New York.

Your Round Trip to New York Free

This Map will convince every thinking man and woman in America that our announcement embodies a proposition never equalled in the history of this country and one which in the very nature of New York's present conditions, and the limited area of Brooklyn itself can never again occur.

NOTE THE MARVELOUS COMPARISON! Lots at 100th Street, $20,000 to $75,000 each; Lots at Rugby, $420. The same distance; the same running time; the same street-car fare (5 cents); the same city government, schools, police, and fire protection. What creates the difference? Simply this: that before Consolidation, Brooklyn had a provincial government and wretched transportation facilities. Consolidation into one city government, and equal transportation facilities existing to-day MUST ultimately equalize the value of property equally accessible. This is an axiom—a self-evident truth.

No such opportunity since New York began its wonderful growth as a world metropolis.

The Astors, even, had no such combination of circumstances to operate in their behalf, as two years have accomplished greater changes than a decade did in those days. Every lot is guaranteed to increase 25 per cent. during the first year—an increase equaling your first year's payments—and $2,000,000 insures your purchase.

Wood, Harmon & Co., the largest, most responsible, and most successful Real Estate Company in the world, are so positive that the values of their lots will increase 25 per cent. during the year 1901, that they will guarantee this increase to any investor, in case they cannot show it they agree to return all money paid them, with 6 per cent. interest. This guarantee, however, should be understood; and is fully explained below.

We have one of the grandest opportunities of a lifetime for the small investor to make money—we give as good security as the strongest savings bank, and, instead of the 4 per cent. interest on deposits, we can guarantee 25 per cent. We thoroughly believe the lot which we now sell for $420 will in 10 years bring $4,000, in 20 years from $20,000 upwards. If you will carefully study this communication, you will see our reasons.

Our wealthiest families, like the Astors, have made their money from the increase in value of New York real estate. New York City property has increased in value more than that of any other place in the world, because of its immense growth in population and this growth is still going on—in fact, at the present time we are starting on a new and greater era than ever before known in New York's history. Let us see:—

New York City, as every one knows, is crowded to the bursting point. Since the consolidation of New York and Brooklyn, the increased facilities of rapid transit by bridge, trolley and elevated have turned the immense tide of increased population Brooklynward. The public have been quick to recognize this as the only and the perfect solution of the problem, and Brooklyn is receiving a tremendous influx from overcrowded New York City. As a result, Brooklyn Bridge has been so severely taxed that new bridges are being built (one of which is nearly completed) and tunnels are being dug beneath the East River. Not only is Brooklyn Borough the only section in which New York can grow, but property in Old New York City, the same distance from City Hall (as our map clearly shows) would cost 20 to 100 times the money.

WHY WE INVESTED HERE.

As Real Estate is our business, we study the conditions existing or possible in the various cities of the United States. We have aided in the development of 25 of these cities, and have opened 75 distinct properties. After carefully studying New York 12 years before purchase, we, in 1888, saw the immense possible advancement in values, and before the consolidation of New York and Brooklyn—before the Rapid Transit had made Brooklyn so accessible—we bought 1,100 acres of the choicest land in Brooklyn, which is now in the heart of that Borough, only 3½ miles from Brooklyn Bridge, and only 35 minutes from New York City Hall. We invested over $2,000,000 in this land, and are developing properties in the most beautiful manner of any about New York. The growth of the city, together with our improvements, has increased the value of this property over 25 per cent. since a year ago, and we feel so sure that the increase will be at least the same that we assume the risk of guaranteeing it for the next year.

HERE'S OUR PROPOSITION FOR YOU.

Our property is improved in exact accordance with City Specifications. Streets, 60, 80 and 100 feet wide, built to city grade, bordered on each side by 5 feet granolithic cement walks, flower beds and shrubbery, city water, gas, etc., all at our expense. For $10 down, and $6 per month until paid for, we sell you a regular New York City lot, subject to the following guarantees from us:—

If, at the expiration of the year 1901, this lot is not worth $500, based on the price at which our salesmen will then be selling similar lots, we will refund all of the money you have paid us, with 6 per cent. interest additional.

If you should die at any time before payments have been completed, we will give to your heirs a deed to the lot without further cost.

If you should get out of employment or be sick, you will not forfeit the land.

Titles are guaranteed to us by the Title Guarantee & Trust Co. of New York.

You will note three distinct points of advantage in this proposition. First, it is a Life Insurance for your family. Second, it enables you to pay in small sums as you would in your savings bank, and cannot cramp you; and, Third, it enables you to participate in the great growth of values in New York real estate, which are due to natural conditions; furthermore, the three advantages are absolutely without risk.

OUR GUARANTEE OF INCREASE.

Our guarantee of 25 per cent. increase in one year in the value of lots is a simple one, and should not be misunderstood or misconstrued. It means, that the regular prices publicly marked on our property (every unsold lot being plainly tagged and priced), and at which our large corps of salesmen will be then selling these lots for ourselves and our customers, will be 25 per cent. in excess of the prices at which we now offer them.

IT DOES NOT MEAN, that we can or will assume the responsibility of selling customers' lots, except incidental to our business of development, or that we will take them off their hands; this obviously would be impossible in the great work of development we are undertaking. This is intended as a straight business agreement of an honest increase in value, and that only.

N.B.—Our Non-Forfeiture Agreement prevents the loss of your lot through misfortune.

FREE TRIP TO NEW YORK.

As a further guarantee of good faith, we agree with all persons living East of Chicago to pay you in cash the cost of your railroad fare to New York and return, if you visit our property and find one word of this advertisement a misrepresentation; or, in case you buy, to credit cost of your railroad fare on your purchase; to those living farther away than Chicago we will pay that proportion equal to cost of fare to Chicago and return. We would advise you, if you are satisfied, to send first payment, $10 in cash, at our risk, immediately, and we will select the very best available lot for you. Or, if you desire further particulars, to write immediately for maps, details and information. It will cost you nothing to find out and thoroughly satisfy yourself—we solicit closest investigation. References by hundreds—our reputation is national.

MAKE OUR OFFICES YOUR HEADQUARTERS.

A cordial invitation is extended to all strangers to make their headquarters with us when they come to New York City. Our offices occupy 9 rooms—nearly the entire 6th floor of the handsome Home Life Building, opposite City Hall. One of these rooms is fitted up expressly as a library and rest room for the convenience and comfort of our out-of-town customers, or any other visitors to New York, to whom we can be of service. It is equipped with the latest magazines, books, writing materials, etc. Have your mail directed in our care, drop in for rest, letter-writing, package-checking, directions about the city, or any desired information. Questions of the Week

1. In what sense may education be regarded as an obstacle to the spiritual life of an individual or a community?

Education may become an obstacle to spiritual life when it is exclusively intellectual, and no regard is paid to moral improvement. One should cultivate the mind—the more the better; at the same time one's moral relations should not be ignored, and there is danger of this whenever the purely intellectual is predominant. The English Deist, of Hume's class, is a fair representative of the purely intellectual system of training. There is a tendency in scholars to over-estimate the benefits of education. Many a man in the humble walks of life is better equipped morally than the best educated of men, and this is because he does not become warped or "set up" by his mere educational acquirements, as the better educated man may be. Ignorance is sometimes the "mother of devotion."

DANIEL HOLMES.

Education may be regarded as an obstacle to spiritual life when it is a one-sided affair, pertaining only to the head. It takes two things to make a truly great man: a great head and a great heart; two things to make a truly educated man: book learning and spiritual insight. This latter was what Christ meant when he said: "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise." This spiritual insight comes with the fear of the Lord which is the beginning of wisdom, and the knowledge of the Holy, which is understanding. One of the saddest experiences of my life has been my acquaintance with a college graduate, whose knowledge of Greek and Latin and the sciences has made him arrogant and self-righteous. With all his getting he has never really gotten understanding.

2. What is the best rule for a business man to follow to prevent the love of gain from absorbing his attention to such an extent that it prevents spiritual growth?

In the case supposed, there is a consciousness of danger of the undue love of gain, and that itself is one important safeguard against the evil that is apprehended. Along with the spirit of watchfulness and prayer that will thus be naturally called forth, two other definite lines of conduct might be followed with good results. First, the person in question might undertake some definite Christian work, to which he would be bound to give a stated portion of his time, and if possible not on Sundays only, but on week days as well. There might thus be begotten and sustained in him such an interest in spiritual things as would largely neutralize the mere love of gain. Then he might also make it a matter of conscience to dedicate a stated proportion of his income to Christian enterprises. Such a course, even if painful at first, might be persevered in until it becomes a pleasure, and thus the love of gain would be driven out by "the expulsive power of a new affection."

JOSEPH HAMILTON.

The best and only rule to follow is, secretly and at stated times in the day, and every day in the year, to seek to have communion with God by the reading of his Word, and by prayer. If the believing business man may be a man having a family, he will have each day, night and morning, family worship. He will it is needful not only that God should hear our voice in prayer, but that we should hear his voice in his Word. The Spirit delights to open up to us the Scriptures, but if we do not read them he comes to our hearts and finds nothing there to work upon. Better let every other book go, if need be, than the one Book, infinite, divine.

AMELIA HOYT.

Yes. The Bible is a great help, but it is not indispensable to Christian living. Some true and faithful Christians have had no Bible. Some could not read. Their knowledge of God, of truth, of duty was obtained from sermons and from conversations with other pious souls. The history of modern missions furnishes many an example of faithful Christians who could not read. If one in heathen lands may live the Christian life without reading the Bible, how much more may one so live in Christian lands. Bible reading does not necessarily promote growth in grace. It is not reading the Bible, it is not studying it, that helps one in his Christian life. It is how stituents. He is not chosen to represent self merely, but, as a rule, on account of ability to know the needs of his district work for the interest of those whom he represents. New issues come up, which are not before the people at the time of his election, but he is still representing the people. His judgment may differ from that of his ple, but merely to vote as he thinks, would be selfish; and, besides, it would not be fair representation of his constituents. Self must be put aside in the consideration of a higher duty, namely, to serve those whom he represents.

5. Which is the more desirable—the ceaseless change in dress now imposed upon both sexes by fashion, or a fixed national style, graceful and hygienic, and suited to the climate and the people?

The latter. Dress that fashion decrees violates common sense and sometimes even common decency. Many seem to believe in the old saying, "Out of the fashion, out of the world," and as a result of obeying this they are choked by high collars, or have their breath squeezed out of them by clothing at Fashion says should be skin-tight. One orders a short cut, a train six feet long, a hoop, a balloon-sleeve or no sleeve at all, so small that one can scarce get into it, she is obsequiously obeyed by countless thousands of men and women. Women are injured more by the desire to be in fashion than by the cut of a skirt or the style of a collar is of more importance than the strength of a virtue or the form of a religion. They consult the fashion plates oftener than their Bibles, speak of them oftener than of virtues, and follow style closer than they follow their Saviour.

LORA D. PETEFIELD.

The fixed national style. As imposed by fashion dress is too expensive, is not suited to the different climates, is lacking in element simplicity, fosters class distinctions; especially in the case of woman is not hygienic and is lacking in comfort. A fixed national style selected with a view to comfort and beauty would simplify the problem of dress, save more time for thought or more important questions. While leaving room for variety and personal taste, it would go a long way towards abolishing the caste of dress.

Arthur, Cincinnati, O. When was the first postal card issued by the United States?

The first issue of postal cards by our government was May 1, 1873, under Act of Congress, approved June 8, 1872. It was 3 1/2 inches. The one cent stamp, printed on the upper right hand, was a profile bust of the Goddess of Liberty, with the words "U. S. postage" above and "One Cent" below.

Reader. To "pass the Rubicon" is to take a measure from which it is impossible to recede. Thus, when the Austrians, in 1859, passed the Ticino, the act was a declaration of war against Sardinia, and, in 1866, when the Italians passed the Adige, it was a declaration of war against Austria. The Rubicon was a small river separating ancient Italy from Cisalpine Gaul (the province allotted to Julius Caesar). When Caesar crossed this stream, he passed beyond the limits of his own province, and became an invader of Italy.

An Exceptional Opportunity

ANYONE, not now a subscriber, wishing to avail himself of the advantages of a six months' trial order, on the terms set forth on pages 515 to 518 of this issue, may fill out one of the coupons and send it, accompanied by 25 cents, to this office, and it will afford us pleasure to enter his name accordingly. It is our desire to introduce THE CHRISTIAN HERALD into every Christian home where a religious paper is not now regularly received.

The monopoly of large circulations need not, in a Christian community, be necessarily accorded to secular papers, and there is no valid reason why a clean, beautifully illustrated, carefully edited, well printed journal like THE CHRISTIAN HERALD should not stand in the front rank or, even, take the lead. Several of the popular magazines of the day are nearing the million mark. Why should we not have our million? We represent the best Cause in the world! With a million subscribers we could do more for this cause in this country than any other known agency.

This nation can work wonders. It can be the means of converting the whole world. The eyes of other nations are upon it as at no previous time in its history. If it upholds the Banner of the Cross, its beneficent influence will be felt to the very ends of the earth. A larger circulation of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will contribute to this result, and the present movement is, consequently, in the right direction. The friends we are now putting on our list will soon appreciate the fact that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is indeed what has been claimed for it, the brightest and best family paper in the world, and that it is cheaper at any price than many other publications which they must hesitate to introduce into their home. In due time they will feel in their hearts the effect of the soul-inspiring messages from all parts of the earth, which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD voices each week, and before long their interest will be thoroughly aroused in behalf of the Master's cause, and their active co-operation secured for the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom.

His business will become to him the Lord's business, which he will conduct not for himself, but for the Lord. All that he does will be done religiously, as the servant and follower of the Lord Jesus, who has committed to him certain talents, wherewith he is to trade, and for which he will require an account. So his gains or losses will be the Lord's gains, and given to him, or the Lord's losses, shared and borne by him.

3. Can a normal man or woman, in a civilized and enlightened community, live a Christian life without reading the Bible?

Can a normal man or woman live without eating food? Certainly, for a while, using up the reserve force of the system, but it is a mere question of time when that will have given out and starvation be the sequel. So one may live a Christian life for a while without reading the Bible, subsisting on the memory of what has been read in the past; but sooner or later, without fresh daily manna, one will starve. True, we may communicate with God in prayer without Bible-reading, but the communion soon becomes one-sided, for one studies it, how much he makes his own, how much of it he lives. It is devotional study that helps. The Bible is digested by prayer and meditation.

4. When a legislator and his constituents differ in opinion about some proposed enactment, which was not under consideration when he was elected, ought he to vote according to his judgment, or according to the wishes of the people who elected him?

A legislator is not chosen by the people to be their mouthpiece, but is elected because considered competent. Prior to his election, the expression of his judgment concerning proposed enactments coincided with the common opinion of a number of citizens; and they, measuring by the standard they possessed, deemed him worthy of support. From this it follows: he is not elected to promote certain enactments because he is believed to be capable of so doing, but because his opinions are accepted as evidence of his ability; therefore, under all circumstances, he is morally bound to follow his individual judgment, and is accountable to no one save God. This view reaches the true base of representative governments like our own, in which all classes of society are represented as men, not as ideas; and in which the masses do not rule, but choose who shall.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN THE WORLD'S MOST DENSELY PEOPLED DISTRICT

BY FLORENCE CLINTON SUTRO

SOME six years ago, there appeared in these columns (and in fact, in almost all the journals, secular and religious, in this country and in many abroad), an account of how the Bishop of New York had left his palatial home, and had elected to spend a summer vacation, which might have been pleasantly and restfully employed at mountain or seashore, in living and laboring among the poor, at a downtown, East Side mission, performing, during his residence there, the ordinary duties that fall to the lot of the humble rector of a needy, poverty-stricken parish. At that time, it was stated of this mission—now well known as the Pro-Cathedral and Church Settlement—that it was the centre of the most densely populated district of the world, over 350,000 souls inhabiting the surrounding square mile of territory. The present pastor, Rev. Mr. Paddock, wrote in 1899: "In the block opposite us there are almost 300 souls. I estimated that within a radius of one hundred yards of my study, there are 10,000 people, and that tens of thousands in our district are in a great measure dependent on us if they receive a Christian teaching at all." There can hardly be, then, in a New York a more fruitful sections of the great metropolis), bringing members of the congregation to church. Quite a number of years ago, the old weather-beaten church, which had been standing so long, was condemned as unsafe. Then, as most members of the parish as it had been had moved up town, the Church of the Epiphany was rebuilt uptown, on the corner of Lexington Avenue and Thirty-fifth street, where it stands at present. On its walls is the tablet to Rev. Locke Jones, D.D., who is yet most lovingly remembered. He was founder of the old church on Stanton street, "brought up these people on the East Side, as it were," says Mr. Paddock, "lived and labored among them for many years, and died in harness."

When the parent church moved up-town, there were lander gave to the tenement section of the upper West Side. For awhile, Epiphany House, as the relic of the old church was called, seems to have been run as an independent mission; then St. George's Church adopted it as one of its chapels. In 1890, it really started on its very aggressive modern settlement lines, when Mr. Charles James Wills, a layman, and an enthusiastic member of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, came down with his wife to Epiphany House as its head, and lived there. In less than two years he was dead; work killed him. But the impetus which he gave to the mission did not perish with him, and the example which he set lived on. People had become interested in every direction in the work, then one of the very first settlements in this country.

When St. George's decided to give up the mission, Bishop Potter took it and made himself responsible.

Thus the old historic church—the first free church of its denomination in New York, and in turn one of the first settlements in the country—became, so far as the visitor knows, the first Bishop's Church in a tenement district. When the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, now in process of erection, shall field of labor than this; and among the great city's uniform and multitudinous religio-social movements it occupies a position of more unique and commanding interest, by reason of past history and present office, than the Pro-Cathedral, 330 Stanton street,—the Bishop's Church in the slums.

The institution now carrying this distinction began many years ago as the Church of the Epiphany. It is, as it has always been, a free church; it was, in fact, the first free Protestant Episcopal Church in the city. Of course, in the old days, it appealed to a very different class from those who are drawn to it now. It was nearer outside of the city limits then—on the outskirts, as it were. Houses had grass plots in front of them; streets were lined with trees; on Sundays, carriages drove up from outlying districts (now closely-built up men and women of wealth and influence who said that the work on Stanton street should go on. Through their enterprise and generosity the present building was erected; it is a substantial brick structure, accommodating institutional as well as religious features, commodious enough in its day, and even at present large enough for any ordinary work, but totally inadequate for the extraordinary demands made upon it.

Several years ago, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD published an account of the great free institutional Church of the Holy Trinity, built on Eighty-eighth street, through the generosity of Miss Rhinelander; it is not amiss to recur to that now, and suggest that some New York millionaire could not raise a nobler monument to himself than to replace the present cramped abode of the Pro-Cathedral by such a structure as Miss Rhine-stand complete, noble and beautiful on Morningside Heights, overlooking the lordly Hudson, and the Pro-Cathedral shall be the Cathedral Mission only, it will still hold its own in municipal heart and history. It will fill, too, if anything, a larger part in the life of the people, for from the new Cathedral's neighbors—Columbia and Smith and Barnard Colleges—fresh forces of cultured young people will be sent down, bearing gifts of grace and learning, to mingle as comrades and workers among their brothers and sisters of the East Side.

A stream of people of the poor flow in and out of the Pro-Cathedral doors all day. In the morning, there are great companies of kindergarten tots, and the building resounds with babble of childish voices and the sound of pretty songs. Miss Mary A. Purdue has charge of

One Talent

TEXT, Matt. 25: 15:
TO ANOTHER ONE

TXPEL first from this parable of the talents the word "usury." It ought to have been translated "interest." "Usury" is finding a man in a tight place, and compelling him to pay an unreasonable sum to get out. "Interest" is a righteous payment for the use of money. When the capitalist of this parable went off from home he gave to his stewards certain sums of money, wishing to have them profitably invested. Change also your idea as to the value of one talent. You remember the capitalist gave to one of his men for business purposes five talents; to another, two; to another, one. What a small amount to this last, you think, and how could he be expected to do anything with only one talent. I have to tell you that one talent was about $7,200, so that when my text says, "To another one," it implies that those who have the least have much.

We bother ourselves a great deal about those who are highly gifted, or have large financial resource, or exalted official position, or wide-reaching opportunity. We are anxious that their wealth, their eloquence, their wit be employed on the right side. One of them makes a mistake, and we say, "What an awful disaster." When one of them devotes all his great ability to useful purposes we celebrate it, we enlarge upon it, we speak of it as something for gratitude to God. Meanwhile, we give no time at all to consider what people are doing with their one talent, not realizing that ten people of one talent each are quite as important as one man with ten talents. In the one case the advantage or opportunity is concentrated in a single personality, while in another it is divided among ten individuals. Now what we want to do in this sermon is to waken people of only one talent to appreciation of their duty. Only a few people have five talents or ten talents, while millions have one. My short text is like a galvanic shock: "To another one."

The Capability of One Talent

The most difficult thing in the world is to make an accurate estimate of ourselves. Our friends value us too high; our enemies, too low. To find out what we are worth morally and mentally is almost impossible. We are apt to measure ourselves by those around us, but this is not fair, as they may be very brilliant or very dull, very good, or very bad. Indeed, there are no human scales that can tell our exact moral and mental weight, nor is there a standard by which we can measure our exact intellectual height; so the hardest thing to do is to calculate our real stature or height. But it will be no evidence of egotism in any of us if we say that we have at least one talent. What is it, and finding what it is what use shall we make of it? The most of the people, finding that they have only one talent, do as the man spoken of in the parable; they hide it. But if all of the people who have one talent brought it out for use, before this century is half past, and correspondents begin to write at the head of their letters 1950, the earth would be one of the outskirts of heaven. I ask you again, what is your one talent?

Is it a cheerful look? Carry that look wherever you go. It must come from a cheerful heart. It is not that inane smile which we sometimes see, which is an irritation. In other words, it must be a light within us so bright that it illumines eye, cheek, nostril, and mouth. Let ten men who are accustomed to walking a certain street every day resolve upon a cheerful countenance, as a result of a cheerful heart, and the influence of such a facial irradiation would be felt not only in that street, but throughout the town. Cheerfulness is catching. But a cheerful look is exceptional. Examine the first twenty faces that you meet going through Pennsylvania avenue, or Chestnut street, or Broadway, or State street, or La Salle street, or Euclid avenue, and nineteen out of the twenty faces have either an anxious look, or a severe look, or a depressing look, or an avaricious look, or a sneering look, or a vacant look. Here is missionary work for those who have trouble. Arm yourself with Gospel comfort. Let the God who comforted Mary and Martha at the loss of their brother, the God who soothed Abraham at the loss of Sarah, and the God of David, who consoled his bereft spirit at the loss of his boy by saying, "I shall go to him"; the God who filled St. John with doxology when an exile on barren Patmos, and the God who has given happiness to thousands of the bankrupted and persecuted, filling them with heavenly riches, which were more than the earthly advantages, that are wiped out, let that God help them. If he take full possession of your nature, then you will go down the street a benediction to all who see you, and those who are in the tough places of life, and are run upon, and belied, and had their homes destroyed, will say, "If that man can be happy, I can be happy; he has been through troubles as big as mine, and he goes down the street with a face in every lineament of which there are joy, and peace, and heaven. What am I groaning about? From the same place that man got his cheerfulness I can get mine. 'Why art thou cast down, O my soul, and why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise him who is the health of my countenance and my God.'

In one of the towns of New York State, an inhabitant said of a friend of mine: "I do not believe as that man does, but I cannot despise a religion that makes a man look as happy as he seems to be." If we have a rough visage, we cannot help that, God so made us; if accident or battle have defaced us, that is no fault of ours; if strabismus has hurt our eyes, no one will satirize us; if our features were not suited for Lavater's physiognomy, no one could blame us for that. The jaw may too much project or retreat; the forehead may not be Shakespearian, but will triumph over all defects and pour on all who meet him a supernal influence. If that cheerful look be your only talent, use it for the world's consolation. There will be one hundred people whom you will meet this week to whom you will have no right to speak. It would be an impertinence; you have never been introduced to them, they were never introduced to you; you have no right to stop them on their way, as they have no right to stop you on your way, but you have a right to look at them; then look with a faith in God, and a holy purpose, and a manliness, and a good cheer that will keep them thinking all that day and wondering who you are, and what is the cause of the victory which they saw depicted between the top of your forehead and the round of your chin. If you are the right kind of a man, the right kind of a woman, something has happened to you that ought to fill your soul with courage and your face with glorious sunrise. Your sins all forgiven, that makes you all right with the past; an eternal heaven promised to your soul, that makes you all right with the future.

Again, is your one talent that of wit or humor? Use it for God. Much of the world's wit is damaging; most of satire has a sting in it; much of caricature is malevolent; much of smart retort is vitriolic. In order to say smart things how many will sacrifice the feelings of others. The sword they carry is keen and it is employed to thrust and lacerate. But few men in all the world and in all the churches realize that if wit is bestowed it is given them for useful, for improving, for healthful purposes. If we all had more of it and knew how to use it aright how much it would improve our Christian conversation and prayer-meeting talk and sermon. Robert South and Rowland Hill and Jeremy Taylor and Dean Swift and Lorenzo Dow and George Whitefield used their wit and their humor to gather great audiences and then lead them into the kingdom of God. Frivolity is repulsive in religious discussion, but I like the humor of Job when he said to his insolent critics, "No doubt but ye are the people, and wisdom shall die with you;" and I like the humor of the Prophet Elijah, who told the Baalites to pray louder as their god was out hunting or on an excursion or in such loud conversation that he could not hear them. I like the sarcasm of Christ when he told the self-righteous Pharisees that they were so good they needed no help: "The whole need not a physician, but they that are sick." Or when in he arraigns hypocritical teachers, who were so particular about little things, and careless about big things, saying, "Ye blind guides that strain at a gnat and swallow a camel," and the Bible is all ablaze with epigram, words surprisingly put, and phraseology that must have made the audiences of Paul and Christ nudge each other, and exchange glances, and smile, and then appropriate the tremendous truths of the Gospel. There are some evils you can laugh down easier than you can preach down. The question is always being asked, Why do not more people go to church, prayer-meeting and other religious meetings? I will tell you. We of the pulpit and the pew are so dull they cannot stand it. But when we ask why people do not go to church, we ask a misleading question. More people go now to church than ever in the world's history and the reason is, in all our denominations there is a new race of ministers stepping into the pulpits which are not the apostles of humdrum. Sure enough we want in the Lord's army the heavy artillery, but we want also more men, who like Burns, a farmer at Gettysburg, took a musket and went out on his own account to do a little shooting different from the other soldiers. The church of God is dying of the proprieties. People who in every kind of audience show their emotions in their countenances, in religious assemblies, while we are discussing coming release, and the joys of heaven, look as dull as though they were attending their own funeral. My friend if you have the one talent of wit or humor are you using it merely to make a few people laugh a few nights around the stove in the corner grocery? Is it never occurred to you that you have a mission to execute with that bright faculty? Do you employ it only in idle conundrum, or low farce or harlequinade, humiliating banter? Quit that, and swing that flaming simitar, which God has put in your hand, for the slaying of sin and the triumph of righteousness.

Or is your one talent an opportunity to set a good example? One person doing right under adverse circumstances will accomplish more than many treatises about what is right. The census has never been taken of lovely old folks. Most of us if we have not such a one in our own house now, have in our memory such a one. We went to those old people with all our troubles. They were perpetual evangelists, by their soothing words, by their hopefulness of spirit an inexpressible help. I cannot see how heaven could make the any lovelier than they are, or were. But there are exceptions. There is a daughter in that family whose father is impatient, and the mother querulous. The passage of many years does not always improve the disposition and there are a great many

Disagreeable Old Folks

Some of them forget that they were ever young themselves, and they become untidy in their habits and wonder how when their asthma or rheumatism is bad other people can laugh, or sing, and go on as they do. The daughter in that family bears all the peevishness and unreasonable behavior of senility without a wailing back, or making any kind of complaint. If you should ask her what her five talents are, or her one talent is, she would answer that she has no talent at all. Greatly mistaken is she. Her one talent is to fear, and treat the childishness of the old, as well as she treats the childishness of the young. She is not a musician, and besides there may not be a piano in the house; she cannot skillfully swing a croquet mallet or golf stick; indeed she seems shut up to see what she can do with a ladle and a broom and a brush and other household implements. She is the personification of patience, and her reward will be as long as heaven. Indeed much of her reward may be given on earth. She is in a college from which she may after awhile graduate into brightest domesticity; she is a heroine, though a present she may receive nothing but scolding and dejection. Her one talent of patience under trial will do more good than many morocco-covered sermons on patience preached to-day from the tasselled cushion of the pulpit: "To another one."

There is a man in business life whose one talent is honesty. He has not the genius or the force to organize a company, or plan what is called "a corner in wheat," or "a corner in stocks," or "a corner" in anything. He goes to business at a reasonable hour and returns when it is time to lock up. He never gave a check for $1000 in all his life, but he is known on the street and in the church and in many honorable circles as an honest man. His word is as good as his bond. He for thirty years been referred to as a clean, upright, industrious, consistent Christian man. Ask him how many talents he has, and he will not claim even one. He cannot make a speech; he cannot buy up a market; he cannot afford an outshining equipage, but what an example he is to the young; what an honor to his household; what a pillar to the church of God; what a specimen of truth and integrity and all-roundness of character. Is there any comparison in usefulness between that man with the one talent of honesty and the cunning operators of the money market who startle the world first with a "boom," and then with a "slump"? I tell you that the one man with the one talent will live a happier life, and die a more peaceful death, and have a better place than his brilliant but reckless contemporary: "To another one."

Importance of One Talent Men

The chief work of the people with many talents is to excite wonderment and to startle and electrify the world. What use is there in all that? No use at all. I have not so much interest in the one man out of a million as I have in the million. Get the great masses of the world right, and it does not make much difference about what the exceptional people are doing. Give all the people with the one talent enlisted for God and righteousness, and let all those with five or ten talents migrate to the North Star or the moon, and the world and get on splendidly. The hard-working, industrious ones of America are all right, and would give no trouble, but it is the genius who gives up work, and on whose salary goes around to excite dissatisfaction and idleness. The genius who quits work, and steps on the stage or political platform eats beefsteak and on toast, and causes the common laborers, compelled to idleness, to put their hands into empty pockets and eat gristle and gnaw bones. The world would be infinitely improved if it could slough off about five thousand geniuses, for there are not more than that on our planet. Then the man or woman of one talent would possess the world, and rule it in a common-sense and Christian way. There would be less to amaze and startle, but more to give equipoise to Church and State and world: "To another one."

A Brilliant Miscreant

The most brilliant and many-sided man that ever trod this world, in my opinion, was Napoleon Bonaparte, and no man that ever lived did the world more damage. I have read a book advocating him as a great emancipator and reformer. I was not surprised at the book, for I have heard of a pamphlet in defense of Judas Iscariot. I suppose it may set forth the idea that he was out of money and needed the thirty pieces of silver, and the money was not spent for himself, but to open a respectable graveyard. I would not be surprised to find a book in honor of Satan, the chief miscreant of the universe. We all admire industry, and there is no more industrious being than Satan. But when a man tells me Napoleon was a reformer and emancipator, I would like to take him out and show him 95,000 corpses in the Russian snow banks, and ask him how he likes that, and I would show him the grave trenches of those who fell in the year 1799 during the Napoleonic wars. Only 116,000 men butchered in four months. I would ask him how he likes this. The country is beautiful, and I would ask our friend to cross with me to Leipsic and examine the grave trenches opened there. Only 101,790 fallen on both sides. This is all. Come on my friend and see the further work of the great emancipator and reformer at Borodino, where I had an opportunity of looking at last summer. Of our reformer left 42,000 of the slain, and come to Waterloo to find that only 56,000 dead men were left on the field. Alas for the work of this great emancipator and reformer. He turned Europe into a charnel house, and filled Europe with widowhood, and orphanage and childlessness. Though he was the brilliant man of the ages, would it not have been better for the world if he had died in his cradle six weeks after he was born. Compare that with the man who had one talent, and that the talent of invention. He was born on a farm in Spencer, Massachusetts, in 1819. He went to the district school in the winter, and never had another literary advantage. He became a machinist. In 1846 he came on to a battlefield where more women had been slain by the needle, than in the wars I spoke of were slain by the sword. Elias Howe! He could not make an oration. He could not marshal a host. He could not write a constitution. But he could contrive a sewing machine which said to millions of begared, consumptive, bent over, half blinded sewing women, "Go free! Take back your health! Recover your eyesight! Come down out of that garret! Go free!" Is that your one talent that of persuasion? Make good use of it. We all have it to some extent, yet none of us think of it as a talent. But it is the mightiest of talents. Do you know that this one talent will fetch the world back to God? Do you know it is the mightiest talent of the high heavens? Do you know that it is the one talent chiefly employed by all the angels of God when they descend to our world—the talent of persuasion? Do you realize that the rough lumber lifted into a cross on the hill back of Jerusalem was in persuasion as well as sacrifice? That is the only, absolutely the only persuasion that will ever induce the human race to stop its march toward the City of Destruction, and wheel around and start for the City of Light. Now may the Lord this moment show each one of us that to a greater or less extent we have that one talent of persuasion, and impel us to the right use of it. You say you cannot preach a sermon, but cannot you persuade some one to go and hear a sermon? You say you cannot sing, but cannot you persuade some one to go and hear the choir chant on Christmas or Easter morning? Send a bunch of flowers to that invalid in the hospital, with a message about the land where the inhabitants never say "I am sick." There is a child of the street; invite him into the mission school. There is a man who has lost his fortune in speculation; instead of jeering at his fall, go and tell him of riches that never take wings and fly away. Buckle on that one talent of persuasion, oh, man! oh, woman! and you will do a work that heaven will celebrate ten thousand years.

A Mighty Monosyllable

Among the 114,000 words of Noah Webster's vocabulary, and the thousands of words since then added to our English vocabulary, there is one outmastering word, the power of which cannot be estimated, and it reaches so far up, and so far down, and that is the word "Come!" It has drawn more people away from the wrong and toward the right than any word I now think of. It has at times crowded all the twelve gates of heaven with fresh arrivals. It will yet rob the path of death of the last pedestrians. It will yet chime so loudly and gladly that all the tolling bells of sorrow will be drowned with the music. It is piled up in the Bible's climax and peroration: "And the spirit and the bride say come, and let him that heareth say come, and let him that is athirst come." Have it on the point of your pen; have it on the tip of your tongue. Monosyllables are mightier than polysyllables, and that word "come" is the mightiest of monosyllables. Shakespeare says of one of his characters: "She speaks poinards and every word stabs." We may say of others, they speak words which are of balm, and music, are light and life. Master one of those words; harness one of those words; project one of those words; prove the full plenitude and power of one of those words. David Garrick, the dramatist, said he would give one hundred guineas if he could say "oh" as George Whitefield said it. What might we not give if we could say "Come" as Jesus said it. Some one has said that syllables govern the world, and I think that one syllable might save the world. But I cannot particularize; whatever be your one talent, cultivate it. Once fully realize that you have something with which to enhance heaven, and take hold of the eternities, and it will add a new bank of keys to the music of your soul. You are ordained to some kind of work by the laying on of the hands of the Lord God Almighty. If you cannot do anything else, go around and feel sorry for somebody. When some one asked: "What is the secret of William Wilberforce's power?" The answer was: "His power of sympathy." And there are ten million people who have the same qualification, if they only knew it. Sympathy! If you cannot restore the child to that bereft parent, or the fortune to that bankrupt financier, or health to that confirmed invalid, or an honorable name to that wrecked character, you can at least feel sorry for the misfortune or the bereavement or the suffering. Sympathy! If you have not the means to do anything else, go and sit down and cry with them. That is the way Christ did when he went out to the desolated home in Bethany, and the sisters told their sad story. He cried with them. Oh, cultivate that one talent of sympathy!

One Talent People in Heaven

After the resurrection day and all heaven is made up, resurrected bodies joined to ransomed souls, and the gates which were so long open, are shut, there may be some day when all the redeemed may pass in review before the "Great White Throne." If so, I think the hosts passing before the King, will move in different divisions. With the first division will pass the mighty ones of earth who were as good and useful as they were great. In this division will pass before the Throne all the Martin Luthers, the John Knoxes, the Wesleys, the Richard Cecilis, the Miltons, the Chrysostoms, the Herschells, the Lenoxes, the George Peabodys, the Abbott Lawrences, and all the consecrated Christian men and women who were great in literature, in law, in medicine, in philosophy, in commerce. Their genius never spoiled them; they were as humble as they were gifted or opulent. They were great on earth and now they are great in heaven. Their surpassing and magnificent talents were all used for the world's betterment. As they pass in review before the King on the "Great White Throne," to higher and higher rewards, it makes me think of the parable of the talents: "To another ten." I stand and watch the other divisions as they go by, division after division, until the largest of all the divisions comes in sight. It is a hundred to one, a thousand to one, ten thousand to one, larger than the other divisions. It is made up of men who never did anything but support their families and give whatever of their limited means they could spare for the relief of poverty and sickness and the salvation of the world; mothers who took good care of children by example and precept starting them on the road to heaven; millions of Sabbath School teachers who sacrificed an afternoon's siesta for the listening class of young immortals; women who declined the making of homes for themselves that they might take care of father and mother in the weaknesses of old age; ministers of the gospel who on niggardly stipend preached in the backwoods meeting houses; souls who for long years did nothing but suffer, yet suffered with so much cheerful patience that it became a helpful lesson to all who heard of it; those who served God faithfully all their lives, and whose name never but once appeared in print, and that time in the three lines of the death column which some survivor paid for; sailors who perished in the storm while trying to get the life-line out to the drowning; persecuted and tried souls who endured without complaint malignity and abuse; those who had only ordinary equipment for body and ordinary endowment of intellect, yet devoted all they had to holy purposes and spiritual achievement. As I see this the largest of all the divisions from all lands and from all ages pass in review before the King on the "Great White Throne," I am reminded of the wonderful parable of the talents, and more especially of my text: "To another one."

th department. A number of children come from the Day Nursery in Communion House, 153 Essex Street, where the deaconesses, Miss Boyd and Miss Smith, and their assistants live, and where the evening school, sewing classes, mothers' meeting, Helping Hands, and various other organizations convene for pleasant and instructive times and good works. In the afternoon, the Wills Memorial Library overflows with children of all sorts and sizes, and Miss Fisher, the librarian, has her hands full. "Older children," she says, "bring their little brothers and sisters, and have them sit on the benches and look at pictures, while they pick out their own books. Many want books which help them in their school work. The children love to water the flowers in the library windows, too; to sit around and make themselves at home. "With the coming of the afternoon and ending of the work hours, older people begin to throng the building. There are the baths and gymnasium to draw the girls and boys on different evenings; the club rooms at "Quiet Room" (for study and reading and writing) to attract young men, middle-aged men and old men. There are lectures and talks and entertainments and instruction for all ages and both sexes. One of the most interesting and promising features of the work is the Bishop's Junior Club, a large brotherhood of lads, sixteen to eighteen years old, under the leadership of Rev. Mr. Holmes, the Vicar's assistant. The foundation and centre of the whole work, however, the Vicar emphasizes, "is its religious side. It is the Church which furnishes the settlement, and it is the Church into which we are trying to bring the people whom we gather in through social work. After we have drawn them in, we try to provide some of the pleasures of home-life not possible to them in their tenement dwellings." The kindergarten tots must all come to Sunday School. Sunday and week-day services in the chapel are well attended.

Mr. Paddock lives in the Pro-Cathedral, and through his study-doors drifts in a perpetual tide of the stories of the woes and trials and needs of his East-side neighbors. With his coming, some two and a half years ago, the work received new impulses, and it has become greatly enlarged. Besides the regular staff, there is a large force of voluntary helpers, all drawn from the cultured and wealthy circles of the city. For support, this great work among the poor, this soul-saving station in a section abounding in saloons and worse pitfalls of sin, is entirely dependent upon voluntary contributions, and these are utterly inadequate. The Committee for the Pro-Cathedral Extension Work is making strenuous efforts to meet demands. Their efforts deserve hearty public sympathy and co-operation. The last monthly meeting of delegates from churches of the diocese, was held at Mrs. G. Lewis's, 411 Fifth ave. Mrs. W. C. Casey is President of the Committee; Mrs. Bruce Price, 12 W. Tenth street, Treasurer.

"IN THE SPIRIT...WRITE!"

Golden Text—Jesus Christ
the same yesterday and day and forever. Heb. 1:3

By Dr. and M.
Wilbur F. Cra

THE MESSAGE OF THE SEER

THE island prison. 2. The prisoner of the Lord. 3. The Lord's Day. 4. The Lord's presence. 5. The Lord's message.

Where are we in this lesson? "In the isle that is called Patmos." It is situated twenty-four miles from the southeast corner of Asia Minor, an island only fifteen miles in circumference, of volcanic origin, mountainous, rocky, rugged, barren, used as a prison, to whose marble quarries Roman convicts were exiled to work out their sentences at "hard labor." Such was the real Patmos, but the story of this lesson has transfigured it in the world's thought, verifying the song needed by all who are missing happiness, or heaven, or both, because the lines have fallen to them in hard places—

And prisons would palaces prove,
If Jesus but dwell with us there.

Who is first presented to us in this story? "I, John, who also am your brother and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ." In the background are brutal prisoners, driven like beasts to their tasks by equally brutal jailers. But here in the foreground, on the shore, stands one in the same prison garb, whose century of silver hair surmounts a face so intellectual and spiritual, so gentle, yet fearless, that we are sure he was sent here not for doing wrong, but for daring to do right. We recognize him as one of the prisoners of the Lord, to whose noble army belonged Joseph, and Jeremiah, and Daniel, and John the Baptist, and Jesus, and Paul, and many of later days imprisoned "for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ."

MONASTERY IN PATMOS

INTERIOR OF THE CAVE OF REVELATION

RUINS OF CHURCHES IN PATMOS

Tradition tells that John had previously been sentenced to die in boiling oil, but had, wonderfully, survived the ordeal, and then had been exiled to this island prison. As we have said before, martyr means witness, and their heroic sufferings are indeed "testimony," a "revelation of Jesus Christ," each a new chapter of the "Word of God." The words that declare "We are God's workmanship"—poema, Eph. 2: 10—mean, literally, "We are God's poems."

Poems of God! and the Christ divine
Is the golden thought of each rhythmic line.

—CHAS. A. HOBBS.

A poem of God was this beautiful apostle of love and courage, and we, too, have such a poem of God, a living psalm, in Dr. John G. Paton, "the modern St. John," who, for fifty years, risked his life as a missionary to the cannibals of the New Hebrides islands.

Do noble things, not dream them all day long,
And so make life, death, and the vast forever
One grand, sweet song.

Let us not think of John as nearly all artists erroneously picture him, as a womanly man, but as he proved himself, even in old age, in the book of Revelation, a "son of thunder." His denunciations of wickedness are trumpet-calls to battle. The roar of resistless torrents, and the roll of thunderbolts sound in his sentences. In the concordance turn to "liars," and you will find that in righteous severity none excelled him who was the gentlest of the apostles, reminding us that our lives, too, should combine "sweetness and fire," even to old age.

The bravest are the tenderest,
The loving are the daring.

When did the events of our lesson occur? "I was in Spirit on the Lord's Day." This is the first time the new name, "Lord's Day," appears in the Bible. From John's time to our own that beautiful name has been applied in Christian literature to the Christian Sabbath in unbroken succession. We find it so used by Ignatius, the disciple of John, and soon after in the "Teaching of the Apostles." There can be no reasonable doubt that it was not only the new name of the first day of the week, but that the day had become "the first and best of days" in every sense in the heart of Christians. Jesus transferred the Sabbath to the new day, not, probably, by any arbitrary command—that is not the New Testament way—but by the act of resurrection, which had all the force of a legislative "act," in determining which should be the premier of the days. Jesus made the change probably that his followers might escape the more easily from the outgrown Jewish types he had fulfilled, that were inextricably connected with the Saturday Sabbath. If it be an argument against giving up Saturday observance that there was no specific command by which it instantly ceased, we should also observe circumcision, eat unleavened bread, keep the Passover, and other Jewish feasts, because we have no command of Christ to abandon them. All these were given up gradually through the influence of the words and deeds and spirit of Christ. We do not give up the Decalogue because it is not Hebrew, but human and humane, but even that the Christian obeys, not from outward constraint as a subject, but from inward love as a son. Our observance of the Lord's Day will have in it no violation of the fourth commandment, not even a sense of its pressure, if we are "in the Spirit on the Lord's Day." Habits of life are important, but their deep foundations are habits of thought and feeling. If our hearts are really loyal to Christ we shall find no hardship, but only high privilege in honoring his weekly coronation day. Sabbath means only rest, a sweet word for weary bodies, minds, and souls, but "Lord's Day" is a more positive, more regnant term, signifying the Lordship of Christ over our time and occupations. One day in the week an invisible Lord calls a halt in business, and pleasure, and politics, as a sign that he is always Lord in all these departments of action. The

We cannot truly make even one day in the week the Day until we are the Lord's ourselves through that "day" of decision which breaks forth into song.

One day when Gladstone had visitors at Hawarden person was asked to say what day of the past or future he would choose to live if we could for or leave the present. Mr. Gladstone said he would choose a day in ancient Greece Athens was in its highest glory; but when another visitor chose the day of Pentecost, Mr. Gladstone looked ashamed, and withdrew his former choice to substitute "a day with the Lord." Perhaps he was thinking of a day in heaven, but our lesson story reminds us we can have "a day with the Lord" in this world, and even in the most unfavorable surroundings. The Lord's Day was not of rest in Roman prisons, and probably the only prisoner who cared to observe it religiously was this gentle, prisoner, whose age may have won for him some consolation on that day from his keepers, but he must worship the last survivor of the apostolic band, of whom all had died as martyrs. Surely, if any earthly condition could shut out heaven and happiness, his would have done it, but being "in the Spirit on the Lord's Day" he found heaven all about him, and Christ close at hand.

Here is a lesson for those who are not placed in life where they would like to be. They are refined, intellectual, but are constrained by financial or family reasons to live with ill-mannered, ignorant, unspiritual companions; they are imprisoned by chronic illness. But John reminds us that no power can imprison the Christian soul, who carries his own heaven within. Jesus, while living a hard-pressed life on earth, spoke of "the Son of Man who sits in heaven." In the hardest earthly lot the Christian may live in heaven by "practising the presence of Christ." How many a complaining soul has been rebuked on entering the sick room of some true Christian, who was thankful for life at its best, trustful when the outlook was darkest, rejoicing in the tribulation that worketh patience, and sympathy, Lord's Day is the "sign," the ensign of our Lord, the flag of Christ, its field of blue spangled by stars and sun, its stripes, the black and white of night and day, and the many colors of sunrise and sunset, and this royal flag is borne by the sun as color-bearer round the world every week, in token that Christ is Lord of the world, and is saluted by millions in the most progressive countries, by some in every land, in the laying aside of tools and toil, and the devotion of the day to rest and worship. To break the Sabbath is, therefore, to tear the flag of Christ; to desecrate the Lord's Day is to trample on this sign of his royalty.

The Jews, to whom the Sabbath speaks only of creation, have a saying that "he who breaks the Sabbath denies the creation." So we say that he who desecrates the Lord's Day denies the Lordship of Christ by deeds that speak louder than words, and so is guilty of high treason against the government of the universe. Those who fail to consider this aspect of the case wonder why Sabbath-breaking was a capital offense, and do not see why the command for its observance should have been given, in the only law God wrote with his own hand, more space than any other, one-third of the whole. As we forget the very names of murderers after a few years, while execrating as a greater offender Benedict Arnold, because his offense was not against an individual, but against his own government, so, in God's view, to neglect or abuse the Lord's Day is to insult the flag, the sign, the ensign of the world's benignant King.

If we are "in the Spirit" we shall not alone abstain from selfish work and selfish pleasures on this coronation day, but shall also give the day a Christian-like, positive observance in doing good, as we shall presently see that John did in an exemplary way.

And when shall we learn that in unselfishness, in doing good, in spiritual worship, the Lord's Day is but a type of what every day should be? Not that we should stop work on other days, but that in every work on every day we should be "in the Spirit."

Each day is the grain of the harvest that's past;
The seed-corn, as well, of the reaping to-be;
Thy garner's full measure, dear one, will at last Hold only the seed-corn once scattered by thee.

—JOEL SWARTZ.

and other worldliness to those who lie submissive under the Divine Sculptor's beautifying blows!

We sometimes wonder why our Lord has placed us
Within a space so narrow, so obscure,
That nothing we call work can find an entrance;
There's only room to suffer—to endure.

Well, God loves patience; souls that dwell in stillness, Doing the little things, or resting quite,
May just as perfectly fulfill their mission,
Be just as useful in the Father's sight.

As they who grapple with some giant evil,
Clearing a path that every eye may see,
Our Saviour cares for cheerful acquiescence,
Rather than for a busy ministry.

Contrast John's "patience on Patmos" and the revealing visions of future victories for the cause in which he suffered, with Napoleon's pettish discontent on St. Helena. Napoleon was a prisoner of hope, Napoleon a prisoner of despair. Napoleon, justly banished for the peace of the world, fretted about the wrongs he alleged had been done him in his memoirs in that spirit. John, unjustly exiled, rowing, not for himself, but for the wrongs inflicted on the cause of Christ by a wicked and seemingly resistless government, nevertheless faced the situation with triumphant age. He might have said to his foes what another did an hour of less serious reverses: "The past is yours, the future is ours." That is the spirit of the great book of prophecy John wrote in that prison. Napoleon was decaying of physical disease due to his vices, no doubt, burning up also in the fever of a wicked ambition thwarted, soon to die at fifty-one; John, in the healthy and happy old age of the pure in body and in heart, was to round out a hundred years of life on earth, the prelude to a happy eternity. "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

Having seen in John's case that the presence of Christ may be enjoyed by the individual Christian in the most unfavorable surroundings, we are now pointed to Christ's presence in the churches where his people gather. Such is the meaning of the vision of Christ standing in the midst of the seven-branched candlestick, like the flame of the divine presence in the bush of Horeb.

CHINA'S FAMINE STILL SPREADING

No Abatement in the Suffering, but Relief Measures Making Progress

NATIVE CHRISTIAN TEACHER OF SHANSI PROVINCE

DURING the past week THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has been in cable communication with Commissioner Rockhill at Peking, concerning the formation of an Emergency Missionary Committee, with Mr. Rockhill as chairman, for directing the relief operations in the famine districts of Shansi.

Press has been made, although the desired result has not yet been attained. As our readers will readily understand, the delay is to some extent attributable to the disturbed condition of affairs in China generally. It was stated in last week's issue, Commissioner Rockhill had already intimated his willingness to assume the direction of the work, at the outset at least. Heabled from Peking:

"I will see to purchase and distribution of aid. Li Hung Chng requests me to express to organizer of relief his sincere thanks, also thanks of Shansi famine-stricken for American benevolent action. ROCKHILL."

request was then cabled to him by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD that he form an Emergency Relief Committee, in which American missionaries should predominate and of which he should be chairman. Several well-known missionaries as the Rev. Mr. Richard (who has had a long experience in Shansi), Mr. Molland of the Christiana Mission, and Mr. McCarthy of the China Inland Mission, were known to be in China and available, while both at Shanghai and Tientsin there are many other missionaries who would be willing to go to Shansi as bearers of help to its suffering people. Ultimately the Emergency Committee could be merged in a larger and more representative Committee on the plan of the Interdenominational Missionary Famine Relief Committee, which did such excellent service in India. In this way, the whole management and distribution of the relief would be in the control of safe and trusted hands. In a few days, at most, it is fully expected that the personnel of the committee will be satisfactorily arranged, and the first appropriation of at least $10,000 cabled, with instructions to begin operations.

The letters and telegrams from China show no abatement of the widespread famine. The Imperial Court is expected to return to Peking shortly, the famine in Shansi being so severe that the Court fears a popular revolt. Singan-fu, the ancient Chinese capital in Shensi, has been the scene of the Court's exile for many months. This is the province which borders on Shansi, where the great famine is now raging.

Shansi has over ten thousand native Protestant converts, and it is stated (in a recent Peking cablegram to the New York Sun), that the majority of them are in great distress. They have been boycotted, and are literally starving. But this represents only a small fraction of the great body of sufferers, whose appeals for help are now sounding throughout the whole Christian world. It is estimated that eighty cents a month will keep a starving native alive. Five dollars will feed a whole average family for thirty days. With such possibilities of doing a great amount of good and saving a multitude of lives, it is hoped that all who desire to have a share in the rescue of China's perishing people will act quickly and send their offering to the relief work, according as the Lord has prospered them.

If each reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD could undertake the rescue of one sufferer, and hasten the work, a glorious record would soon be accomplished, and China, through their loving-kindness and sympathy, would be brought nearer to the Cross than ever before in its history. Our readers' life-saving work in India has been followed by a great and far-reaching spiritual awakening, and many thousands of natives have come forward, eager for baptism and admission to the Chris-was drawn up by Mr. Kay, of Kuh-U, setting forth the facts of the famine. This statement was signed by nearly all the missionaries in South Central Shansi. With a few exceptions, these missionaries were afterwards massacred. It seems very beautiful to me that their last act in concert should be one so manifestly setting forth their love and sympathy for the Chinese, and their readiness to stand by and help them in their time of dire need." He adds:

Dr. W. Millar Wilson undertook to secure the signatures of those at the capital, Tai-Yuen-Fu, and then forward the document to the coast, but as all perished in the general massacre, the document was lost. It is likewise sadly touching to recall that Dr. Wilson, on the eve of his departure for Tai-Yuen-Fu, gave the writer $375 as his first contribution toward a relief fund, besides having purchased a considerable quantity of grain to enable us to commence relief work until outside help could come and promising additional help as the needs increased. Needless to say, our plans were upset by the "Boxer" rising and our flight to the coast. Dr. Wilson was a man of position and private means who went to China at his own charges, to serve the Chinese as a medical missionary. He gave liberally, not only of his talents and means, he gave his very life and the lives of those most dear to him, his wife and child, leaving two orphan children in the care of relatives at home.

Should not such acts of love and sacrifice stir our hearts? Should we not help this people whom they sought to help? Now that China is on its knees, shall we refuse to listen to the cry of its starving multitudes? It is an opportunity that ought not to be lost.

The relief work proposed is both practicable and highly desirable. Missionaries were the ones persecuted and massacred in Shansi. Give missionaries the privilege of distributing the relief to those in need, regardless of their creed. Since the Chinese authorities, through Li Hung Chang, have appealed for help, they surely will afford every facility for transportation and will give every protection to those who undertake the work of distribution. It is a stupendous undertaking and will require heroic efforts. What is done must be done quickly. No time dare be lost. It is a great opportunity for America to prove its friendship to China.

MISSIONARIES WHO NARROWLY ESCAPED MASSACRE IN SHANSI tian Church. Similar results may be confidently looked for in China, as the outcome of the present relief movement. Thus the hand of the rescuer will not only feed the starving multitudes, but, under Divine blessing, will become the unconscious instrument for leading them to the Cross.

MISSIONARY DREYER'S APPEAL

In the Name of His Martyred Associates He Pleads for Starving China

OUR readers are already familiar with the thrilling story of the escape of Rev. F. C. H. Dreyer and a band of missionary associates, from Shansi to the coast, during the period of the terrible "Boxer" massacres in China. An account of their flight across the desert, taken from Mr. Dreyer's pamphlet on the subject, was published in these columns several months ago. In last week's issue, there appeared a remarkable article from the same source, which the writer had originally contributed to China's Millions, the publication of the China Inland Mission, of which he is a worker.

Mr. Dreyer has now written for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a further account of his experiences in Shansi during the early stages of the present famine. He says: "I have followed, with intense interest and satisfaction, the progress of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD's China Famine Relief Work. Having had the privilege of over five years' service in connection with the China Inland Mission at Ping-tang-fu, Shansi—the very heart of the famine district—we were forced to flee for our lives, leaving our station on July 15 and reaching the coast early in September, after a most trying and hazardous journey. Being thus fresh from the field of actual suffering, the recent reports of the progress of the famine, as published in the daily press and in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, are very real to me, and but confirm the fears which we have had for a year or more." After reviewing the history of the famine in its earlier stages (the facts concerning which were published in last week's issue of this paper), he proceeds: "A statement

HOW WORK ON THE WORLD'S GREATEST STEEL SUSPENSION ROADWAY PROGRESSES—NEW YORK'S $20,000,000 THOROUGHFARE OVER EAST RIVER

FROM windows on the top floor of the Bible House one may look across roofs and smokestacks to where the steel towers of the new East River Bridge rise like tall trellises against the blue of the sky. From tower to tower in graceful festoon swing aerial foot-paths, over which workmen, looking at this distance like ants, may go back and forth at work on the mighty cables which will take the place of this temporary scaffolding, and from which the bridge will hang over the river when completed. Between these towers great and little ships sail back and forth, and passengers look up curiously at the pathways in the sky, and the tiny, busy figures which traverse them. They look to the Brooklyn side and the New York side, at the anchorages and at the solid granite pedestals from which the tall towers rise. If they are strangers, they ask many questions, and express great wonder and admiration; if they are New Yorkers, they comment on the progress of the work, which, to those who have watched it from year to year, month to month, week to week, and day to day seems slow; perhaps, too, they say with a sigh of relief, "At last; now we know we will have it." For people living on Long Island and Manhattan wanted that bridge a long, long time before the Legislature made sure they should have it. If anybody thinks this wish unreasonable, let him try to cross Brooklyn Bridge (the one existing bond of union, save that of ferry-boats, between Long Island and Manhattan), with the crowd that surges over between seven and nine in the mornings and six and seven in the evenings. It is rather amusing to reflect, that a little over a century ago, a flat-boat worked by a sweep fully supplied all needs of communication between the two islands.

The construction of the new bridge by a private company was authorized in 1892; but in 1895 the Legislature directed that it be done at the joint expense of Brooklyn and New York, and with the consolidation, in 1898, it became a metropolitan enterprise, under a commission appointed by Mayor Van Wyck, with Mr. Lewis Nixon as President. It was not until 1896 that the drill borings were made for the foundations on both sides the river. About a year later, people were interested in watching the launching and sinking of the big caissons, in which men, living as in a diving-bell, and breathing air forced in through shafts, worked away that the timber and concrete foundations, on bed-rock, might be sure and strong. There was danger as well as widest and stiffest ever carried. The total width of the Brooklyn Bridge is eighty feet; the depth of the trusses, seventeen. The width of the new bridge is 118 feet; the depth of the trusses, forty. The latter will carry six railroad tracks, two roadways for vehicles, two 11-foot footways for pedestrians, and two 10-foot bicycle tracks, these being on a platform above the street level. Each floor-beam will be suspended from the four cables overhead, by many 1 3/4-inch steel wire cables, which pass up over curved saddles formed in the main cable bands.

The four main cables from which the Bridge hangs, will each consist of 37 strands of wire, with 186 wires in each strand; there will, therefore, be in each cable 82 wires. The actual pull on each cable is about 400 tons; its total strength is about six times as great.

The direct length of the Bridge between terminals is 1,500 feet; the distance from tower to tower, 1,000 feet. The steel towers rise 330 feet above the river.

The bridge will cost but $20,000,000. More steel is used in its construction than was manufactured at the time the Brooklyn Bridge was built. That is some 45,000 tons. Everything used in the construction of the bridge is an American product, the Sixth, West, East and North contributing. The Brooklyn terminal is near the foot of Broadway; the New York terminal, near foot of Delancey Street. Mr. Herbert L. Buck, Chief Engineer; Mr. O. F. Nichols, Principal Assistant Engineer, who direct, and the corps of experts and army of workmen who share in the making of this engineering marvel of our century, will have cause to be proud of their handiwork when it stands complete, a magnificent monument of the age of steel and electricity.

discomfort in the situation, for one cannot breathe compressed air with ease. At the greatest depth men could only work three-quarters of an hour at a time.

After the foundations were laid solid masonry piers were built upon them; on these were imposed massive pedestals of granite; then began those marvelous superstructures of steel, the towers. With the completion of the cables and the suspended roadway, the bridge will be ready for public use; and that, according to promise, will be in 1903. This is the largest steel suspension bridge in the world, its floor system is by far the

* * How Taylor University in Indiana, is Helping Promising Young Men to Become Preachers * *

AMONG the institutions of learning in the United States, few can point to a record of progress in recent years so brilliant as that of Taylor University, in Indiana. A few years ago, in an article in this journal, the general plan of the University, then in its infancy, was described, and the hope was expressed that a project so beneficent might triumph over the difficulties in its way and achieve the objects it sought to accomplish. Since that article was printed, the University has fulfilled the obligations which were impoverishing it, and has raised the office of its leaders, and the earnest and successful work of its alumni, have contributed the mites which have

The prosperity of Taylor University is doubly gratifying, because of the class it is designed to help and because it is distinctively a religious institution. The young men and women who crowd its class-rooms belong to the class in which, next to manual work, is familiar remain with them all their lives. And the majority of these students are consecrated souls. Their ambition is not distinction for themselves, not the place and power and emoluments of political office, but the privilege of proclaiming the Gospel in our own and heathen lands. They seek a college education that they may more efficiently serve the Master to whom they have given their lives. Taylor University is a Local Preachers' institution specially designed to equip the men who, unknown to the world and unrecognized by fame, care only to win souls and to lead the poor to Christ. The time is past when men ignorant of grammar and history money to liquidate its debt. It now stands with a property valued at eighty thousand dollars, free of all liabilities, and with a magnificent equipment for its educational work. How much labor and energy it has expended to reach this enviable position is known only to its President, Dr. T. C. Reade; its Vice-President, J. C. B. Stemen, and the noble and indomitable band of men and women who have, with them, made the prosperity of Taylor University the one aim and object of their lives. No large gifts or bequests have been bestowed upon it, but men and women in all parts of the country, and some from beyond the sea, who learned the kind of work that the University was doing, the self-cas-

They know the value of a college training, and not a few of them have struggled hard and denied themselves every luxury to gain the means of obtaining it. All honor to such young people! They are the material out of which the well-being and prosperity of our land are produced. They bear the yoke in their youth, and their early privations and hardships, voluntarily endured, give them a strength and force of character which and science can expect to gain the ear of our people. The preacher must have the respect of the people to whom he speaks, if he is to win their confidence and influence their lives. Therefore the earnest young soul, desiring above all things to be a successful ambassador for Christ, seeks the mental training which enables him to fulfil the Apostolic injunction, "Let no man despise thy youth."

To such men, and to such only, Taylor University holds out its helping hand. The young man who can demonstrate his capacity and can satisfy the faculty of the purity of his motive, is received to all the advantages of the institution for the small sum of ninety dollars a year.

which sum covers board, lodging and tuition. How it is done is a mystery, but it is a mystery that the young people are glad to solve. The secret lies in that principle which is at the foundation of the Christian religion—the principle of self-sacrifice. The members of the faculty are men who deny themselves that they may help others. The large salaries which men of their attainments and positions usually expect are renounced; and they teach and lecture for a pittance which is just sufficient for their modest wants. Their reward comes from the service they render, and their trust is in him who said to those whom he sent to preach to the poor: "They cannot recompense you, but ye shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." In the University there is no baseball nine, no football team, no boating crew, but there is a daily prayer meeting, which the majority of the students voluntarily attend. At the present time, seventy of the students are preparing for the ministry, and four young women are being trained for the foreign mission field.

An interesting feature of Taylor University is its "Faith Fund." Some years ago, one of Bishop Taylor's missionaries in Africa, had a convert who seemed to him likely to be a valuable aid in preaching the Gospel to his people. He wrote to President Reade, describing him, but added that no fees could be paid for his education. President Reade replied: "Send him to us; the Lord will provide for him." The young man fully justified the expectations of him, and though his constitution was unable to bear the rigor of our climate and his career was cut short in two years, he proved himself an earnest, consecrated student, whose progress astonished all who knew him. He was maintained by a special fund to which many who knew the circumstances contributed. This fund was called the "Faith Fund," and it has been continued since the death of its first beneficiary and has enabled other penniless students to obtain an education. A later beneficiary was a young man, who was sent to the institution by a missionary in South America and was named Samuel Culpener. He was of mixed blood, very intelligent and a master of the Spanish language. He also has proved an excellent student; and so proficient has he become, that he has been appointed Professor of Latin and Greek in the college which the Methodist Episcopal Church is establishing in Puerto Rico. Two other young foreigners are in Taylor University. They come from Puerto Rico, and were sent to the University by the Cuban Educational Committee, of which General Wheeler is President, and General Garcia, Vice-President. It is worthy of notice that a little pamphlet by President Reade, describing the college life of the young African student above mentioned, has had an enormous circulation. The profits on its sale, at ten cents each, have been turned into the "Faith Fund." They have already amounted to twelve hundred dollars.

Recently the University has accepted the affiliation of the Chinzei Seminary, at Nagasaki, Japan, of which Dr. Fulkerson is President. This is the largest Methodist institution of learning in Japan. It has 175 pupils, and is distinctively a Christian seminary. President Fulkerson visited Taylor University during his tour of the United States, in 1893, and was so much impressed by its principles and management, that when he returned to Japan and accepted the Presidency of Chinzei Seminary, he proposed that the seminary should become a college of Taylor University.

The University has broadened its sphere also by becoming the acknowledged institution for the training of Primitive Methodist ministers in America. This nomination is in England a very active and aggressive body, and though its existence on this side the Atlantic has been brief, it has already three annual conferences and is growing rapidly.

A university so beneficent in its work, so economical in its operation and so consecrated in its objects, deserves the hearty and cordial support of the religious public. It would be thankful for contributions which would enable it to increase its "Faith Fund" for the support of promising young men who are unable to pay the fees, or for gifts to the general endowment fund of the University. Contributions may be sent to the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, or to President T. Reade, Taylor University, Upland, Ind.

A CHURCH OF MANY ACTIVITIES

A CLASS IN WOOD CARVING

THE LITTLE HOUSEKEEPERS' CLASS

STERILIZING MILK

ON the first Sunday in May, Dr. A. C. Dixon, for the past ten years pastor of the Hanson Place Baptist Church, Brooklyn, and one of the most aggressive and consecrated of Christian workers, began his pastorate in a new field of labor, the Ruggles Street Baptist Church of Boston. This is the church that was for so many years the object of the religious hopes and love of the late Daniel S. Ford, for the continuance of which he bequeathed a permanent income of $20,000 a year.

Dr. Dixon will find in the Ruggles Street Church the widest opportunities for his unusual abilities. It is a veritable beehive of Christian activity. Situated in the tenement house district of the city, it seeks to be helpful to the poor and the unfortunate. It welcomes no one more cordially than the workingman.

One of the most important features of the work of this church is the Workingmen's Bible Class, of four hundred members, which meets every Sunday afternoon in the vestry. Another feature is the Friendford Industrial School, which meets every Saturday morning. Hundreds of boys and girls are here taught all sorts of useful occupations. There are also evening classes in stenography, music, cooking and dress-making. There is a free kindergarten in connection with the other work of the church, and a free employment bureau, which last year secured employment for eight hundred and ninety-three persons; a free medical dispensary, and a maternity department, in which latter sterilized milk is supplied to poor mothers for their children. The nurse in charge of this department spends her afternoons in the homes of the poor, teaching the mothers how to care for their little ones. There are mother's meetings at the church every other Thursday afternoon.

The relief department of the church supplies food, pays rent, provides clothing, baby carriages, wheel chairs, furniture, crutches and other necessities in times of sickness and extreme poverty. At Thanksgiving many as two hundred turkeys, with "fixin's," are sent to the poor of the parish.

The Sunday School in connection with the church is the largest in Boston. The superintendent and his assistants are among the seventeen salaried workers who devote their whole time to the work of the church. There are one hundred and fifty officers and teachers the school, and a thousand six hundred and eighty-one scholars. The session is held in four different buildings. During the summer, a gospel wagon makes rounds in the evening, and meetings are held in the small parks and other open spaces in the tenement-house district. In the rear of the church is a large yard, which is fitted up in summer with an outdoor gymnasium and playground. There is a sand garden for the little folks. Many mothers send their children to the country for two or three weeks in the summer, and children and their mothers are given long rides on the electric cars to the beautiful parks in the suburbs. Nothing is overlooked; nothing left undone that can bring happiness into the lives of the poor, and make them feel that the Church is their best friend.

It is to this help that Dr. Dixon has come. Those who know him best are confident that the new work of the church will receive a new impulse because of his coming, and many souls will be brought from the darkness of sin into the "marvelous light."

One Million Subscribers

Expecting Great Things

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has the faith to believe that there are a million families in this country who would be glad to subscribe for it were they acquainted with its surpassing worth. We further believe that all of our present subscribers are so thoroughly pleased with the paper that they would be glad to see our faith fully realized. They know the blessed influence THE CHRISTIAN HERALD exerts, for they themselves have felt it. Week after week they have scanned its beautiful pages, have read its inspiring messages, have revelled in its literary and artistic wealth, have been deeply interested, edified and instructed, and, after having read it from beginning to end, have sent it to some distant friends that they also might enjoy its perennial riches.

All Love It

Few papers published are read and read as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and none fords greater pleasure and delight, or makes warmer and more lasting friends. It is an indisputable fact that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has a very large percentage of renewals, and that, from its very beginning, has carried an exceptionally large percentage of permanent subscriptions; and its subscription list is still constantly increasing. Nine years ago its circulation was 31,000; to-day it is a welcome visitor in nearly a quarter of a million homes. But what has been done in the past is only an indication of what may be done in the future, provided we all work heartily together with a view to securing the million on which we have now set our heart.

A Financial Sacrifice

To bring this about we have determined to again enlist the cordial co-operation of our friends, and ourselves to make such a financial sacrifice as will demonstrate our own sincerity in the matter. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be produced at less than its regular subscription price, which is $1.50 per annum. But to interest those who cannot appreciate its beauties, simply because they do not see the paper, we have decided to accept, during the month of June, an unlimited number of Half Yearly trial subscriptions at 25 cents each, subject to the easy conditions set forth in the annexed coupons. We could not make this sacrifice but for the experience of the past that a very large percentage of our subscribers renew, and when they renew they are glad to pay the regular subscription price, because they are satisfied that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is well worth all we ask for it.

A Magnificent Record

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be twenty-three years of age in September next. Its history is grand beyond compare. It has collected and expended within the past nine years over TWO MILLION DOLLARS IN CHARITY. The peasants of Russia, the martyrs of Armenia, the orphans of India, the reconcentrados of Cuba, the rescued men of the Bowery, the unfortunate girls of the Bethesda Home, the tens of thousands of hapless waifs of the tenements, all rise up and call it blessed. God be thanked for the opportunities and the privileges which were ours in the past; and may He graciously continue to pour out His blessing upon THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, its editors and proprietor and its readers, and make us one and all increasingly useful in His service.

your name and address on each coupon and cut them apart at the indicated lines, then distribute them among such of your Church and Sunday School friends as will be likely to subscribe. They will thank you for doing so. Explain to them the beauties, the riches, the great attractiveness of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and urge them to give it a trial. Tell them that each coupon saves half a dollar on this semi-yearly trial subscription, and you will be surprised how quickly they will avail themselves of the exceptional opportunity thus offered. If the six coupons are not enough for your purpose, write us, and we will send you as many more as you may require. Do not forget, however, that the coupons are good only until July 1, and must not be mailed after that date.

Your One Opportunity

Or, if you prefer, you may make a regular canvass among your friends and solicit, by mail or in person, their subscription at our regular price—75 cents for six months. Then retain half a dollar from each subscription and send us a coupon and 25 cents in cash. Thus, while doing good by spreading the glorious influences of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, you are actually benefiting yourself. As a further inducement, we make the following extraordinarily liberal proposition:

A Great Opportunity for Our friends

We know you will help us, and thus have part and parcel in all the good which, under divine blessing, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD shall accomplish in years to come.

We Look to Our Friends

The names of all who send in SIX or more Coupon Subscribers will be published in our Roll of Honor, which will appear from week to week in alphabetical order in the columns of "The Christian Herald."

A Great . .
Innovation

Our Red Letter Bible

Now . . .
In Press

HOW IT ORIGINATED

THE arrangement of the Red Letter Bible, like that of the Red Letter New Testament, originated with Dr. Louis Klopsch, proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and the former work is the natural development of the latter. In the New Testament we have the text printed from large type in black, except that every word recorded therein as having been spoken by our Lord is printed in Red.

The Old Testament

In the Old Testament we again have the text printed in black, except that all passages quoted by our Lord, and every incident referred to by him are printed in red, which gives us at a glance an intelligent idea of how frequently and how extensively, on the authority of Christ himself, the authenticity of the Old Testament is confirmed.

Thus we have printed in red on the one hand, all the words recorded as having been spoken by our blessed Lord, and on the other hand, all the passages quoted, and all the incidents referred to by Him.

The Scarlet Thread

In addition to this we have indicated by a red star in the Old Testament every passage generally accepted as having reference to our Lord, so that the scarlet thread leading to him as the Promised Messiah may be followed step by step through the sacred volume from Genesis to Malachi—end of the prophets.

The Red Letter Bible contains other striking features, unique and original, the exact nature of which it is not expedient to reveal until the publication of the work itself, which is now in press.

A Very Helpful Bible

The Red Letter Bible has tens of thousands of references, the latest Maps, Illustrated Helps and an Explanatory Concordance, all of the highest grade. The helps are right up to date.

Prof. Theodore F. Wright, General Secretary for the United States of the Palestine Exploration Fund, in a remarkably able article, entirely devoid of confusing technical phraseology, shows how recent archaeological research has tended to prove the Old Testament true in the minutest details.

Dr. B. J. Fernie furnishes a Comprehensive Digest of the Books of the Bible, affording a bird's-eye view of their contents.

Hints on the Study of the Bible, by Rev. Horatio Bonar, D.D., and Dwight L. Moody, are simply invaluable to the earnest Bible student.

The superb Maps furnish geographical information, recent, accurate, and absolutely reliable.

Major D. W. Whittle's famous "Calendar for Daily Reading of the Scriptures" points the way to a most interesting and increasingly instructive course of Bible readings, covering exactly one year, and including within that time the entire sacred volume.

Superb Views of Modern Palestine, printed on thin paper (one side only), will enable the possessor of this precious volume to acquaint himself with present-day scenes in the Holy Land.

A Few of the Miscellaneous Helps

Interesting Bible Facts, Weights, Measures, Coins, Roman and Hebrew Time, the Jewish Year and Jewish Festivals, the Tabernacle, the Temple, the Synagogue, the Jewish Priesthood, Temple Worship, an Alphabetical Arrangement of the First Lines of the Psalms, Miracles in the Old and New Testaments, the Discourses of Christ, Harmony of the Gospels, and many other things of great importance to the Bible reader and student, are all to be found in the supplementary pages of the Red Letter Bible.

The Explanatory Concordance is the result of ex-

A fine quality of paper has been used, the printing is unusually clear, and when ready it will be found as near perfect as possible; in short, the best Bible ever issued from any press.

Very Superior Binding

The binding will be altogether faultless. Every book will be bound in American Levant, Divinity Circuit, with lining to the edge, rendering it practically indestructible.

It will have red under gold edges, and each volume will have the new movable book mark index recently invented and controlled exclusively by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

The Bible will cost only $3. yet no Bible of its kind, so as actual value is concerned, was ever sold at less than double that price.

Well Worth Owning

This is the Bible which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD offers the preceding page, and we are sure that no one securing a copy of this unique and original Bible, wholly different from any other Bible on the market, will have cause to regret the effort which may have been put forth to secure the necessary twenty short term coupon subscribers required to secure it.

The day is not far distant when every Christian home will have, as one of its choicest possessions, a Red Letter Bible.

To Our Friends

The offer of this Bible is strictly in line with the principles of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The proprietor is so sure that he can present to the readers no premium so welcome to them as the sacred Book, in new form, so arranged as to emphasize the vital truth on which Christ insisted that it was him that Moses and the Prophets did write. Not even studious Christians realize, until they see this edition, the extent to which the Old Testament is permeated with Christ and his Gospel. Every Christian should possess this edition.

The Red Letter Testament

The Red letter New Testament is Beautifully Bound in American Levant leather, strong and flexible, with overlapping edges, Red under Gold, a Book-Mark. It is absolutely free from Typographical Imperfections of any kind, and is in the highest sense of the word a Veritable Gem. The type is very clear, and Every Word recorded as having been Spoken by our Lord is printed in Red. For convenience, legibility and serviceableness, it is unsurpassed.

For Home Reading, for pocket use, for Church and Sunday School work, this is the one Ideal Testament.

I am delighted with the Red Letter New Testament and so all my family and friends that have seen it. I think it will be much good and I am sure it will be in great demand on both sides of the water.
Yours in the Gospel, D. L. MOODY

I have just received by your kindness the Red Letter New Testament. I have looked it over carefully and, without any hesitation, believe it is the best thing of the kind ever published. I shall certainly use it in my work, and have already called the attention of my friends to it.
J. WILBUR CHAPMAN

Many thanks for your Red Letter New Testament. Really, it is capital one for teachers to use and is so convenient in size, legible and binding that it will be a joy to everyone who loves the Word of God. With many renewed thanks, I remain,

The legion of devils cast out—Jairus' daughter raised

St. Luke 9

32 And there was there an herd of many swine feeding on the mountain: and they besought him that he would suffer them to enter into them. And he suffered them.

33 Then went the devils out of the man, and entered into the swine: and the herd ran violently down a steep place into the lake, and were choked.

34 When they that fed them saw what was done, they fled, and went and told it in the city and in the country.

35 Then they went out to see what was done; and came to Jē'sus, and found the man, out of whom the devils were departed, sitting at the feet of Jē'sus, clothed, and in his right mind: and they were afraid.

36 They also which saw it told them by what means he that was possessed of the devils was healed.

37 ¶ Then the whole multitude of the country of the Gād'a-rēnēs round about besought him to depart from them; for they were taken with great fear: and he went up into the ship, and returned back again.

38 Now ¶ the man out of whom the devils were departed besought him that he might be with him: but Jē'sus sent him away, saying,

39 Return to thine own house, and shew how great things God hath done unto thee. And he went his way, and published throughout the whole city how great things Jē'sus had done unto him.

40 And it came to pass, that, when Jē'sus was returned, the people gladly received him: for they were all waiting for him.

41 ¶ And, behold, there came a man named Jā-i-rus, and he was a ruler of the synagogue: and he fell down at Jē'sus' feet, and besought him that he would come into his house:

42 For he had one only daughter, about twelve years of age, and she lay a dying. But as he went the people thronged him.

sicians, neither could be healed of any,

44 Came behind him, and touched the border of his garment: and immediately her issue of blood stancheth.

45 And Jē'sus said, Who touched me? When all denied, Pē'tēr and they that were with him said, Master, the multitude throng thee and press thee, and sayest thou, Who touched me?

46 And Jē'sus said, Somebody hath touched me: for I perceive that virtue is gone out of me.

47 And when the woman saw that she was not hid, she came trembling, and falling down before him, she declared unto him before all the people for what cause she had touched him, and how she was healed immediately.

48 And he said unto her, Daughter, be of good comfort: thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace.

o Matt. 8. 34.

49 ¶ While he yet spake, there cometh one from the ruler of the synagogue's house, saying to him, Thy daughter is dead; trouble not the Master.

p Acts 16. 39.

50 But when Jē'sus heard it, he answered him, saying, Fear not: believe only, and she shall be made whole.

q Mark 5. 18.

51 And when he came into the house, he suffered no man to go in, save Pē'tēr, and Jāmes, and Jōhn, and the father and the mother of the maiden.

52 And all wept, and bewailed her: but he said, Weep not; she is not dead, but sleepeth.

53 And they laughed him to scorn, knowing that she was dead.

54 And he put them all out, and took her by the hand, and called, saying, Maid, arise.

55 And her spirit came again, and she arose straightway: and he commanded to give her meat.

56 And her parents were astonished: but he charged them that they should tell no man what was done.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

Gordon's Memorial

WORK on the college now being erected in Khartoum is being pushed rapidly forward, and it is possible to form some idea of how the noble edifice will look on its completion. As was explained in these columns, at the inception of the project, the college is a memorial to the martyred General Gordon, who perished in the Mahdist rising in the Soudan. When the Mahdi was raging that immense tract of country to the south of Egypt, General Gordon, relying on his popularity with the Soudanese, went out to Khartoum in the hope of saving the Soudan for Egypt. He was warmly welcomed, but soon learned that the people were in terror of the great Mohammedan oppressor. General Gordon promptly notified the English Government of the changing conditions and informed them that he would need the help of a well-armed and disciplined force. Mr. Gladstone, however, who at that time was at the head of the English Government postponed sending help. A few months passed, Gen. Gordon's letters became more urgent, and he complained bitterly that he was being deserted. Finally the religious public of Great Britain became indignant, for Gen. Gordon was a man revered and beloved of God-fearing men. At last, Mr. Gladstone could no longer resist the tide of insistence, and sent an expedition to deliver the brave Christian General. But it was then too late. The Mahdi, with his fanatical Mohammedan followers, had closely invested Khartoum and captured the city, when the British expedition was a few days' march away. Gen. Gordon was killed, and his body dismembered. When Gen. Kitchener succeeded in conquering the Soudan and overcoming the forces of the Mahdi, a solemn memorial service was held in the grounds of the citadel, which General Gordon had defended so valiantly. His countrymen resolved that some permanent memorial of the martyred leader should be erected, and General Kitchener, who knew his character well, suggested that it should take the form of a college for the education of the people whom General Gordon loved sincerely and for whose deliverance he laid down his life. The necessary funds were promptly subscribed, and on January 5, 1899, the foundation stone of the memorial institution was laid with impressive ceremonies. It is now approaching completion, and will constitute an appropriate memorial of the devoted general, silently proclaiming to the Soudanese people the principles of his saintly life.

that day shall there be an altar to the Lord in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar at the border thereof to the Lord. And it all be for a sign and for a witness unto the Lord of hosts in the land of Egypt (Isaiah 19: 19, 20).

Indicating the Hall of Fame

The tablets in memory of America's greatest statesmen, inventors, lawyers and preachers, will have been unveiled by the time this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is in the hands of its readers. According to the programme now issued, the ceremonies will be of a doubly interesting character. The tablets will be unveiled in succession, after Senator Depew delivers his oration in the section known as "Statesman's Corner." The address for the statesmen will be delivered by Lieut.-Gen. John M. Schofield. Representatives of patriotic societies from all over the United States will unveil most of the tablets. The unveiling exercises in the section assigned to authors will be in charge of the high school and colleges for women in New York. Each tablet will be uncovered by some appropriate person. That to Benjamin Franklin will be unveiled by Mrs. E. Abeth D. Gillespie, his great-granddaughter; that to Chief Justice Marshall, by Edmund Wetmore, President of the Bar Association; those to Grant and Lee, by veterans of the Union and Confederate armies, respectively. Care has been taken in all the other instances to have some person identified in some way with the distinguished citizen immortalized, perform the ceremony of removing the flag from the bronze. It will be a sense of distinction to be so identified with the illustrious dead. To the great host of their fellow-citizens, as to those whom the nation thus honors, no such pinnacle of fame is possible; but to all, that supreme joy of which Christ spoke may come:

Rejoice rather because your names are written in heaven (Luke 10: 20).

A Girl's Sight Restored

A remarkable case of restoration of sight to a blind girl is reported in a press despatch from Amesbury, Mass., to the New York Sun. It states that a family came to that town last winter from Canada. The parents were both pious persons, and the mother especially was a very saintly spirit. They had several children, and among them a daughter fifteen years old, who was quite blind. About two years before coming to the United States she had been attacked by severe illness, which had gradually affected her eyes and at last had totally destroyed her sight. Several physicians had examined her eyes, but though there was apparently no organic disease, they had been unable to restore her sight. The mother had made her daughter's affliction the subject of prayer, and she continued to do so in the fervent hope that God would interpose for the relief of her beloved daughter. A few weeks ago the mother died, and one of her friends led the blind girl to the side of the casket, that she might take her last leave of her dead of her. On the following day a little woman, less than five feet tall and weighing apparently about a hundred pounds, came to conduct the prisoner to the Home. When the Black Terror saw her she gave a laugh of derision; but the little woman sat down beside her and began to talk. In a short time she came out of the cell and announced that she was ready to go into court. When the judge saw her, he was amazed. "Do you know the character of your charge?" he asked. The little woman said she did. "Had you not better have a policeman go with you?" he suggested. But she declined, and as soon as she had received the commitment papers, she held out her hand to the big negro and said: "Come along, dear." To the amazement of all in court, the negro rose and walked tamely after her, and when they were last seen, boarding a train for New Bedford, the Black Terror and her captor were talking amicably together. The gentleness and kindness of a loving soul had evidently proved more effectual in subduing the unruly virago than the physical strength of the police:

A soft tongue breaketh the bone (Prov. 25: 15).

BRIEF NOTES

The Tablet, an English Roman Catholic journal, announces the discovery at Mugara, Greece, of a fragment of pottery containing a portion of the Lord's Prayer, which was scratched on it before the clay was baked. From the style of the characters it is believed to be exceedingly old; certainly not later than 400 A.D.

Rev. O. C. White, of the Christian Church of Parkersburg, W. Va., announced recently that on warm summer evenings the church services would be held on the roof of the church.

The Ohio Wesleyan University has secured the services of Rev. Marcus Dods, D.D., to deliver the commencement address on June 13. The University has 1358 students, of whom 134 graduate this year.

Rev. Charles F. Parham is holding a Bible school at Topeka, Kan., at which, according to local journals, he expects to demonstrate that there is a renewal of the gift of tongues to which the Apostle Paul referred in his letters to the Corinthians.

The Presbyterian Church of Smithtown, L. I., has received from Mrs. W. H. Mills, the widow of one of its parishioners, the gift of a fine clock and bell, which will be placed in the tower as a memorial of her late husband. This is the first time in its history that the town has had a public clock.

A Bible Conference will be held at Lake Orion, Mich., July 12-23. The Conference will stand for the supreme authority of the Scriptures, the development of the spiritual life by the study of the Word of God, and the speedy evangelization of the world. Each morning two Bible classes will meet. Rev. J. Campbell Morgan, Dr. Wayland Hoyt, Dr. R. A. Torrey and other well-known speakers are expected to take part. Full particulars may be obtained by addressing Rev. C. A. Stringer, Home Bank Building, Detroit, Mich.

At White Plains, N. Y., a follower of Dr. Dowie, of Chicago, has been fined $500 for neglecting to call a doctor to attend his sick child. Dr. Dowie himself has been arrested and held in $10,000 bail on the charge of encouraging one of his followers, whose wife died recently, to do without the services of a physician.

At the recent Hebrew Messianic Conference in Boston, Rev. Louis E. Meyer, of Hopkinton, Ia., startled his Jewish co-religionists by affirming his belief that during the nineteenth century 204,540 Jews had embraced Christianity. He said that the average number of baptisms of Jews in a year was more than 1,500.

General sorrow has been caused among a wide circle of Christian friends by the news of the tragic death of Rev. Maltbie D. Babcock, D.D., pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church in New York. Dr. Babcock had been on a tour in the Holy Land and Egypt. On reaching Naples, he was prostrated by Mediterranean fever and was removed to a hospital. During a fit of delirium, incident to the fever, he severed an artery in his wrist and died before help arrived.

Rev. Samuel Chadwick, of Leeds, England, will be one of the speakers at Northfield this year. Mr. Chadwick is prominent among the younger men in the Wesleyan body of England, and his ability as a Bible student, with his great success in evangelistic effort, has placed him among the leading forces in aggressive Christian work in Great Britain. His prominence as a Wesleyan, together with his association with the Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of London, will doubtless attract large numbers of Methodists throughout the country to the Conference. Announcements will be made later as to other leading speakers from abroad. An unusually strong programme may be anticipated.

Most of our subscribers when writing to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, after expressing themselves in terms most complimentary concerning the paper, wind up their communications with a statement that, when through with reading their copy they send it on to distant friends, thus sharing it with others. To these subscribers we would say that they will find it to their advantage to avail themselves of the Coupon Offer explained on another page, which insures prompt service direct from the main office for the balance of the year at 25 cents in cash and one coupon. This is actually cheaper and much more convenient than to pay one cent postage each week to forward their copy. It also enables them to use their own copy in their immediate neighborhood, and thus, while saving money, to do good by widening out the already enormous circulation of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and enlarging the sphere of its usefulness.

mother. She lifted the lifeless hand and placed it on the girl's sightless eyes. The despatch states that from that hour there was a distinct improvement in the girl's condition. She began to distinguish light from darkness, and to perceive the outlines of objects. The improvement has continued, until now sight is so completely restored that she is able to earn her living in one of the factories of the town. She is fully convinced that her healing came from the touch of her dead mother's hand. Probably the physicians account for it in some more scientific way. We may hope that if the girl clings to her belief, she may also seek that spiritual enlightenment to which her pious mother's hand doubtless often pointed the way.

The spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the Gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted . . . and recovering of sight to the blind (Luke 4: 18).

The Black Terror

A remarkable scene was witnessed in the West Side Police Court in New York, a few days ago. A big colored woman—a familiar character in the most depraved section of the city—was under sentence there for aggravated assault. When she was arrested three policemen were sent to take her to court. She had been arrested several times before, and on each occasion she had nearly killed the policeman who arrested her. She would fight with her fists, and kick and bite, and use a hat-pin or any other weapon within reach. So terrible was her record that she was known by the force as the "Black Terror." Magistrate Zeller decided to commit her to the reformatory home at New Bedford, and sent her back to the cells until some one should come from the Bedford Home to take charge

Joseph · Cook's · Awakening

HOW THE FAMOUS THEOLOGIAN AND LECTURER BECAME A CHRISTIAN

BY REV LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D.

It must be conceded by all fair-minded people that one of the great and powerful religious factors of the recently departed Nineteenth Century in the United States was Joseph Cook's Monday Lectures in Boston. When I first went to Boston, the most interesting thing about the city, and that which attracted the attention of Christian men and women from all parts of the country on visiting the city, more than anything else, was the Monday lecture at Tremont Temple. That great and famous auditorium was packed with an audience such as could have been hardly brought together by any other personality in the country. There were not only hundreds of preachers, comprising the leading divines in all the religious denominations, but hundreds of great lawyers, doctors, college professors and important business men. The leading men from interior towns and cities throughout New England—many of them—came in Monday on the early trains to listen to this man who spoke with such might and authority, not only of logic and reason, but with a tremendous magnetic personality.

It is exceedingly interesting to study the source of such a stream of religious power and influence.

I have recently received, in answer to letters of mine, two letters from Dr. Cook, which bear with great interest on this subject of his personal conversion. In the first of these communications he says that it was in Keeseville, Maine, where his soul awoke to know God and Christ. His classmate and very dear personal friend was Louis N. Beaudry, afterward widely known as Chaplain Beaudry. Young Beaudry came with Joseph Cook from Ticonderoga to Keeseville Academy as a Catholic. He invited young Cook to attend Catholic services one Sunday with him, and Cook consented on condition that Beaudry would go with him to the services in the Congregational Church, of which the Rev. John Mattocks was then pastor.

"It was this John Mattocks," writes Mr. Cook, "who produced such an effect upon me that his memory has now for more than forty years towered above all others in Keeseville, except Judge Simmons's, as St. Paul's Cathedral towers above London roofs and domes and spires. . . . He was a man of commanding natural ability. Any intellectual career might have been open to him, for he belonged in the first rank in respect to moral and mental endowment. His charm to me consisted largely in the fact that his methods of presenting religious truths to an audience were those of a lawyer; that is to say, he never failed to give a reason for the faith that was in him. In a series of week-day evening discourses, full of calm but powerful thought and emotion, he preached once from the text: 'I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service.' The emphasis was placed on the words 'mercies' and 'reasonable,' and that sermon was the chief human instrumentality in causing me to try to do my whole duty. There was a religious awakening in progress in the church, but it was of the most thoughtful and quiet kind, though by no means lacking in depth and intensity of both conviction and feeling. Look on the Cross, and it will become no cross to bear the Cross. This was the profound exhortation of the evangelical preacher, and my experience justified it. Bunyan's Pilgrim, in the earlier stages of his journey, had no experiences which were not in substance mine also. With some fourteen others, mostly young men, several of whom became preachers, I was received into the Church on confession of faith."

JOSEPH COOK

Dr. Cook concludes his reminiscence of the pastor who led him to Christ by saying: "On the wall of my Lake George study at Cliff Seat, Ticonderoga, under Mr. Mattocks's best photographic portrait I have placed as a watchword this characteristic sentence from one of his discourses: 'Temptation resisted gives infinitely more pleasure than temptation triumphant.'"

It was exceedingly interesting to me, a few days after receiving the communication of which the above is a part, to receive from Dr. Cook a second letter, in which he says: "The enclosed 'Boston Hymn' is a better account of the inner process of my experience in entering the church than is given in my former letter." With that thought in mind, I am sure it will be interesting to every one to re-read Dr. Cook's famous "Boston Hymn," which was first sung at his two hundred and thirty-sixth Boston Monday Lecture, January 29, 1894. The theme is "Atonement," and it was sung to the tune "Rock of Ages."

Searching sun and holy sky,
God is great and heaven is high:
Who can wash my red, right hand?
This I ask of sea and land!

Who from guilt can give release?
After treason, where is peace?

Lawless soul from reason left,
I my Father's house have left;
Famished sit among the swine,
I of lineage divine;
Sick in heart, and hand, and head,
Perish here for want of bread.

Penitent, abased, and low,
To my Father I will go;
I no merit of my own
Claim before his great white throne Justly were I evermore
Exile from my Father's door.

Tidings blest from God I hear,
Ransom he from guilt and fear!
God in Christ Atonement makes;
He no penitent forsakes.
Grace is this beyond degree:
Robe of white he giveth me!

All the galaxies his hand
Holds as drifting grains of sand;
But in lowly hearts dwells he,
And his wounds have set us free.
Lo! the Cross for evermore
Exiles guides to Heaven's door.

Vision dazzling star and sun,
God and man in Christ made one,
Let the Cross the worlds amaze.
I am melted as I gaze:
Thee I serve for evermore,
Lord and Saviour, trust, adore!

GOV. JENNINGS AND MR. FLAGLER AT THE FAIR

COMMANDER BOOTH-TUCKER

THE PRIZE EXHIBIT AT MIAMI FAIR

A NEW FARM COLONY FOR UNEMPLOYED LABOR

The Salvation Army Planning to Establish an Extensive One in Southeastern Florida

THE Salvation Army's plan of colonizing the unemployed and worthy poor of our great cities on large farms has proven so successful in Colorado, California and Ohio, that the organization has determined to extend similar operations to other sections, and arrangements are now being made to establish a settlement in Florida. The readers of THE CHRISTIAN

HERALD are fully informed as to the purpose, conditions and progress of the farm colonies at Romie, California, and Amity, Colorado. The one more lately founded at Willoughby, Ohio, is being rapidly developed. An artesian well is being sunk, telephone wires run to the place, gardening operations begun, a large dairy established, a wide acreage of clover is promised, and a number of new cottages are being run up. Tomato culture, and the raising of celery, onions and vegetables on a large scale will be undertaken. A new canning factory at Willoughby has engaged, at a fair price, all the tomatoes the colonists will raise. Meanwhile, impoverished families from the crowded middle-western cities are being settled on the farm in neat little homes, which they have the sure hope of owning for themselves if they profit by the opportunities provided.

Commander Booth-Tucker, who has lately returned from Florida, is enthusiastic over the prospect of cologenerous terms, that they practically include a donation. It is a tribute to Salvation Army colonies that business men of the various sections in which they are located, have welcomed them. They are moral, industrious, temperance communities, exercising an influence for good. Mr. Flagler expressed great interest in the scheme, taking the Commander and his associates around in his private car or in his yacht, and giving them every opportunity of seeing the country thoroughly. The Governor of the State also showed warm good-will and approval. The Commander says:

"In our Florida settlement we expect to do intensive farming. More can be gotten out of one acre there than out of ten elsewhere. As we were on our way down to Miami (April 4), train-loads of vegetables were thundering past us to the Northern markets, and there commanding high prices."

During their stay, the fair was held at Miami, and through the good offices of the Governor and Mr. Flagler, photographs were obtained, which show just what may be expected of soil in that region. Two of these pictures, through the courtesy of Col. Brewer, Editor of the War-Cry, appear for the first time in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. In one, the prize exhibit—fifty-two different kinds of vegetables—the product of a woman's farming, is seen. In the other, Mr. Flagler

The object, as has been stated in these columns by Commander, being to "relieve congested cities of unemployed and to place waste labor on waste land means of waste capital."

Commander Booth-Tucker, writing of the farm colony plan, as a means of utilizing unemployed labor, says: "The object of these colonies is to take the surplus population of our great centres, and place them in homes of their own upon the land. Our principal colony is situated in Colorado, where some two thousand acres of rich alluvial land have been purchased and one hundred and fifty men, women and children have already been settled. Nearly every colonist is a married man with a family, some with very large families. Indeed, this has been the central pivot of the enterprise. Domicide, or the destruction of the family and the home, is one of the worst signs of modern civilization. The keenest anguish of a city life is that which comes around a starving family. The single man or woman is not to be so much pitied. It is much easier for such to gain a living. Even if they fall, they fall alone. It is far otherwise with a family. Here the finger-prints of poverty leave their blackest mark, and the suffering is the most appalling, because the victims consist largely of weak women and innocent children, and of just the class who are most eager to work, if they only nization there. A 5,000 acre tract of land near Miami is under consideration, and will probably be selected as the site for the new settlement. Mr. Henry M. Flagler, the Florida capitalist, has offered the property on such have the chance. Our plan says, in brief: 'Place the waste labor upon the waste land by means of the waste capital, and thereby convert this trinity of waste into a unity of production.'

IN OUR FATHER'S CARE

THE ships glide in at the harbor's mouth,
And the ships sail out to sea,
And the wind that sweeps from the sunny South
Is as sweet as sweet can be.
There's a world of toil and a world of pains,
There's a world of trouble and care,
But oh, in a world where our Father reigns,
There is gladness everywhere.

The earth is fair in the breezy morn,
And the toilers sow and reap,
And the fullness comes to the tasselled corn,

Whether we wake or sleep,
And far on the hills by feet untrod,
There are blossoms that scent the air,
For oh, in this world of our Father, God,
There is beauty everywhere.

The babe lies soft on the mother's breast,
And the tide of joy flows in,
He giveth, he taketh, he knoweth best,
The Lord to whose home we win,
And oh, when the soul is with trials tossed,
There is help in the lifted prayer,

For never a soul that he loves is lost,
And our Father is everywhere.

The ships sail over the harbor bar
Away and away to sea.
The ships sail in with the evening star
To the port where no tempests be.
The harvest waves on the summer hills,
And the bands go forth to reap,
And all is right, as our Father wills,
Whether we wake or sleep.

Monotony on the Farm

MONOTONY on the farm is only harder to bear than monotony in the city, because the farm-house stands by itself in the fields, the routine of the work is little varied, and there are not many neighbors to run in and help pass the time. A breath of new interest, a change of scene helps us over many a hard place, and the woman, such alone, who just drudges on and on, toiling with verish energy, cooking, cleaning, sewing, working from morning until night, with nobody to talk to, and nothing to see, except chickens and cows, often grows cross and red, and sometimes ends in growing insane.

A farmer, not long ago, wrote to us that his wife, to whom he had been married for thirty years, and whom he tenderly loved, at times ran away, literally that. She would disappear for days or weeks, and could not be traced. A restless fit would come over her, and she simply could not stand her life any longer, for the time being. After awhile, he said, she would return, quiet and contented and her old self. Another husband is in desperate straits, so sharp and bitter-tongued is his wife. The poor man cannot say a word to please her, and she is at his wit's end. Living with a new is really harder than living with a new, but neither condition is ideal.

There are many ways of improving most situations if we would but avail ourselves of them. The nervous woman who realizes that she cannot control herself as easily as she once did, who knows that she is fretful and cross and a nagger, may do a great deal for herself. If, when the fits of energy and unreason mingled, drive her ahead like a ship under full sail, she will just go away by herself and sit still for ten minutes, eyes shut, hands folded, body relaxed, she will find the exercise in patience beneficial. If she will let go of the house, let it be occasionally ill-swept, let the housework drag a little, in the end she will catch up with her tasks. They could have to be neglected if she were in her grave. Our world does manage to go somehow when our toiling hands are still. The other day I saw a child of eight happily playing with her mates, and asked, "Who is the little stranger on the block?" "Oh! that is Trudy," was the answer. "Her mother died last month; she dropped dead in the middle of everything, and left six, Trudy's the oldest child; there are two pairs of twins." "And who is taking care of that motherless brood?" I asked. "An aunt has come to the house, and another aunt has taken Trudy and Willy, and they're getting on. Poor Mrs. L— was just tired to death."

Friends, if we can help ourselves, let us stop short of getting tired to death. Let us get rested this side of the danger line. The man who sees that his wife is not her usual bright self, should carry on a mental process after this fashion: "Hester is restless. She has no appetite. She looks worn and pale. What can I do? Am I petting and praising her as I used to? Am I giving her as much help as I can about the house?" (There are many things a man can do, quite as well as his wife; not merely in the line of wood-chopping and building fires. He may manage a washing machine, and do the churning, and put his strength to use in lifting and carrying. He can and should halve the care of his own children.) The good husband may persuade his wife to go away on a visit to her mother, if his means permit, he and she may go away on a journey together. Love, tact and common sense are three great helps in smoothing the pathway of married life.

Cobbler's Philosophy

"A stitch in time saves nine, Mabel," said old Jacob, a French cobbler, taking the old worn shoe in his hand, and looking it over. "Don't fear, child, I can't make it as good as new, but I'll patch it up, at sole and all, so that it will give you good service yet." "I often think," he went on, "of the ways people wear their shoes. Some run them down at the heel; some are hard on the toes, and some seem to break through their shoes at every point. Character is shown in a half-worn shoe; whether a man is sober and steady, or reckless and impulsive. There's real economy in buying a good shoe, to begin with. A pair of well-made shoes will outlast two poorly-sewed pairs. A man with false pride will be ashamed of a mended shoe, but therein he shows that he has a mean spirit. Honesty need never go in rags; it can afford repairs. Now, Mabel, remember in your cobbling, not to let things go till nobody can mend them. Try a stitch in time."

Visiting Cards.

The caprices of the visiting card are many. Sometimes it is small and square, again it is large and oblong. Now, the fancy may be for black type, like printing; again, an engraved script in letter style is preferred. The usual form for a matron is, Mrs. Lucien Brown, through if Mrs. Brown be a widow she may, if she choose, have Mrs. Sarah Jane Brown instead. Most widows at this time retain the style they used during their husband's life. The oldest daughter in the household is Miss Brown on her visiting card. The next, Miss Helen. The next, Miss Marie, or whatever the name is. But the sisters may occasionally use a common card in their invitations, as The Misses Brown, or their mother may issue cards for a lawn party or a reception with Mrs. Lucien Brown at the top and the Misses Brown below. A man's card is very modest, and very small. A husband and wife who go out much together—which does not often happen—may have their visiting cards thus: Mr. and Mrs. Lucien Brown.

It is not necessary to shower visiting cards in making calls. Punctilious people occasionally leave half a dozen at each place they visit, one apiece, that is for the family, but this is a superfluity of attention, and a single card is really quite sufficient.

FULL ASSURANCE

DRAWING near with full assurance,
Ah, my soul, how can it be?
How canst thou, condemned and sinful,
Think of God as near to thee?

He is faithful that has promised,
Here my soul has found its rest;
And, by fully trusting Jesus,
With assurance I am blest.

So I come, my sins confessing,
Boldly come, without a fear,
All my right in Christ possessing,
To the Father, "drawing near."

THE LATE MAJOR D. W. WHITTLE,

In Jonathan and Other Poems.

Keeping a Diary

WE are told that Queen Victoria forbade the ladies in immediate attendance upon her to keep a diary in which court gossip might hereafter please curious eyes. Here the Queen showed her rare sagacity, for, though these personal records of other reigns in France, England, and Germany have made entertaining reading for modern eyes, yet they have sometimes revealed circumstances and incidents which might as well have been forgotten. Whether or not the court ladies kept diaries, no sovereign has the authority to prevent our doing so if we please, and it is to be hoped that many of us have formed the habit.

A diary in the old days, if we are to judge from the memoirs of many of the saints, was a record of the inner life. Were we to set down in black and white all our vain regrets for the sins and mistakes of the past, our little books would not furnish very profitable reading. But this is not an age of introspection. Probably we are less morbid now; certainly we brood less over errors, and try, as steadfastly to live the Christ-life as our ancestors did. Our diaries are rather objective than subjective. We make them pictorial histories of our family life, setting down births, betrothals, weddings, visits, journeys, the pleasant happenings of an ordinary household. Tears wet the page sometimes, for trouble comes, and death and days of grief, but the rose color in most lives predominates over the gray, and more of the life story is bright than sorrowful.

She who would really keep a diary must be provided with a little blank book, and a pen, and accustom herself to entering her record every day. To omit the jottings for a week is fatal to success. One must make a duty of the task, and never go to bed until the page for the day has its little story inscribed.

Be Ye Kind to One Another*

"Be ye kind to one another," thus hath said our blessed Lord, Let us seek his gracious Spirit, that we may obey his word. O! what sorrow oft we've given to the friends we've loved most dear, And what grief to Christ in heaven, by the harsh words spoken here.

"Be ye kind to one another"; brief the life that here we live; Tears are all around us flowing, comfort let us strive to give; Shed thy tears alone with Jesus, all thy trouble to him bring, Then with smiles for all around thee, shed forth sunshine for the King.

"Be ye kind to one another"; soon the parting hour will come, Then, what sadness to remember, how we've marred the earthly home; How we oft by lack of kindness, cheerless left an aching heart, And by selfish word, or action, caused the silent tear to start.

"Be ye kind to one another"; Jesus thus is glorified, For he saith that his disciples are by this identified; "God is love," and from his children naught but love should ever flow, That the love of God our Saviour this sad world might fully know.

An Observer in New York†

LET the young man who feels himself fit bring his skill, character, integrity, brains, enterprise, and health into the great arena of competition which New York offers, and enter the strife—not aiming to accumulate this world's goods, except incidentally; but let his aim ever be the education and elevation of his mind and his soul to higher and better things.

This is the only success or goal worth a man's striving for. To the growing man every other kind will prove to be Dead Sea fruit, and will sooner or later turn to bitterness and leave him desolate. Let him be earnest and diligent in his business, whatever that may be; but keep ever before his mind this divine injunction: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." To such a one New York will yield its choicest gifts.

A Mission to the Rich

If you are ambitious for missionary work, and earnestly desire to teach the doctrine of peace, love, and human brotherhood, don't go to some far-away island or strange people, but come to Manhattan Island. There is no place on earth more in need of missionaries than this island. Not so much among the poor, and weak, and lowly, but among the rich and powerful. The East Side and the West Side are fairly well supplied with missions already. In fact, missions "on the side" is a New Yorkite fad. What we need most is missions in the centre. We need strong men whose daily lives are missions, and I earnestly commend this work to ambitious young men.

The Right Idea of Money-Earning

If a thousand dollars comes into your possession, and does not bring with it the training, discipline, and developing influences which justly belong to the honest earning of it by the exercise of skill or knowledge of some kind, then you have been cheated out of the best part of that thousand dollars. That thousand-dollar bill you hold in your hand is spurious; it is a counterfeit—not a thousand dollars at all to you, its so-called owner. You have been deprived of the elevating and evolving influences which are inseparable from the labor necessary to honestly acquire that amount of money.

About Gambling

I know of no way to determine how bad a given form of gambling is except by comparing its destructive effects with other kinds of gambling. If this is a safe rule, then stock gambling is the worst of all, for it has brought more wide-spread grief and sorrow than any other form. More reputations have been blasted, more men who occupied positions of trust and usefulness have been sent to State's prison or made fugitives from justice, more brilliant careers of usefulness have been destroyed, and more of other people's money has been lost, as a result of stock gambling, than by all the gambling-houses and pool-rooms in New York put together. Yet stock gambling is eminently respectable from the standpoint of the moral New Yorkite.

The Yellow God

In some parts of the world, in Siam for instance, the people worship and hold sacred the white elephant. There are dun elephants which can do everything that a white elephant can do, but the people for generations have suffered from the illusion that the white elephant possesses certain inherent virtues not possessed by any other member of the animal kingdom. They have worshipped it so long that the delusion has become a fixed and unthinking fetish with them. And the priests, who are materially benefited by the prevalence of this doctrine, will kill you if you attempt to dispel the illusion. The New Yorkite suffers from a similar illusion about one of the metals, namely, gold. You cannot get it out of his mind that this one member of the mineral kingdom possesses certain intrinsic virtues not possessed by any other metal.

A moral New Yorkite will go to church Sunday morning, and drone out, "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth; thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them," and for the remaining six days of the week he worships gold, and he will break the other nine commandments in his efforts to get it. If you suggest to him that his affection for this particular metal is an illusion, you are fortunate if he applies no stronger epithet than "crank" to you.

Windows Closed Against the Angels

How often we meet a man again after years, and find that he is no worse and no better, no wiser and no sillier, than when we met him last! He has learned nothing and forgotten nothing. And so far as you can judge from his physiognomy and his talk, he has not had a new mental or moral insight, or made a new generalization, or drawn a new mental circle, or changed his estimates, or enlarged his mantle of charity, since you last talked with him. He has had births, deaths, and marriages in his family; he has had business troubles; he has been done up by a sharper, and steadily robbed by corporations of one kind and another; he has toiled every day for a living; but all of these angels found the windows and doors of his mind and soul closed when they called, and could leave him nothing of benefit.

The Rise of David*

THE ascent of David from the station of a poor shepherd boy, the youngest son of a large family in a small Judean village, to the throne of Israel, was due to the possession of an extraordinary combination of high qualities.

Physically he was "ruddy and withal of a beautiful countenance and goodly to look to," of great strength, endurance and activity, very dexterous in the use of weapons and musical instruments, and of rare and persuasive voice in speech and song. Mentally he developed high ability as a leader in war, a civil ruler, a law maker, a naturalist, a poet, a philosopher and a theologian, and he was renowned for courage, firmness, energy, hope, faith, long suffering and other qualities that command success and authority.

But physical powers may be perilous if undirected by mind. The union of the two are dangerous to mankind if unguided by right purposes, and, as all biography proves, these have their highest inspiration from belief, obedience and love regarding a supreme force controlling the universe, however it be named or conceived by humanity. Strength and address of body are but the roots, mental qualities are but the branches and foliage, of a manhood which can only be complete in the blossoms of true sentiment and the fruits of a righteous and lofty spirit. It was this completion of David's nature that perfected his greatness in all things. His activity of body and energy of mind culminated in zeal of soul. His magnanimity in triumph, his lack of arrogance and false pride, his hatred of baseness in friend or foe, his sympathy for the worthy in distress, his generosity, his unfailing gratitude to his helpers in need, and his respect for all in authority, are but the lesser evidences of his higher character. He had not merely a lofty appreciation of beauty, fitness, righteousness and spirituality, but an earnest love for them in all things.

Thus David's heart controlled his thoughts and actions, and it is the general loveliness, sincerity, uprightness and purity of its impulses that most distinguishes his career. That which weak or ill-developed men cannot or will not confess, which reserved men hold to in silence or which excitable ones declaim without consistency, was not merely his attribute as a lover or poet, but was his living glory and as normal a part of his being as his vigor of frame and energy of mind. And it is the warmth, the impetuosity and exaltation of feeling he evinced that most endears him, as it does all true genius, to the hearts of men. His heart and its emotions are, indeed, constantly referred to in the Psalms and glorify their language throughout, so that we hardly need his open declarations: "I commune with mine own heart"; "With my whole heart have I sought thee"; "I will praise the Lord with my whole heart"; "My heart trusteth in him"; "I will love thee, O Lord, my strength!" and many other passages, to prove their inspiration. How beneficent is the Creator in making this grace of heart, this highest attribute of manhood, free to all humanity. Comparatively few among the toiling millions of earth have opportunity to eat bountifully of the tree of knowledge, whose fruit, while at times poisonous in its immaturity, is so rich in nutriment when fully ripe, but the poorest and most ignorant slave can share with kings the wisdom of Nature's infallible teachings, the charms it presents to every sense, the tenderness of love and a zealous devotion to deity.

Conferring on Missions

AN IMPORTANT CONFERENCE RECENTLY HELD IN NEW ORLEANS

BY C. P. ATKINSON

DURING the great Ecumenical Missionary Conference held in New Orleans last year, the delegates from the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held a meeting to consider how best to turn to practical account the suggestions which had been made during those wonderful days of blessing. Subsequently, after consultation with the Missionary Board of the Church, it was decided to hold a conference in New Orleans, at which new plans for extended and more efficient work in every field occupied by the Methodist Episcopal Church South should be considered. That Conference has now been held. More than a thousand delegates assembled in Tulane Hall, which is part of Tulane University. Rev. S. S. Keener, D.D., Presiding Elder, and Dr. E. L. McGhee, a prominent physician of New Orleans, and other members of the managing committee, had labored arduously in arranging the details for the success of the Conference. The assembly was one that will not soon be forgotten by any who witnessed it.

V. S. S. KEENER, D.D.

Among the notable persons on the platform were Bishop J. C. Kner, who has been in the ministry about sixty years, and a bishop thirty-five years, and who founded the mission in Mexico; Bishop J. M. Thoburn, of India, a veteran missionary of the M. E. Church; Dr. Young J. Allen, an aged missionary from China, with long, flowing beard and princely bearing; Bishops Hendon, Granberg and Key, and Rev. Dr. A. I. Sotherland, of Canada.

President Booker T. Washington, of Tuskegee, Ala., represented the cause of the race from his standpoint, while there was the utmost concordance between his utterances and those of the white preachers of the South who have labored in that field, his presentation was unique in being from a standpoint wholly new. The immense audience hung with overpowering enthusiasm for more than an hour upon the earnest words of this negro teacher.

There was no more inspiring message than that brought by Bishop J. M. Thoburn, who has spent the long years of his life in trying to supply with the Bread of Life. The Church listens with great interest in these times to well-informed laymen. Mr. John Barrett has spent most of the years of his active service since reaching manhood in the Far East. He was appointed Minister to Siam when but twenty-seven years of age, and has not only lived abroad, but has traveled much in the mission fields of the churches. He was secured by the Programme Committee to give a "Layman's View of the Future of Missions." His optimistic message was full of a hope based upon thorough investigation.

TULANE UNIVERSITY, NEW ORLEANS

The readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD know Bishop Thoburn's self-sacrificing labors in the Indian famine. His message to the great Conference was concerning the hunger of soul, which he has spent the long years of his life in trying to supply with the Bread of Life.

The Church listens with great interest in these times to well-informed laymen. Mr. John Barrett has spent most of the years of his active service since reaching manhood in the Far East. He was appointed Minister to Siam when but twenty-seven years of age, and has not only lived abroad, but has traveled much in the mission fields of the churches. He was secured by the Programme Committee to give a "Layman's View of the Future of Missions." His optimistic message was full of a hope based upon thorough investigation.

The devotional half-hour each day, at noon, was conducted by Dr. and Mrs. Howard Taylor. Dr. Taylor has been identified with the China Inland Mission, founded by his father, Dr. J. Hudson Taylor. Mrs. Taylor after mission work, in London, was for years engaged in the same work in China. The short space of time devoted to prayer under their guidance, was a benediction in the midst of each day.

Dr. W. H. Park, of Soo Chow, China, was secured to speak on Medical Missions. After an interesting address he introduced two native Chinese gentlemen from Soo Chow. They were Mr. B. G. Tshang and his Secretary, Mr. Tso. Mr. Tshang is a Buddhist, but is very friendly to the mission in his city. Mr. Tso is a Christian, and speaks English. He spoke for Mr. Tshang to the Conference. It was by means of an operation upon the eyes of one of Mr. Tshang's nephews, the brother of Mr. Li, that Dr. Park came into the great favor of this family. They have contributed in the last year or two about five thousand dollars for the work of the mission, mainly in the hospital and the university now being built.

A feature of the Conference, which was wholly unplanned, was a missionary offering of more than fifty thousand dollars. At the close of a very inspiring address on "Missionary Heroes," by Bishop C. B. Galloway, a check was sent up. Others began to come, and spontaneously the amount was offered as fast as names could be written. This subscription is thoroughly substantial. Bishop Thoburn said that it had hardly ever been equaled by any missionary offering in the world in one collection.

Mr. Jno. R. Mott contributed not a little to the inspiration of personal missionary conviction. At the close of one of his addresses a large number of young men and women volunteered for missionary service. Mr. Mott was appointed to make the last address, "Missions and Prayer." It was desired that the great Conference should disperse bedewed with fervent prayer and consecration for service. Such a desire was undoubtedly realized.

The Northfield Conferences

THE summer Conferences at Northfield will extend from June 14 to September 2. Since their establishment by Mr. Moody in 1886, these Conferences have been favored by steady and continuous growth, indicating a popular desire among Christian people for a truer life and a deeper interest in Bible study. The following are the three main divisions of the programme, the general platform meetings being held at 11 A. M. and 8 P. M.:

(1) Student Conference, June 28, July 7, 22; (2) Young Women's Conference, July 12, 22; (3) General Conference for Christian Workers, August 1-18. The speakers will include Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D.D., Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, Rev. Samuel Chadwick, President Seth Low, LL.D., Rev. John Douglass Adams, D.D., Dr. and Mrs. Howard Taylor, Rev. Charles Erdman, D.D., Rev. R. A. Torrey, Rev. C. I. Schofield, Rev. Founis S. Hamilton, D.D., Rev. A. C. Dixon, D.D., Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D., John Willis Baer, Mrs. Margaret Sangster, and others.

Special interest centres in the Young Women's Conference, which this year presents unusually attractive features. "Institutes," aside from the general meetings, will be held to provide for special interests, such as the Young People's Institute, the Musical Institute, etc. The Y. M. C. A. encampment on the mountain side offers to young men a fine vacation at small expense. Four hundred tented there last year. There will be a similar camp for young women.

Visitors come to these conferences from all parts of the world. The students represent thirty-five out of fifty-one different States and Territories, besides twenty-six different foreign countries.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

Mrs. J. M. A., Boulder, Col., writes:

I have been praying for three blessings and I have received all in less than three months after the first prayer.

E. B. B., Waverly, Tex., writes:

I have been called upon in the past year to bear many of life's heaviest burdens, but through constant, earnest prayer the burdens have grown lighter and I am now enabled to say, "Not my will, but thine be done."

S. E. S., Hollenberg, Kan., writes:

I prayed that God would bring home a brother who had been away for some time. Also that another brother might be led to see the need of making a public profession of his faith in Christ. A way was soon provided for the return of the absent one. The other has openly confessed Christ before men by uniting with the Church. To God be the glory. Let us ask largely that our joy may be full.

Mrs. O. M., Seattle, Wash., writes:

I see that many write to tell you of answers to prayer. I would like to tell you that God has answered many prayers for me. The answer to the last came almost immediately. Being very uneasy as to the safety of a loved one, I took my trouble to God, and he has brought him safely home to me.

A. A. C., Catlett, Va., writes:

I read the testimony of answered prayers and it helped me. I had a great trouble and sorrow, which it seemed I could not bear, but God, in answer to my poor heart's cry, has helped me to endure it.

Mrs. I. W. L., Luther Springs, N. Y., writes:

I prayed God to bring my husband and my two sons to him. He has done it.

Mrs. C. J. M., Newark, N. J., writes:

God has answered my prayers so many times that I am glad to add my testimony to that of others, and I thank him for unanswered, as well as for answered prayers.

Mrs. R. J. H., Citronelle, Ala., writes:

With others I can testify to answered prayers, in regard to help in business perplexities, and also in regard to the safety of an absent loved one. I fully believe that more prayers would be answered if our faith were greater.

Mrs. Margaret C. Vaughan, Mt. Vernon, Ohio, writes:

I want to acknowledge publicly, answered prayer for our Primary Union, and many, many for myself and dear ones. Our Union had gotten to a place that no one but God could help us. A minister even said, "I don't believe I'd try to keep it up; why seek to force people to be blessed?" I said: "It is the Lord's work, he will take care of it." He has, and we are now having fine meetings. I hope this will encourage other struggling Unions in prayer and faithfulness.

Mrs. N. E. C., Escondido, Calif., writes:

Being greatly helped in reading the answers to prayers in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, I want to give my testimony to God's goodness. For a great many years I have been a believer in direct answer to prayer. In the last three months I have had to call on God for both bodily and spiritual strength. He has wonderfully helped me; and yesterday I received direct answer to prayer.

FRESH AT NIGHT.

If One Uses the Right Kind of Food.

If by proper selection of food one can feel strong and fresh at the end of a day's work, it is worth while to know the kind of food that will produce this result.

A school teacher of Media, Kan., says in this connection, "I commenced the use of Grape-Nuts Food five months ago. At that time my health was so poor that I thought I would have to give up my work altogether. I was rapidly losing in weight, had little appetite, was nervous and sleepless, and experienced, almost constantly, a feeling of exhaustion. I tried various remedies without good results, then I determined to give particular attention to my food, and have learned something of the properties of Grape-Nuts for rebuilding the brain and nerve centers.

I commenced using that food and have since made a constant and rapid improvement in health, in spite of the fact that all this time I have been engaged in the most strenuous and exacting work.

I have gained twelve pounds in weight and have a good appetite, my nerves are steady, and I sleep sound. I have such strength and reserve force that I feel almost as strong and fresh at the close of a day's work as at the beginning.

Before using Grape-Nuts I was troubled much with weak eyes, but as my vitality increased the eyes became stronger. I never heard of food as nutritious and economical as Grape-Nuts. Please omit my name from print." Name can be given by Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

WHERE'S THE USE?

Drugging with Coffee and Keeping Sick all the Time.

A coffee drinker is liable to a smash almost any time and without much warning. A New York man, C. W. Bedford, 1065 Lex. Ave., says that when he was in apparently perfect health, weighing about 185 pounds, with good appetite, he suddenly had a severe attack of gastritis. He lost his appetite and the doctor put him on a rigid diet and gave him remedies, but all to no purpose. He says: "Everybody I met had a remedy and I tried a lot of them. I lost weight until I reached 144 pounds. I had those nasty gastric staggers."

About the middle of the summer, when on a vacation, a friend asked whether I drank coffee or not. Being told that I did, he suggested that I quit it and take Postum Food Coffee and Grape-Nuts breakfast food. I laughed at him and told him that I was through with special articles of diet.

One day the nerves had another bad smash and I concluded to quit coffee and see if that was really the cause of the trouble.

Next morning I had Postum for breakfast and it was well made, and tasted good. I also had Grape-Nuts for breakfast, and from that day my troubles began to fade away.

I am steadily gaining in flesh, can sleep naturally, and can eat whatever I want. What is the use of a man's drinking an article like coffee that poisons him, and causes such troubles as I have had when you can have a delicious Food Coffee like Postum that builds up instead of tearing down. Health is worth more than all the coffee on earth.

REVERENCE FOR SACRED THINGS*

Compatible with Cheerfulness and Happiness in this Life

HERE is a deep significance in the conduct of this lonely shepherd in Horeb. He had known the splendors of the most powerful court in the world; he had fought the battle with himself of which the outcome was the renunciation of his aristocratic connections and his identification with a race of slaves; he had been obliged to flee for his life, and his fiery nature had brought him into collision with oppression in another form; he had championed the cause of the girl shepherds against the bullies of the desert, as he had championed the cause of the Hebrew slave against the Egyptian oppressor; now he had settled down into the quiet life of a shepherd. This Don Quixote, who seemed to have taken on himself a commission to right the wrongs of the world, had become a keeper of sheep. Perhaps it was necessary that this chivalrous soul should have a period of quiet and retirement before undertaking a task of a much greater order than could be done by his own physical power. One wonders how much he knew of God at this time. His mother, in her capacity of nurse, may have instilled some knowledge into his childish mind, but it could not have been much. His education at court could not have taught him anything on the subject. But when God speaks to him out of the burning bush, he is at once full of awe and reverence. Scientific curiosity gives place to adoration and humble submission.

Moses suddenly and unexpectedly found himself in the presence of God, and God was speaking to him. Instantly he was solemnized, and waited to hear what God would say to him. That is not always our attitude. There come times in every life when God speaks to the individual. Sometimes it is in the death of one near and dear to him. Standing by the bedside of the one setting out on the mysterious journey, the conviction fills the soul that wealth and power and fame which before seemed so paramount in life, are trivialities in comparison with the unseen realities of the future world. Pleasure which was so delightful, sinks to the level of boyish amusement unworthy of the man. God is speaking then, and there is a solemnity in the situation which demands reverent attention, for it is a call to serious work. Or it is in some great danger. On a ship at sea in a storm, when there is a possibility if not a probability of a wreck and a watery grave. Then the world sinks into insignificance, and the only thing of importance is the record with which the soul must stand before God. Before that, the subject of death may have been the subject of joke, but in the actual presence of the great enemy, the voice of God is heard calling the soul to serious consideration. Or it may have been in financial disaster, or in some domestic crisis, or under the stirring appeals of some earnest preacher that God speaks, calling a man to recognize under the hilarities and worldly occupations of life, the existence of the eternal verities. Brought thus into the very presence of God, how do we behave? Do we listen with reverence and yield to the demand which that voice makes? Or do we shake off the solemn impression as speedily as possible and resume the old life?

These, however, as Job said, "are the outskirts of God's ways; but how little a portion is heard of him!" Moses and Isaiah and Ezekiel and others of God's servants believed that they stood in his actual presence and they were overwhelmed. It is not surprising, for when we try to conceive of the Almighty, the Creator of heaven and earth, the mind fails to form any idea of his infinite majesty. And into that Presence we must all go. John saw the dead, small and great, stand before God. The thought of that ordeal is enough to solemnize the soul for all life. But it is here that Christ's revelation of him comes to our relief. From him we learn to think of God as a loving Father to whom we may go without apprehension. Reverence we must have, but it is the reverence of loving trust, not the abject dread of the slave. The consciousness of reconciliation with him through Christ supports us in looking forward to coming into his actual presence. Without that consciousness the thought of the ordeal must at times appal the most trivial and light-hearted being. To be relieved of the dread, to know that there is no condemnation for them who are in Christ Jesus is a comfort that enhances the innocent pleasures of life. So reverence becomes compatible with enjoyment, and the Christian has the right to be the most joyous of men. Reverence brings no gloom into his life. It leaves him free to enjoy the good things that God has provided for his creatures, undisturbed by a dread that sooner or later must intrude in every thoughtless mind. It does not lead to levity, or to frivolity, but it directly promotes true happiness. It introduces us to the communion with God, which sanctifies and beautifies all our business and all our pleasures. It is the attitude that the loving and dutiful son takes toward the father whom he reverences and loves. Perfect love casts out fear, but it increases reverence, and leads to a conformity of life with the Being whom we reverence, which ends in his presence, where there is fullness of joy.

WHAT GREAT MEN HAVE SAID ABOUT THE BIBLE*

Matthew Arnold on the Bible

TO the Bible men will return because they cannot do without it; just as a man who tried to give up food, thinking it a vain thing, would return to food. . . . All Scripture is practical, and intended to minister to our improvement rather than to our curiosity. It is astonishing how a Bible sentence clinches and sums up an argument. The old Bible is getting to be to us literary men of England a sealed book. We may think that we know it; we were taught it at home; we heard it read in church; perhaps we can quote some verse or even passage, but we really know very little of it. I wish you would take up the Old Testament, and go through it as though every page were altogether new to you—as though you had never read a line of it before. I think that it will astonish you.

Bismarck—God's Will in the Gospels

For me the phrase "by the grace of God," affixed by Christian rulers to their names, forms no empty sound; but I see in it the acknowledgment that princes desire to sway the sceptre intrusted to them by the Almighty, according to God's will on earth. I, however, can only recognize as the will of God that which is contained in the Christian Gospels.

Carlyle on Luther's Bible

It must have been a blessed discovery, that of an old Latin Bible which Luther found in the Erfurt library. He had never seen the Book before. It taught him another lesson than that of fasts and vigils. He learned now that a man is saved not by singing masses, but by the infinite grace of God; a more credible hypothesis. He gradually got himself founded as on the rock. No wonder that he should venerate the Bible, which had brought this blessed help to him. He prized it as the Word of the Highest must be prized by such a man. He determined to hold by that; as through life and to death he firmly did.

Goethe Relates his Experience

When, in my youth, my ever-active imagination bore me away, now hither, now thither; and when all this blending of history and fable, of mythology and religion, threatened to unsettle my mind; glad then did I flee toward those Eastern countries. I buried myself in the first books of Moses, and there amidst those wandering tribes I found myself at once in the grandest of solitudes and in the grandest of societies. . . . It is a belief in the Bible, the fruit of deep meditation, which has served me as the guide in my life. I have found it a capital investment and richly productive of interest.

John's Vision of the Lord

A Preparation for the Reception of a Revelation of the Future

...BY MRS. M. BAXTER...

HE disciple whom the Lord loved begins the book of Revelation by a salutation from the Lord Jesus Christ to the Church, signed thus, "I am the Alpha and the Omega, saith the Lord God, which is and which was, and which is to come." (Rev. 1:8, R. V., margin). How different is this apostle's introduction of himself. He had seen the Lord, and in the light of a vision he was as nothing: "I, John, your brother and partaker with you in the tribulation." Such is his description of himself (Rev. 1:9, R. V.).

And he speaks thus of his circumstances: "I was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God and the testimony of Jesus." According to man, the apostle was exiled by his persecutors, because of his faithfulness; but, as God sees, and as he himself saw, he was there in order to receive a scripture to the Scriptures of the New Testament. He was there to receive the Revelation, "which God gave him to show unto his servants, even the things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified by his angel unto his servant John" (Rev. 1:1, R. V.). And again: "I was in spirit in the day of the Lord"—thought by several to be the literal reading of the Greek. The apostle was by persecution and exile abstracted from his ordinary labors in one church at Ephesus, where he was a father in Christ, who knew "him which is from the beginning" (1 John 2:12, 14); and where, doubtless, his time would be fully occupied. He was brought into solitude, where God could have him apart, and make known to him his purposes for the future in the Church, for Israel, and for the world.

Prepare him for all he must see of the apostasy of the Church, which should postpone the coming of the Lord; of the awful sin of man, and of the unspeakable glory which should follow his complete cleansing out of his kingdom of "all things that offend" (for cause stumbling), and of them that do iniquity" (Matt. 13:41). The apostle must have a vision of Christ in glory.

Eng in spirit in the day of the Lord, the apostle John heard behind him "a great voice, as a trumpet." Was it that the voice itself was so loud, or that the attentive ears of the apostle always heard that voice above all other voices, because he habitually gave himself to listen for it? The Voice said, "What thou seest, write in a book, and send it to the seven churches. And I turned to see the voice which spake with me, and, having turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks, and in the midst of the candlesticks [the seven churches—v. 20], One like unto the Son of Man." Isaiah saw the Lord attended by seraphim, or shining ones; Ezekiel saw him upon the cherubim, so closely connected with and overshadowing the mercy-seat, in the tabernacle and in the temple; Daniel saw him alone, and unattended; and John saw him in the midst of the churches. May not the members of the Church, which is his body, be the shining ones, upholding his life by their lives of witness for him?

John saw his Lord and ours in the same only garment in which Daniel saw him (Dan. 10:5; 12:7), and with the same golden girdle (truth?), offering "both gifts and sacrifices for sin" (Heb. 5:1), being "a High Priest who sat down on the right hand of the Majesty in the heavens" (Heb. 8:1). In very reality he "a priest upon his throne," appearing before God for us; ever living to make intercession for us (Heb. 7:25). And yet so glorious, that Isaiah, the Gospel prophet of the Old Testament, cried out as he gazed upon such a Presence searched him, "We are met for I am undone; for I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts" (Isa. 6:5). Ezekiel fell upon his face (Ezek. 1:28). The holiness of Daniel was turned in him into corruption; he, the "man greatly beloved," attained no strength (Daniel 10:8). John, the beloved disciple, "fell at his feet as one dead." His presence withers ours. Nations tremble nothing before him, "less than nothing, and vanity."

Ezekiel heard his voice through the cherubim; "a noise of tumult like the noise of a river" (Ezek. 1:24); Daniel heard the voice of a glorified Son of Man "like the voice of a multitude" (Dan. 10:6); to John it was "as the voice of many waters." There was a multitude in that voice, for in the days of revelation, "he spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast" (Ps. 33:9). Surely the apostle John saw proceeding out of his mouth "a sharp two-edged sword"; "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God."

Each of these writers of the inspired books tells how Jesus appeared to them, and in each case what was the result to him. Have we seen Jesus? It is not necessary for us to become wonderful vision; if the Word of God has shown to our inner eye the Lord in any sense as he is, we, too, shall be fallen at his feet as dead. Our natural self-esteem and self-assertion, our sensitiveness to that which touches us, shrinks ashamed before him, as we see the glory of his deep humility, and are confounded by his most unmerited love. As long as we can compare ourselves with our fellow-Christians, we may continue to think there is some good thing in us, but when we see him in very deed, our comeliness is turned in us into corruption, and we can only wonder at his marvelous grace that he can tolerate such as we are; and only in confusion of face, and deep adoration, we can accept his unmerited grace.

Sympathy for China

DAYTON, Ohio. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S appeal for China's famine-stricken people touches me. I wish I could respond with a much larger donation than the enclosed, but I send it with large trust that he will again bless your efforts, as he did at the time of the famine in India. I truly believe that our Heavenly Father permits these famines, so that Christians may win a way into the hearts of these resentful ones, who have so opposed the approach of any who offered them food for their souls. Now an opportunity is offered to allay their hunger, generosity may awaken in them a desire for a better acquaintance with those who offer them food, and missionaries may be welcomed to instruct them in higher and better things. I shall pray for a ready, speedy response to your call for the millions in China. God has promised the "heaven for our inheritance," just for the asking. This is a promise on demand; it is not conditional, it is a pledge to the want and the claim, and the door is opening wide—opened by these dire calamities—kept open by generous heeding to their cry for help.

God bless those who plan and carry out these generous desires for their fellow creatures.

E. J. GEBHART.

A Share in Every Good Work

RICHMOND, VA. I am one of the number that have sent offerings to all of the different lands of famine and suffering. I herewith enclose five dollars for the starving of China, with my prayers that the example that the true Christian people of America set before them, the glorious light of the Holy Spirit may come unto them.

DR. O. W. JEWETT.

Let China Look to Christ

OBERLIN, O. I enclose one dollar and fifty cents for the benefit of the sufferers in China. May the Lord add his blessing, and help them to look to him in their great affliction, who is able to save both soul and body, and to deliver them from this great and fearful calamity.

MRS. LUCY MUNSON.

In Memory of a Friend

PHILADELPHIA, PA. Please find enclosed one dollar for the above cause. I wish it given in memory of a deceased friend, Mrs. Sarah E. Crawford, let her name only be known on your list. I feel deeply the cause. I pray the blessing of God to rest on your noble effort. May many thousands respond quickly. I wish I could make it larger.

To Buy a "Crumb of Bread"

THE CHURCH CHOIR ZOBO BAND OF PATERSON, N. J.

This band was organized by the church choir and Organist, Mr. W. F. Miller, as a means of raising money for Church and Missionary purposes. It was a success from the start, and has even participated in Easter Sunday service. The band is very proficient, and is now taking outside engagements. They find it a pleasant, profitable variation from routine work. Many Church Choirs have these Zobo Bands, and find them of great value. As a means of earning money for church purposes, a "Zobo Concert" invariably draws full houses. Zobo Bands can play any piece of music in all parts by ear or by note as preferred.

READ WHAT PASTORS AND ORGANISTS SAY ABOUT OUR INSTRUMENTS

G. B. Richardson, Business Manager of the "Young People's Weekly," Elgin, Ill., writes: "The Zobo Instruments I purchased of you were first used at an entertainment given at my home to the 200 employees of the 'Young People's Weekly.' Although the Quartette had opportunity for but one rehearsal the effort met unbounded enthusiasm and was voted a great success. We are now considering the organization of a full orchestra for next winter's entertainment, and I write this to ask you to forward me a select list of 12 to 15 instruments."

Wm. J. Siemers, leader of the Beacon Light Zobo Band, Baltimore, Md., writes: "I send you to-day copy of a Baltimore paper, giving a very complimentary notice of the 'Zobo' Concert given last night by the Beacon Light Zobo Band, composed of members of the choir of the Scott Street United Brethren Church. The concert was a great success, both artistically and financially, and at the close we received an offer at good pay for another."

Had we space we could quote you thousands of goods, but we believe we have quoted enough to satisfy that our goods are as represented.

engagement. Every church should have a Zobo Band. It is the pleasantest and easiest way of raising money that I ever tried or heard of, because any one that can hum a tune can play on a Zobo."

Miss Hattie E. Kountz, of Springfield, S. Dak., organist, choir leader, says: "Zobo Instruments received, and are all right, and we want more of them."

Rev. James C. Mitchell, of North Easton, N. J., says: "I have just received the Zobo Cornet and I am delighted with it; will organize a band."

Wm. F. Miller, organist and director of church choir of Park Ave. Baptist Church of Paterson, N. J., says: "I find the Zobo Brass Band Instruments to be first-class, and just what we needed. We have a fourteen piece Zobo band, and intend to enlarge it. We have had one Zobo Concert, and would say it was a complete success."

Mae Blance Winfield, instructor in music at Galloway Female College, of Searcy, Ark., says: "I am much pleased with the Zobo Band Instruments."

Such letters from renowned persons who have had our instruments, and we believe we have quoted enough to satisfy any reasonable person that we are perfectly reliable and that our goods are as represented.

CAN BE PLAYED BY ANY ONE WHO CAN HUM A TUNE—NO LEARNING

We do away with that long tedious labor of practice. It is the most extraordinary musical instrument ever produced. An instrument capable of almost every modulation, its music may be softened to the cooing of a dove or the thrilling song of the nightingale. The Cornet is an elegant accompaniment to Organ, Piano or any string instrument, and affords unlimited pleasure to the individual; suited for all in and outdoor entertainments. These instruments open up new possibilities to the Vocalists, and develop the vocal cords.

WITH A FULL BAND A GRAND PIPE ORGAN EFFECT CAN BE OBTAINED Those that have no pipe organ, the Zobo supplies the want at a minimum cost. Every church without a paid choir should organize a Zobo Church Choir Band. Sing into the mouthpiece—Zobo does the rest.

$1.00 SPECIAL OFFER To introduce the musical marvel of the age and to give you a chance to test our instruments and to prove all our claims, we will send you the Zobo Cornet, solid brass, highly polished and lacquered, 11 inches long, 5 1/2 inch bell, with full instructions how to play, and handsomely illustrated catalogue, carefully packed, transportation charges prepaid, for $1.00. This special offer also includes an entirely original and beautiful entertainment suited for every home, entitled "Topsy Turvy," by the famous Franklin Myers of the great Metropolitan. We make this special offer, believing that all interested will eventually organize a Zobo Band. This is a grand offer, and you should not miss it. We warrant each instrument just as represented or money refunded. Send money by registered letter, Postoffice money order, or a Bank Draft payable to our order.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

The usual five new questions are omitted this week, in order that other letters to "The Mail-Bag," many of them long delayed, may receive attention. Hereafter, once a month, the entire page will be devoted to this class of letters.

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

Mrs. L. E. W. What is the meaning of the phrase, "Gordian knot?"
Gordius was a peasant, who being chosen King of Phrygia, dedicated his wagon to Jupiter, and fastened the yoke to a beam with a rope so ingeniously tied that no one could untie it. King Alexander was told that "whosoever undid the knot would reign over the whole East." "Well, then," said the conqueror, "it is thus I perform the task," and so saying, he cut the knot in twain with his sword. To "cut the Gordian knot" is to evade a difficulty, or get out of it in a summary manner.

Lilhe H., Huscher, Kan. Do Christian people ever actually die of starvation?

Yes, such things have happened even in civilized lands. David's saying that he had never seen the seed of the righteous begging their bread doubtless had reference to his own observation exclusively, and he did not mean to lay down an inflexible rule.

A. B., Holloway, Minn. Is there any truth in the account of Christians being thrown to beasts and burnt as human torches by Nero, Emperor of Rome? I have lately read his life's history by Jacob Abbott, but he did not mention those things, and we have a little difference of opinion about it, although I maintain he did those things.

The charge is undoubtedly true and is repeated by the ablest historians. Suetonius (who was a foe to Christianity) praised Nero's persecution of the Christians. Tacitus says, "he inflicted the most exquisite tortures on these men," and a vast multitude were put to death in a revolting manner. Renan (see pages 157 to 173) gives a detailed account of the nature of these punishments, which included throwing to wild beasts, burning alive, scourging, torn to pieces by dogs, crucifixion, and "others were clothed in tunics dipped in oil, pitch or rosin, attached to stakes and reserved to illuminate the nocturnal festivities. When dusk came on these living torches were set on fire." This Nero did, says the historian, in his own gardens, on the site of the modern Borgo. Many of the tortures inflicted, especially upon women, were of a character unfit to be described. Wiedeler, Bunsen, Orosius, Schaff, and a number of other authorities, ancient and modern, also refer to the Neronian persecutions.

Regular Reader. When a minister has souls before him that are starving for the Bread of Life, is he justified in preaching thirty to forty minutes about the world, and only three to five minutes on anything that could be called the Gospel?

If he so neglects or abuses his opportunities for service he incurs a heavy responsibility. In these days of widespread, spiritual awakening, the Gospel should be more than ever the dominant theme in our pulpits.

E. D. C., Mentor, O. 1. What three languages are most extensively spoken? 2. How many Spanish-speaking people are there in the world, and are they generally Catholic in belief?

In regard to Oriental tongues, we have not exact data, but Chinese, spoken in its various dialects by over 300,000,000 people, is undoubtedly the language of the largest numbers. Of European languages, English (111,100,000), German (75,200,000), Russian (75,000,000), French (51,200,000), are graded in the order named by Mulhall's estimate of 1891. Whitaker's (London) Almanac, 1895, places the English-speaking population of the world at 124,130,000, not including, we believe, the more than 18,000,000 Orientals, who speak and read our tongue. The extension of English is of phenomenal rapidity. Mulhall's estimate for 1901 is 20,520,000; for German, 30,320,000; Russian, 30,770,000; French, leading them all, was 31,450,000. English is fast taking its place as the polite tongue of the world. 2. Forty-two million, chiefly Roman Catholics.

Mrs. A. B., Warsaw, Ind. When one church member is maligned by another of the same denomination, should the injured one suffer in silence, or vindicate his innocence?

There is, in ordinary cases, no reason why, if a false charge be made, the accused should not vindicate his innocence. On the other hand, it may not be material to do so, and there may be circumstances which suggest silence as the wiser course of meeting the accusation.

R. B. H., Lithonia, Ga. How is the "conscience money" that is sent to Washington, D. C., appropriated? Is it contributed to only by those who have taken from the United States, or does it apply to all who want to get back to God, and feel that they must first restore what has been falsely taken?

It applies only to those who have defrauded the Government, either by withholding duties justly due, or by receiving Government money to which they are not entitled. Such persons, desiring to make restitution, send the money to the Treasury Department "Conscience Fund," and it is counted as a part of the regular revenues of the Government, and applied accordingly.

G. H. H., St. Johnsbury, Vt. "Community of interest," as applied to railroads, is employed to indicate interests which any group or combination of roads may have in common, although they are separate and possibly even rival concerns. Thus it is for their common interest to unite against any influences that may tend to lower rates, to depreciate the value of holdings, to injuriously affect dividends, and to unite in opposition to legislation that may prove inimical to the roads interested. To establish a perfect "community of interest" between two roads, according to an authority on the subject, it is necessary that the stockholders of one should also be financially interested in the other, so that they may be depended upon to protect the interests of both.

Constant Reader, Diona, Ill. Agriculture was the first of all industries. Adam was a gardener. (See Gen. 2: 15). It is the most necessary of all even now, as the agriculturist feeds the world. It should be regarded as one of the highest and noblest, as the happiness and well-being of the race depend largely upon the character and quality of the food products. Scientific agriculture, as it is understood to-day, demands a knowledge of chemistry, physiology, botany, and allied studies. Agriculture is now taught as a special branch by a number of colleges here and abroad.

THE WASHINGTON TREE IN CAMBRIDGE

OUR photograph on this page, shows the famous "Washington Elm," at Cambridge, Mass. The tree is one of the most historic landmarks in that classic and historic town. It stands on the corner of Mason and Garden streets, and is at least a century and a-half old. It has wide-spreading branches with scraggy leaves at the top. Surrounding the base is an iron railing flanked by a marble slab, on which are inscribed the words that make the old elm one of the sights of the town. The inscription reads:

UNDER THIS TREE
GEORGE WASHINGTON
TOOK COMMAND OF THE CONTINENTAL ARMY
JULY 3, 1775.

Cambridge loves and cherishes its old Washington Elm and watches over it with jealous care.

G. F. C., Dover, Ill. I have often wondered why the rich do not remember the missionary work more in their many gifts to good objects. Can you give a reason for their not giving more for this object?

While there are, no doubt, many cases in which such a criticism may apply, there are on the other hand, so many who have made generous bequests for missionary work that it would obviously be unfair to make the criticism a sweeping one.

Reader, London, Ont. Are we justified in claiming the promise, "Ask and ye shall receive," when the blessing sought is not spiritual? If so, having prayed for it for many years without receiving it, should such prayers be discontinued?

It depends very much on the nature of the blessing sought. No one who has faith in divine wisdom and love would continue to desire anything which God saw that it would be injurious for him to have. If he realized that God withheld the desired object in love, he would be content and would pray for it no more. You remember that Paul prayed three times for the removal of the thorn in the flesh, and his remark about it implies that afterwards he ceased to pray for it. We are often mistaken in our idea that certain things that we desire would be blessings. God, who sees further than we do, may perceive that they would do us harm. On the other hand, when the object desired is an undoubted good, as in the salvation of a beloved child, the prayers should never be discontinued till they are granted.

H. M. S., Baltimore, Md. Can a Christian who is the publisher of a medical journal consistently accept advertisements setting forth the merits of beer or whiskey as a therapeutic agent to be used or prescribed by physicians?

If the publisher believes that beer and whiskey are of value as therapeutic agents, as many medical men do, should refuse to accept the advertisements. But if he takes the opposite view, that there are cases in which they are beneficial, he is entitled to publish the advertisements. It is a matter in which his own conscience must be obeyed. It is a different matter to publish an advertisement addressed to physicians from one addressed to the ordinary public. The CHRISTIAN HERALD refuses all such advertisements, believing that it would be wrong to insert them in a family journal.

Mary F., Reading, Pa. No; the so-called agnostics in Ohio have new rituals of their own for birth, marriage, and death. They emphasize their agnosticism in all their ceremonies and they make divorce an easy matter.

Rev. W. T. K., Locustville, Va. Please publish the Prohibition vote for President at the last election; and as compared with the vote received by the Prohibition candidates four years prior?

Jessie D., Rahway, N. J. Can money or property which has been earned by the united efforts of a husband and wife be seized and sold to pay a debt incurred by the husband for liquor?

If it can be shown that the property is the product of their joint labors, then, according to a recent decision in the St. Louis Court of Appeals, it cannot be levied upon to satisfy an individual debt contracted by either party, no matter whether the creditor be a saloon-keeper or not. It can only be seized and applied to the payment of joint debts or debts contracted for the joint interest of both husband and wife. The property be divisible, however, it might be held as legal and practicable to levy upon that portion of it which represented the interest of the individual debtor.

THE BLIND CHAPLAINS OF CONGRESS

Eloquent and Able, Though Wholly Sightless, Dr. Milburn and Mr. Couden Perform their Duties Faithfully—Two Remarkable Careers

CHAPLAINS of Congress, and chaplains in our Army and Navy, have been established facts for so long that their presence in these positions is now regarded as a matter of course; at the early days of the Republic this was not the case, and a strenuous effort was made to prevent their appointment. When it was proposed, at the first session of the Continental Congress, that a minister of the Gospel should open the proceedings with prayer, it evoked a storm of opposition. One after another of the Continental fathers denounced it in unmeasured terms. On the second day of the session, however—in September, 1774—Mr. Samuel Adams, "with his gray hair hanging about his shoulders, and with an impressive venerableness, rose, and, with the air of a perfect orator, said that it did not become men, professing to be Christians, who had come together for solemn deliberation in their hour of extremity, to say that there was a wide difference in their belief that they could not, one man, bow their knee in prayer to the Almighty, whose advice and assistance they hoped to obtain; and independent as he was, and an enemy to slavery as he was known to be, he moved that even Mr. Dushe, of the Episcopal Church, should hold the Throne of Grace in prayer."

John Adams, in a letter to his wife, said that he never saw more "moving spectacle" than that was. Mr. Adams read the prayer from the prayer-book, but he was so moved by the occasion that he broke into an impromptu prayer, and poured out his heart to God for the Divine guidance with such feeling that his hearers, strong-willed men though they were, could not keep the tears from running down their faces. This prayer evidently overcame the opposition to the chaplains, for Mr. Dushe was subsequently appointed to that position, and, in December, 1776, it was decided to appoint permanently two Chaplains of Congress. The first nine of these chaplains were from the Episcopal Church, but they have been chosen from almost every denomination since then. Sixteen Presbyterians, fifteen Methodists, and the Senate, has served longer in that capacity, or as Chaplain of the House, than any of his predecessors, and is the most widely known. He is frequently referred to as "the blind man eloquent," from the fact that although he lost his sight many years ago, yet he is one of the acknowledged pulpit orators of his church, the Methodist Episcopal. His career is an exemplification of what may be attained, despite the most adverse circumstances. Doctor Milburn early showed his bent in the direction of the pulpit. While he was still a child, his mother, who was a most devout woman, took him with her to a camp-meeting near their home in Philadelphia. The meeting lasted several days, and one night she awakened and found that her boy was not in bed. A general search was instituted, and some one found the future Chaplain of Congress laboriously trying to mount the pulpit steps in the auditorium!

The home of Doctor Milburn's parents was always the stopping-place for the traveling clergy, and the contact with these men awakened in the lad's mind the determination that when he became a man he should be a minister. When only five years old, however, he met with a terrible accident to one of his eyes, in which the sight was almost destroyed. What sight remained was eventually ruined, and the sight of the other eye hopelessly injured by the treatment of ignorant physicians. Study was a painful process, but his determination to have an education was inflexible. When he was about fourteen, his parents met financial reverses, and left the East, going to the then new country of Illinois, where they settled, near Jacksonville. Here young Milburn helped his father in the store, but every possible spare moment was given to his beloved books. In 1839 he entered the Illinois college, but in his senior year his health broke down, and he had to discontinue his studies.

In 1840, at twenty years of age, he was ordained itinerant minister in the Methodist Church and given a circuit of two hundred miles in the thinly-settled portions of the State. He made his initial trip with Doctor Peter Akers, and it was from him and Peter Cartwright, those pioneer Mississippi Valley apostles of blessed memory, that the blind chaplain took his introductory lessons in the ministry. Two or three years later he was requested by his Conference to accompany an older minister on a trip East to raise funds for a denominational school. The two started on a Mississippi River steamer from St. Louis. In speaking of it lately, Doctor Milburn told the following graphic incident of how he received his first appointment as Chaplain to Congress:

We stopped at Cincinnati, but we did not have much success in raising money there, and concluded to go on to Wheeling. We took the boat again, and after we had been aboard a short time, I learned that a large number of the passengers were Congressmen, who were en route to Washington. I was not much more than a boy then—only about twenty-three—and I was very much impressed with the thought of traveling in such august company. I wanted to learn as much about them as possible, and, for a day or two, I remained in the part of the steamer where they were. I was terribly surprised at their conduct. We had been traveling two or three days when, on Saturday, we ran a snag, a sandbar—a not unusual occurrence in river travel in those days. We had to lie there over the Sabbath, and on that morning, a committee of the passengers waited on me, and asked me to conduct a religious service. I felt at once that God had given me this opportunity and I accepted it.

I remember that I came downstairs and stood in the doorway between the ladies' cabin and salon, and preached. The Congressmen had gathered in the latter place, and gave me a very respectful hearing. As I finished, I turned to them and said: "And now, gentlemen, I have a few words which I feel that I must say to you. When I came on this boat, I was told that a large number of our Senators and Representatives in Congress were aboard, and I was very glad, as I felt that it would be an honor to travel with such a company. But as an American citizen, I must tell you that I have been ashamed of you, and that I feel disgraced at your conduct. Instead of finding you a body of Christian gentlemen, comporting yourselves as befits the dignity of your positions, I find you given over to drinking, gambling and profanity. As a citizen, I beg you to consider what an influence you are exerting on the nation—what a school of vice you are establishing. I beg you to consider what a reproach you are bringing upon us, as a people. As a minister of the Gospel, I am commissioned to tell you that, unless you renounce your evil course, repent of your sins and believe upon the Lord Jesus Christ unto righteousness, you will certainly be lost." I went back to my stateroom feeling rather depressed, I'll have to confess, but I had felt it my duty to say what I had, and I could not retract, even if they concluded to throw me overboard for saying it. While I sat there thinking of it, the gentlemen who had invited me to preach came in. "Now," I thought to myself, "I am in for it;" but instead he told me that he had been requested by a committee of the Congressmen to come and thank me for my sermon, to present me with a purse of $200, and to ask if they might offer my name for appointment as Chaplain to Congress, as they should like to have a man for that position who had the courage of his convictions and was not afraid to speak to them."

Doctor Milburn allowed them to use his name and received the appointment. At that time—1845—the Senate met in the present Supreme Court Room, and the House in Statuary Hall. There were two chaplains appointed, but Dr. Milburn's colleague was out of the city, and he opened both bodies with prayer. In order to enable him to do this, the clock in the House was kept seven minutes faster than the one in the Senate, and he would go immediately from the House after his prayer there and perform the same service in the Senate.

Flight of Riches

TEXT, Proverbs 25: 5:

Riches certainly make themselves wings; they fly away as an eagle toward heaven.

MONEY is a golden-breasted bird with silver beak. It alights on the office-desk, or in the counting-room, or on the parlor centre-table. Men and women stand and admire it. They do not notice that it has wings larger than a raven's, larger than a flamingo's, larger than an eagle's. One wave of the hand of misfortune and it spreads its beautiful plumage and is gone—"as an eagle toward heaven," my text says, though sometimes I think it goes in the other direction!

What a verification we have had of the flying capacity of riches in Wall street! And Wall street is one of the longest streets in all the world. It does not begin at the foot of Trinity Church, New York, and end at the East River, as many suppose. It reaches through all our American cities, and across the seas. Encouraged by the revival of trade, and by the fact that Wall street disasters of other years were so far back as to be forgotten, speculators run up the stocks from point to point until innocent people on the outside suppose that the stocks would always continue to ascend. They gather in from all parts of the country. Large sums of money are taken into Wall street, and small sums of money. The crash comes, thank God, in time to warn off a great many who were on their way thither; for the sadness of the thing is that a great many of the young men of our cities who save a little money for the purpose of starting themselves in business, and who have five hundred dollars or one thousand dollars or two thousand dollars or ten thousand dollars, go into Wall street and lose all. And if there ever was a time for the pulpit to speak out in regard to certain kinds of nefarious enterprises, now is the time.

Stocks rose and fell, and now they begin to rise again, and they will fall again until thousands of young men will be ruined unless the printing-press and the pulpit give emphatic utterance. My counsel is to countrymen, so far as they may hear of this discourse, if they have surplus, to invest it in first mortgages and in moneyed institutions which, though paying comparatively small interest, are sound and safe beyond dispute, and to stand clear of the Wall street vortex, where so many have been swamped and swallowed. What a compliment it is to the healthy condition of our country that these recent disasters have in no wise depressed trade! I thank God that Wall street's capacity to blast this country has gone forever.

Contrasts in Wall Street

First of all, Wall street stands as a type in this country for tried integrity and the most outrageous villainy. Farmers who have only a few hundred dollars' worth of produce to put on the market have but little to test their character; but put a man into the seven-times-heated furnace of Wall street excitement, and he either comes out a Shadrach, with hair unsinged, or he is burned into a black moral cinder. No half-way work about it. If I wanted to find integrity bomb-proof, I would go among the bankers and merchants of Wall street; yet, because there have been such villainies enacted there at different times, some men have supposed that it is a great financial debauchery, and they hardly dare go near the street, or walk up and down it, unless they have buttoned up their last pocket, and had their lives insured, or religiously crossed themselves. Yet, if you start at either end of the street, and read the business signs, you will find the names of more men of integrity and Christian benevolence than you can find in the same space in any street of any of our cities. When the Christian Commission and the Sanitary Commission wanted money to send medicine and bandages to the wounded, when breadstuffs were wanted for famishing Ireland, when colleges were to be endowed and churches were to be supported, and missionary societies were to be equipped for their work of sending the Gospel all around the world, the first street to respond has been Wall street, and the largest responses in all the land have come from Wall street.

But while that street is a type of tried integrity on one hand, it is also a type of unbounded swindle on the other. There are the spiders that wait for innocent flies. There are the crocodiles that crawl up through the slime to cranch the calf. There are the anacondas, with lifted loop, ready to crush the unwary. There are financial wreckers, who stand on the beach praying for a Caribbean whirlwind to sweep over our commercial interests. Let me say it is no place for a man to go into business unless his moral principle is thoroughly settled. That is no place for a man to go into business who does not know when he is overpaid five dollars by mistake, whether he had better take it back again or not. That is no place for a man to go who has large funds in trust, and who is all the time tempted to speculate with them.

Again: I have to remark that Wall street is a type throughout the country of legitimate speculation on the one hand, and of ruinous gambling on the other. Almost every merchant is to some extent a speculator. He depends, not only upon the difference between the wholesale price at which he gets the goods and the retail at which he disposes of them, but also upon the fluctuation of the markets. If the markets greatly rise, he greatly gains. If the markets greatly sink, he greatly loses. It is as honest to deal in stocks as to deal in iron or coal or hardware or dry-goods. He who condemns all stock-dealings as though they were iniquitous simply shows his own ignorance. Stop all legitimate speculation in this country, and you stop all banks, you stop all factories, you stop all storehouses, you stop all the great financial prosperities of this country.

Gigantic Speculations

But here we must draw the line between legitimate speculation and ruinous gambling. You, a stock operator without any property behind you, financially irresponsible, sell one hundred dollars of nothing and get paid for it. You sell one hundred shares at ten thousand dollars at thirty days. If at the end of thirty days you can get the scrip for nine thousand dollars, you have made a thousand. If at the end of thirty days you have to pay eleven thousand, then you have lost a thousand. Now that is trafficking in fiction; that is betting on chances; that involves the spirit of gambling as much as anything that ever goes on in the lowest gambling hell.

It is not peculiar to mercurial Americans. Oh, no! Almost every nation has indulged in it. The Hollanders, the most phlegmatic people in the world, had their gambling seizure in 1683. It was called the tulip mania. It was a speculation in tulips. Properties worth half a million dollars turned into tulips. All the Holland nation either buying or selling tulips. One tulip root sold for two hundred dollars, another for two thousand. Excitement rolling on and rolling on until history tells us that one Amsterdam tulip, which was supposed to be the only one of the kind in all the world, actually brought in the markets one million eight hundred and sixteen thousand dollars! That is a matter of history. Of course, the crash came, and all Holland went down under it.

But France must have its gambling expedition, and that was in 1716. John Law's Mississippi scheme, it was called. The French had heard that this American continent was built out of solid gold, and the project was to take it across the ocean, and drop it in France. Excitement beyond anything that had yet been seen in the world. Three hundred thousand applicants for shares. Excitement so great that sometimes the military had to disperse the crowds that had come to buy the stock.

Sedate England took its chance in 1720. That was the South Sea bubble. They proposed to transfer all the gold of Peru and Mexico and the islands of the sea to England. Five millions' worth of shares were put on the market at three hundred pounds a share. The books open, in a few days it is all taken, and twice the amount subscribed.

Credulous Victims

Excitement following excitement, until all kinds of gambling projects came forth under the wing of this South Sea enterprise. There was a large company formed with great capital for providing funerals for all parts of the land. Another company with large capital, five million pounds of capital, to develop a wheel in perpetual motion. Another company, with a capital of four million pounds, to insure people against loss by servants. Another company, with two million five hundred thousand pounds capital, to transplant walnut trees from Virginia to England. Then, to cap the climax, a company was formed for "A great undertaking, nobody to know what it is." And lo! six hundred thousand pounds in shares were offered at one hundred pounds a share; books were opened at nine o'clock in the morning and closed at three o'clock in the afternoon, and the first day it was all subscribed. "A great undertaking, nobody to know what it is."

But it was left for our own country to surpass all, about thirty-seven years ago. We have the highest mountains and the greatest cataracts and the longest rivers, and, of course, we had to have the largest swindle. One would have thought that the nation had been enough in that direction during the morus multicaulis excitement, when almost every man had a bunch of crawling silkworms in his house, out of which he expected to make a fortune. But all this excitement was nothing compared with what took place in 1864, when a man near Titusville, Pa., digging for a well, struck Twelve hundred oil companies call for one billion stock. Prominent members of churches, as soon as a certain amount of stock was assigned them, saw it as their privilege to become presidents or secretaries or members of the board of direction. Some of the companies never had a foot of ground, never expected to have. Their entire equipment was a map of a region where oil might be, and two phials of grease, crude and clarified. People rushed down from all parts of the country and put their hard earnings in the gulf.

An Ungodly Passion

The good Christian people said: "This company must be all right, because Elder So-and-So is president of it, and Elder So-and-So is secretary of it, and there are three or four highly respected professional Christians in the board of directors." They did not know that when a professed Christian goes into stock-gambling he lies like sin. But alas! for the country it became a tragedy, and one thousand million dollars were swamped. There are families to-day sitting in the shadow of destitution, who but for that great national outrage would have had their cottages and their homesteads. I hold up before the young men these four great stock-gambling schemes that they may see to what length men will go smitten of this passion, and I want to show them how all the best interests of society are against it, and God is against it, and will condemn it for time, and condemn it for eternity. Do not dwell upon the frenzied speculations in Wall street last month. You all have enough remembrance of that financial horror. I only want you to know that it is in a procession of monetary frenzies, some of which have passed, and others are to come.

O! men of Wall street, and of all streets, stand back from nefarious enterprises, join that great company of Christian men who are maintaining their integrity, notwithstanding all the pressure of temptation. In the morning, when you open business in the broker's office or in the banking-house, ask God's blessing, and when you close it pronounce a benediction upon it. And of business that men cannot engage in without perdition is no business for you. I wish that the words of George Peabody, uttered in the hearing of the people of his native town—Danvers, Massachusetts—I wish that those words could be uttered in the hearing of all the young men throughout the land. He said: "Though Providence has granted me unvaried and universal success in the pursuit of fortune in other lands, I am still in heart the humble boy who left yonder unpretending dwelling. There is not a youth within the sound of my voice whose early are not greater than were my own, and I have achieved nothing that is impossible to the most humble boy among you." George Peabody's success in business was not more remarkable than his integrity and his great-hearted benevolence. I pray upon you for his protecting and prospering blessing. I hope you may all make fortunes for time and fortunes for eternity.

Some day when you come out of your place of business, and you go to the clearing house, or the place of custom or the bank or your own home—as you come out of your place of business, just look up at the tower and see by the movement of the hands how your life is rapidly going away, and be reminded of the fact that before God's throne of inexorable justice you must yet give account for what you have since the day you sold the first yard of cloth or the pound of sugar. I pray for you all prosperity, and close by Christ, and Christ will stand close by you, the greater the temptation, the more magnificent the reward. But alas! for the stock-gambler—what will he do in the judgment? That day will settle every man. That to the stock-gambler will be a "break" at the call. No smuggling into heaven. No "collateral" on which to trade your way in. Go in through Christ the Lord, or you will forever stay out. God forbid that after you have done your last day's work on earth and the hushed assembly stands around with bowed heads at your obsequies—God forbid that the most appropriate text for your funeral oration should be "As a cart-tridge sitteth on eggs and hatcheth them not, so hath he gotten riches, and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at the end he shall be a blank." Or that the most appropriate funeral psalm should be the words of the poet:

Price of many a crime untold,
Gold, gold, gold, gold.

FIRST $20,000 FOR STARVING CHINA

Our Missionary Committee Organized and the First Remittance Cabled to Chairman Smith by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NOW LET ALL HELP THE LIFE-SAVING CAMPAIGN!

It will be welcome news to our readers that, within the last few days, the principal obstacles in the way of the relief work in China have been providentially removed, and the campaign of life-saving in the famine-stricken province of Shansi will now be prosecuted vigorously. China and the foreign powers have definitely arranged the basis of peace at the indemnity question; the foreign troops will withdraw, and the Imperial Court will return to Peking. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Missionary Famine Relief Committee has been organized, with the Rev. Arthur H. Smith, of Tientsin, as Chairman, and the first remittance of $20,000 for relief work has been cabled to the Committee. Rev. Dr. Smith's cablegram, announcing the organization of the Missionary Famine Relief Committee, is as follows:

KOPSCH, New York:

TIENTSIN, June 3.

Committee consists Smith, Lowry, Duncan, Atwood and Edwards. Shantung Christians, pillaged and homeless, also need help. Atwood and Edwards are starting to begin relief work in Shansi. Relief work in Shensi temporarily impracticable. Committee asks full liberality of action.

SMITH.

Chairman Smith has chosen his associates on the Relief Committee. All are men of wide experience in the China field, and men in whose hands the gifts of Christian America will be faithfully administered. As the cable dispatch indicates, the Committee has lost no time in going down to actual work, fully realizing the urgency of the case. Two members, Drs. Atwood and Edwards, are already on the way to Shansi, where the country is still quite unsettled, but with every confidence that the safe divine protection which has guarded every work of rescue in the past will not fail them now.

Earlier at hand, the destitute native Christians of Shantung will receive aid. The entire work of relief will be absolutely at the discretion of the Committee whose members, being thoroughly conversant with every phase of the situation, are consequently well qualified to decide as to the methods to be adopted in extending relief to the sufferers. While the missionaries are, in their own discretion, co-operate with native relief organizations or native officials, the latter will, at no time, have any power in the management of the fund. The entire duties and responsibilities, therefore, rest with the missionaries, who accept the sacred trust from the American people, through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, upon these conditions alone.

Dr. Smith, the Chairman, is a missionary of the American Board, who has done valuable service in Tientsin and other parts of China. He was educated at Beloit College, graduating in 1867, and he took the regular theological course at Andover and Union Seminaries, beginning active missionary work in 1870.

Another event which gives encouragement is the appointment of Prince Ching as Governor of Peking. He is known as the friend of the foreigner, and his great influence will unquestionably be found upon the side of the missionaries in any emergencies that may arise. He has assisted Li Hung Chang in the recent peace negotiations. Earl Li, who was the first to appeal to America for the perishing people of Shansi, may be depended upon to render all the aid and protection necessary to the missionary relief expedition. United States Commissioner Rockwell, too, will co-operate with all of the official influence at his command. It is announced that the Governor of Shansi (who is also a strong friend of the foreigner), is preparing to send an escort to accompany five missionaries who are making ready to return to Shansi. These missionaries, before starting, held a very satisfactory conference with Earl Li concerning the official attitude toward native converts. Thus, all things now point to the speedy and practical realization of the relief plans.

The Famine Still Spreading

Late news from the famine districts shows that the distress continues to spread. Rumors of the coming of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Expedition seem to have reached the borders of Honan and Hupeh provinces, adjoining Shansi, and there is a general feeling of gladness over the prospect. Especially is the suffering severe among the native Christians, who, during the "Boxer" troubles, lost many relatives in the massacres, and all their own possessions as well. The Governor of Shansi—evidently a broad-minded official, is helping the Chinese Christians in the Tai-yuen and Tai-ku districts, but there are multitudes whom it is impossible to aid, owing to the scarcity of food. These, failing the early arrival of succor, must perish of starvation.

Consecrated Gifts to the Fund

Many of the letters received, containing contributions to the Relief Fund, are of a character to show how deeply the appeal of the starving Chinese Christians has touched the hearts of God's people in our own land. We give below extracts from a few, that are fair examples of many hundreds that come in our daily mail:

With a gift of $5.50, Mrs. W. J. M., Campbell, Calif., writes: "Yesterday, when it was told of the wonderful ingathering in India you reported in your last week's issue, the whole body of our Christian Alliance meeting arose and praised God with a loud voice. And there has been a deep ring in my heart. O, how I praise him! I am expecting the same thing in China."

"I pray that the Lord will bless those people that they may see their sins and repent, and be converted, and love Jesus, who loves them," writes Mr. and Mrs. C. S. H., Sag Harbor, N. Y. ($5).

"God bless you more and more in the great work for humanity. He loveth cheerful and willing workers." S. R., Fairmount, Ind. ($1).

W. F. Tuscumbia, Ala., writes: "May God magnify the gift ($3), and use it to preserve lives that will be won for Christ."

"I send it ($1) in Jesus' name, asking him to increase it tenfold." M. E. M., Westchester, Pa.

E. F., Auburn, Me., ($1) writes: "I wish to express my appreciation of the noble work you are doing, for not only the cause of suffering humanity everywhere, but also for the cause of Christianity, in thus helping forward the practical side of our heaven-born religion, which is so often neglected and forgotten."

Mrs. S. S. D., Towners, N. Y., writes: "My prayer goes with it ($1) that all the help they receive from Christian America may be the means of making China a Christian nation."

F. H. S., Shippensburg, Pa., writes: "Believing your method of helping the famine sufferers of China to be very good, and trusting your efforts to their relief may be successful and uplifting as well to their spiritual natures, permit me to subscribe the small amount of two dollars to the China Famine Fund."

Two little tots, Elsie and Ralph Kappan, Milwaukee, Wis., write: "We enclose one dollar, which please use to keep Chinese children from starving."

W. B. W., Dubois, Pa., writes: "I herein enclose one dollar. I wish I could give more, but I am a cripple, having never been able to walk. But the Lord can give his blessing even to this mite."

A lady in Alfred N. Y., sends $15, and writes: "In memory of Fluffy. A beloved pet had to be sacrificed, so that the means set apart for his support might furnish forth this gift. It was hard to do it, but it seems best. I should like to see this little monument, in commemoration of the dear creature that cheered the solitude of a lonely old woman."

PRINCE CHING, THE NEW GOVERNOR OF PEKING

AN OPEN AIR RICE SHOP IN CHINA

... First Weeks of the Pan-American Exposition

WONDERS OF THE RAINBOW CITY

Canada and Latin-America Well Represented

On opening day, there passed through the gates of the Pan-American Exposition 101,687 people—a larger attendance than has marked the first day of any American fair save that at Chicago, when the wonderful "White City" laid claim to about 25,000 more. Some thirty-four excursions from Canada, New England and the Middle West contributed their quota. Neighboring cities and hundreds of small villages closed their stores and their people came to Buffalo, from Dixie and further South visitors had hied them northwards to witness the inauguration of the "Rainbow City's" wonders. The ceremonies were full of picturesque interest. What was prettier or more poetic, for instance, than the liberation of 10,000 pigeons on the Esplanade, their graceful flight upwards, their spreading out like a fountain and flying north, south, east and west, to bear to the world the news that the Rainbow City's gates were at last flung wide in welcome? The parade, headed by a long line of carriages with dignity with lights, the Electric Tower to glow in fluctuant radiance, and the wizard's display of tamed and trained lightning emanating from Niagara Falls was fully on, the effect was all the more pronounced because of the starless darkness of the night. Altogether, the weather has been hard upon the Exposition. Storm and flood delayed the formal opening from May 1 to May 20; and the first weeks following opening day were of far more shadow and rain than of sunshine. With warmer and brighter days, people will come in greater numbers, and when hot July and August drive people northward, Buffalo's cool climate will strengthen the attraction of that mighty magnet—the Pan-American Exposition—which gains power in more ways than one from its nearness to the most magnificent cataract in the world.

by day and their witchery of illumination by night. The interior of the Tower accommodates restaurants, gardens, roof gardens and pavilions. At night, 50,000 electric lights sparkle out over it. For the next several months, the whole Buffalo-Niagara region will be the play of the most unique and magnificent searchlight exhibit ever witnessed. For miles in every direct reaching even to Toronto and Hamilton—there will flash signals of light from the powerful projector on the Electric Tower. These beams will be met and crossed by similar rays flashed from the Observation Tower at Niagara Falls, twenty-two miles away.

Canada is exhibiting extraordinary interest in the Exposition. On the late queen's birthday, a party of many came over the borders to the Fair, where they found the arts and industries of their country in abundant evidence. The States have expressed themselves not only in practical ways but in some that are unique. Thus Illinois' Building is a "Palace of Corn;" South Carolina's "Tea Plantation" is in picturesque vified escort, and followed up by the Midway trail of giants and pigmies, camels and zebras, Indians and Filipinos, Japs and jugglers, and odd folks and things innumerable was, in itself, worth going a long way to see.

The dedication exercises in the Temple of Music were opened with prayer by Bishop Fowler and closed with a benediction by Bishop Walker. Vice-President Roosevelt, Hon. Timothy L. Woodruff, Senator Lodge, and Mayor Diehl spoke; there was music, both noble and gay, in which the Mexican Band took part with comrades of the North; poems written for the occasion were read. Everything was as it should be except the weather, which gave leaden, though not weeping, clouds to a day and scene for which thousands had hoped there would be smiling skies. However at the evening illumination, when buildings began to blossom Latin-America is making a brave showing at the Fair, twenty-three of her countries being represented in some way, and nine having exhibits in special buildings. Chili made a larger appropriation than any of her sisters, the amount being $170,000 in gold. Mexico devotes her two-story building to minerals only. She has 3,000 square feet in the Agricultural Building, 2,000 in the Forestry, 2,000 in the Horticultural, 3,000 in the Manufacturers, and 2,000 in the Ethnological Building. She has sent a Commission composed of her foremost citizens, a company of mounted Rurales and a military band.

The Electrical Tower, the Electrical Building and the Court of Fountains are the magnets within the magnet which the visitor first seeks, and to which he ever returns, more and more fascinated by their scenic effect dence, while Louisiana exploits her sugar-cane industry attractively. In the Forestry Building, Oregon woods demand the lion's share of attention.

Standing in the Esplanade, and looking around on the brilliant panorama of towers, statues, fountains, gardens and canals, with great buildings on every side filled with American products and manufactures, it is difficult to realize that a little over a year ago these grounds were but a bare clay plain. This "Rainbow City"—this harmony of red and yellow in roofs, terraces, walls and pillars, crowned with blue domes "kissing the blue sky," is a wonder in itself—a miracle of enterprise, more purely and distinctively American than any we have ever had. It becomes not only a matter of personal pleasure, improvement and advantage to visit it, but a matter of Continental and patriotic pride

Although Doctor Milburn has been totally blind for more than fifty years, he has accomplished far more than the majority of people have succeeded in doing with two eyes. After serving as Chaplain for two terms, he returned to his itinerary, but in 1853 he went back to Congress for two more terms. In 1885 he was again elected Chaplain of the House, where he remained until 1893, when he was made Chaplain of the Senate, the position which he still holds. During his services as Chaplain, he has seen more than four generations of statesmen pass from the stage of their activities. He knew Webster, Clay, Calhoun, Douglas, Stephens, and many other famous men in the noonday of their power. He knew, perhaps, more intimately than any other American, England's great man of letters, Thomas Carlyle, beside many other of her noted sons. He makes his home in Washington, where his two adopted daughters devote themselves to his comfort. He affectionately calls them his "two eyes," and this they certainly have been to him since the death of his son, a dozen or more years ago.

It is something of a coincidence that both the Chaplain of the Senate and the Chaplain of the House should be ministers who have lost their eyesight. Mr. Couden, the Chaplain of the House, is much younger in years than Doctor Milburn, and lost his eyes in the service of his country during the Civil War. He was born in Marshall, Ind., but moved with his parents to Cincinnati when he was eight years old. He attended school there until he was eighteen, when he enlisted in Company K, Sixth Ohio Infantry. In a brush with the enemy in Mississippi, in 1863, Mr. Couden became the target for a dozen rifles. His face was riddled with bird-shot, and he was struck in the arm, side and foot, while his horse received eight shots. The instant the bird-shot struck his face his sight was gone, and from that day to this he has never seen a ray of light.

"I could not realize it at first," said Mr. Couden, in speaking of that event, "but after months of hospital treatment, the truth forced itself upon me. Yes, it was pretty hard, but I faced the fact with all of the courage I could muster, and determined that I would make the best blind man of myself that it was possible to make." That he has succeeded admirably, his career has shown. For some time he was undecided whether to enter the ministry or the profession of law, but his success as a Sunday School teacher determined him in the choice of the former. He entered the Tufts Divinity School at Boston, and, after completing his course, was ordained as a minister. He has had four pastorates—at Madrid, New York; Willoughbsby, Ohio; Chatham, Mass., and Port Huron, Mich., from which place he was appointed Chaplain of the House in 1895.

By a previous marriage, Mr. Couden has had four children. His daughter, an attractive girl of sixteen, is in the Friends' School of Providence. Mr. Couden was married to the present Mrs. Couden in 1886, and they make their home in Washington on Capitol Hill. Mrs. Couden is an exceedingly bright, attractive woman. Each morning she accompanies her husband to the Capitol and waits for him in the Speaker's lobby while he opens the House with prayer. At the stroke of 12 he takes his place at the clerk's desk in front of the Speaker, who, with a rap of his gavel calls the House to order, and announces the invocation. The members rise in a body and stand in reverent attitude while the Chaplain prays.

"I have often been surprised at the deportment of the House during the prayer," said Mr. Couden, "and especially was this so when I first came here. I had often seen it stated that the members paid no attention and were irreverent, but that is not true. I can tell you the absolute stillness that they are giving most reverent attention, and it is not an unusual thing for a member to come to me as I am leaving the hall and say, 'Chaplain, thank you for that prayer, it did me good.' I know, although the members themselves are not given to saying much about it, that many of them are devoted Christians. I am sure that, as a whole, the spiritual tone of Congress is higher and better than it is credited with being."

PRESIDENT SAM'S BLACK REPUBLIC

Little Haiti, our Near Neighbor, and its Rulers and People --- An Isle of Beauty little known to the World

NOT many people have interests in Haiti, and the little Republic in the Antilles is still practically unknown to the greater part of the civilized world. And yet how many merchants in Hamburg, Bremen, Paris and New York have become rich through Haiti! How many people of all nations live by the sources of the "Pearl of the Antilles" (Haiti's pet name)! The merchants engaged in the Haitian trade try to keep others out, that they may enjoy it alone, and this attitude has no doubt given rise to many new apprehensions about Haiti, and has probably done more to prevent the development of the resources of the island than all other causes combined. It has been called the island of many revolutions; yet since 1804 its people have enjoyed profound peace without the slightest threatening complication. Property of foreigners is invariably protected in the case of a revolution. As early as 1806 (that is, two years after the Haitian Declaration of Independence) a constitution was adopted, the most remarkable feature of which is the principle of religious freedom. From this Haiti has never departed. For more than three centuries, up to the Independence in 1804, the Roman Catholic Church was the only denomination there, the island having been successively under the domination of France and Spain. While in other countries religious freedom has come only after long struggles between the different religious denominations, Haiti proclaimed religious independence without possessing a single Protestant citizen, and certainly without a single Protestant church. The spirit of individual liberty, which was proclaimed in France a decade previous to Haitian Independence, had already reached Haiti. The founders of the new State probably desired to attract as many colored emigrants as possible from the United States and the surrounding English colonies, and these were brought up in the Protestant religion. It must not be imagined that Catholicism has been stamped out in Haiti; on the contrary, it has been fostered in the State and is professed by the majority of the population. There is an archbishopric at Port-au-Prince, and pendant bishoprics in Cape Haitien, Gonaives and Aux Cayes, all paid by the State. The incumbents are nominated by the President and confirmed by the Pope, and they take an oath of fidelity to the Haitian Government. The Government of Haiti has appropriated about $80,000 for the support of the Roman Catholic Church in the Repubfriction with one another. The continual call of the Government is for more spiritual workers. It has been asserted that in certain parts of the island of Haiti, mysterious and occult an aged negro, was sitting on a chair. He was looking upon a burning candle. He took my hands, looked again into the light, and told me I was expecting some goods from Europe; that it would be very difficult for me to sell these goods, but that he could give me a charm which would clear my stock immediately, but as a compensation I should send him one dozen handkerchiefs, a five-pound tin of butter, a five-pound tin of lard, a straw hat, and a pair of shoes of the largest size. I told him to keep the charm for me until the arrival of the articles, and if I am not mistaken he is still waiting for them. This happened in the evening. Next morning I had an explanation of the oracle. From the mountains, the harbor of Petit Goave could be plainly seen. There was a steamer discharging goods. The papaloe imagined that, as a European, I must be an importer, and that the steamer probably had some goods on board for me.

At ten o'clock in the morning the real voodoo ceremonies began. Three or four goats were butchered while the people were singing and dancing. The dancers were accompanied by the beating of enormous drums, monotonous songs and hand-clapping. The butchering of the goats was accompanied by invocations in a strange language. The papaloe presided at the ceremony. Singing, drum-beating, dancing, drinking of rum and tafia were going on uninterruptedly. Toward evening the drums sounded faster and faster, the dance for one year. For the support of Protestant churches for the same period the appropriations are about $10,000. The largest denomination of Protestants in Haiti is the Wesleyan Methodist. In 1816 the Wesleyans began work in Haiti upon offers of very liberal salaries for teachers, made by President Petion, in England. The teachers made favorable reports to the Missionary Committee in London, and in 1818 pastors were sent to the island. Their work has been encouraged and maintained ever since, and stores are still supplied from England or America. There are six leading stations now in good working order—Port-au-Prince, Cape Haitien, Gonaives, Petit Goave, Jeremie and Mel. The number of professing Wesleyans is placed at 3,500.

In 1824, colored emigrants from the United States introduced the African Methodist denomination. This church has only one principal station. The colored emigrants also established Baptist churches. The Episcopal Church in Haiti was founded in 1861, and in 1874 the Rev. Jas. Theo. Holly, a colored man by birth, but a Haitian by adoption, was consecrated as Bishop for Haiti. All these Christian denominations work in the same field without clashing, and without religious customs still prevail—a trace of the old African voodooism. The writer has traveled in all directions through became wilder and the crowd more excited. In the midst of the excitement piercing cries were heard. Everyone stopped dancing except one woman with loose hair and clothes. She fell on the floor, sprang in the air, yelled, and generally behaved like one suddenly gone mad. In the grasp of terrible hallucinations, under the waning and growing light of torches, she presented a demoniacal picture. The people there called her state "li gagnain loie." This means: "She is inspired by the gods of the voodoo." The height of the excitement was reached when the papaloe, interrupting the passionate woman's cries, told the people that the voodoo asks for ten gallons of rum, or else it would stop raining, the rum, of course, to be delivered to him. From time to time he addressed a question to the "medium," asking for advice. Then he answered, translating the yells of the woman. Exhausted, unconscious at last, the woman was brought away, and the dancing began anew and continued until the tropical sun scattered the darkness. That is all there is to the ill-famed voodoo of Haiti.

In a future letter I will have more to tell your readers of the material progress the little Republic is making.

Sunday School Books

THERE is nothing in which our young folks ought to be more thoroughly congratulated than in the improvement of Sunday School literature. When our older people were children there were no juvenile books. If the book appetite arose, they were fed on a slice of Wilberforce's Practical View of Christianity, or were given a few nuts to crack from Chalmers' Astronomical Discourses. Their fathers and mothers sighed lest the little ones should turn out badly, because they liked ginger-snaps better than the Westminster Catechism. Pictures were scarce, and a book was considered properly adorned that had at the beginning a sketch of the author in gown and bands and long hair of powdered whiteness, and at the close, in ornate letters, the word Finis, which you were told meant "the end," although after wearily reading it through you did not know whether it was the end of the book or the end of you. You might as well feed your baby on lobster salad as at that age to have been expected to digest the books that were set before you.

But now the children's library is filled with books of large type, and tasteful vignettes, and lids ridged and flowered and scrolled and columned and starred with all the fascinations of bookbinding. Intelligent committees are appointed to thoroughly examine all the books introduced into the Sunday School library. And I think the majority of such libraries are filled with healthful literature, and if an improper book gets into the collection it is soon found out and ejected, or it mysteriously disappears.

But, if I am correctly informed, there are Sunday School libraries which are not only offensive to good taste but obnoxious to good morals. Carelessly selected by incompetent young people, there are in those libraries sentimental love-yarns; biographies of generals who were very brave, and good examples in some respects—when they were sober; fairy stories, in which the fairies had very loose morals; accounts of boys and girls who never lived—books in which there is no more religion than in Don Quixote or Gulliver's Travels; books with strong tincture of spiritualism, and the committee who selected them forgot that religious spooks are as bad as any other spooks. But I believe that the present Sunday School libraries are seventy-five per cent. better than those of other days. The style of religion commended in those books is a more lovely style of religion. My early impression from Sunday School books was that religion was very unhealthy. The good children all died. It seemed a distemper that killed almost every boy or girl who touched it. If I found myself some day better than common, I corrected the mistake, for fear I would die; although it was the general opinion that I was not in much danger from over-sanctity. But I do believe that children may have religion and yet live through it. Timothy lived through it, and we are credibly informed that little Samuel woke. The goody-goody kind of children make namby-pamby men. The best boy I ever knew, before he went to heaven could strike a ball till it soared clear out of sight, and, in the race, as far as you could see, you would find his red tippet coming out ahead. Look out for the boy who never has the fingers of a good laugh tickle him under the diaphragm.

I am glad we are coming to a juvenile literature that takes for its model of excellence a boy that loves God, and can digest his dinner in two hours after he eats it. Be not afraid to say, in your account of his decease, that the day before you lost him he caught two rabbits in his trap on the meadow, or soundly thrashed a street-ruffian who was trying to upset a little girl's basket of cold victuals. I do not think that heaven is so near to an ill-ventilated nursery as to a good gymnasium. If the church could trade off a few hogsheads of cant for a few hogsheads of fresh air and stout health, we should be the gainers, but the fellow with whom we traded would be cheated mercilessly and forever.

In closing this article let me enjoin great care in the appointment of committees for the purchase of books for Sunday Schools. All the books should be positively religious. Secular books can be had in abundance at village and city libraries. But let the religion commended be of an attractive kind, and something that will be useful to our young folks after they are grown. Let there not be one book in all the collection with immoral taint in type or picture. Especially see to it that there shall not be in any of those books anything that, by suggestion or description, makes sin attractive to the youthful mind, or undermines the reverence due to God and the Scriptures.

The fear of the Lord tendeth to life; and he that hath it shall abide satisfied. Prov. 19: 23.

"The Whole Creation"

Mrs. S. B., Dayton, Ohio. "In these days of kindly deeds and Humane Societies, do you not think we ought to interpret more broadly the well known verse in Mark 16: 15, so that it shall include all animated nature, and not man alone? In the Revised Version, the translators have used the words "the whole creation," instead of "every creature," as formerly. Does not that justify us in asking whether Christ did not really intend that his Gospel of loving-kindness and helpfulness should be preached to the birds and the beasts, and every living thing, by our attitude toward them, and by all our words and acts? Man is not "the whole creation" by any means, although he may be a very important part of it. If this interpretation be true, is it not the duty of the pulpit and the religious press to preach against brutality to all animals, and especially against bird-slaughter, whether of innocent pigeons as victims of thoughtless "sportsmen," or birds of plumage, for the headgear of vain and equally thoughtless women. By all means, let us include in this Gospel every living thing, since he has commanded it, and since we have ample evidence elsewhere in the Bible that God cares for, and desires praise and thanksgiving from all things that live on the earth. (See Psalms 145: 16, 147: 9, and the whole of Psalm 148.)

WE commend our correspondent's suggestion to our contemporaries and to our clerical readers. Each may do much toward creating and stimulating a public sentiment against all cruelty and the unnecessary slaughter of animals and birds. It will be only an extension of the same teaching that is being given already by preachers and teachers. We are taught that conversion ought to so change the disposition of a man that he will become more loving, kindly and helpful to all men. Why should we not have, as an advance, the teaching that the softened disposition be manifested also to the lower orders of creation? It might lead to some readers and hearers abandoning, on Christian principle, some practices in which they have hitherto thoughtlessly indulged. If the men who take part in the pigeon-shooting match, and the women who decorate their hats with the breast or wings of a bird, were to hear from the pulpit or read in their favorite journal an emphatic declaration that it is the duty of the Christly soul to abstain from wanton cruelty to birds, two outrages now prevalent might be diminished and speedily cease. That would be a step toward realizing the desire Christ expressed that the whole creation might benefit by his work; and if the birds are capable of praising God, as the Psalmist exhorted them to do, they will have reason to praise him for the Gospel which interposes for their protection. Paul intimates (Rom. 3: 19-23) that the universal welfare of the brute creation is in some way bound up with the Christian development of mankind, and waits for that event with groaning impatience. Isaiah also specifically declares (11: 1-9) that when all men turn to God and serve him with new hearts, a change of disposition, analogous to this change in human nature, will take place in the brutes, so that when men reach that higher stage of development when they cease to make war on one another, they will see, as if in a mirror, the wolf dwelling in peace with the lamb. We have heard much in these days of the policy of the open door, may we not in another sense open still wider the door of our sympathies, which was opened to all the world when, emerging from the exclusive attitude of Judaism, Christianity invited the Gentiles to come in. It came in contact with the Oriental doctrine that women had no souls and it proved the theory false. The Dutch farmer laughed to scorn Robert Moffat's request that the Kafir servants should come with the whites to his service, and declared that the Kafir had no soul; but a multitude of Kafirs have been Christianized. Time was when even among ourselves there were some who believed that the negro had no soul; but Christianity held the door open to him and a vast host have come in. Let Christianity remain true to its principle, and though it cannot agree with Ecclesiastes in saying that men have no pre-eminence above the beasts, it may consistently extend its regard for the lower orders of creation, at least so far as to protect them from needless suffering and destruction.

Opportunities in Cuba

HAVANA, May 22, 1901. Every time I come to Cuba I find more Americans who have settled out in the country. Every time also there are more inquiries from readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and from others who think of settling here. For their benefit some fresh information may be given and some old information may be repeated. For Americans of small means farming in Cuba is the best opening and is also almost the only opening. When it is said that Cuba is an agricultural country, that, of course, means that the best opportunities come from farming. The climate does not seem to interfere with the energies of those who are willing to work, and who expect to work in order to gain a livelihood and acquire something besides. A thermometer rarely goes below 60 degrees, Fahrenheit and the average temperature the year round is above 70 degrees. Those who find the long and severe winters of the North too much for them, can judge for themselves whether this climate would be suitable.

The cost of living out in the country is much less than in the North. The reason is simple enough. As Cuba is a warm country, thick flannels and other heavy clothing, which are always expensive, do not have to be bought. The buildings can be built cheaply and yet be quite comfortable. Fuel does not have to be stored up against a long winter. What is needed is a little charcoal for cooking purposes, or a little firewood, which in most parts of the island can be easily gathered. The conditions of living are much easier in Cuba than in the temperate zone. Crops can be produced a year round. Moreover, stock is easily cared for.

But the American coming to Cuba, must remember one thing: that is, to use great care in buying land. At this time, there are a variety of new colonization enterprises projected. I do not mean to say that they are not worthy of confidence, but the inducements which they offer should be examined with much care. It is simple enough to say that anybody buying land is entitled to the land for which he pays. Yet many Americans are drawn into various projects for buying land that is not paid for. Sometimes a partial payment is made and the projectors intend to pay for the rest, but the land themselves unable to do so, and the title given the purchaser becomes involved. Now, Cuba, being a strange country, with a strange people and a strange language, about all things it seems that whoever comes here to buy land should make sure that the person or the company selling it has full ownership, and can give clear title. There should be no question whatever that the company or individual owns what he is selling. "Look to the title and look to the seller," is a warning which cannot be too deeply impressed on the increasing number of Americans who want to come to Cuba and stake in the soil.

As to the amount of ready capital necessary, it is hard to say. There should be some capital, although I have known several instances of Americans with hardly a shirt to their back, who have come here and gotten hold of land which they are cultivating. General Wood tells me he receives hundreds of letters from people in the United States, making inquiries about land investments, and he answers them by advising that those who want to come manage to bring cash from $1,000 to $1,500. He advises against bringing their families immediately, because it takes a little time to become used to surroundings and to prepare a home. But the end, the families should by all means be brought. General Wood also advises that Americans try to settle in small parties or groups, of from three to four persons. By working together this way and combining their capital, they are able to do better than when each one is going it alone. He has infinite faith in the resources of Cuba, and the opportunities which the island offers to industrious persons for gaining a livelihood. But like all the American officials, he counsels those who want to settle here to take proper precautions in buying land, so as to be sure that they will get a clear title and will own what they pay for. As I have explained in other articles, land titles in Cuba are more complicated than in the United States, and that is why the land buyer should insist on having a perfect title. If the would-be seller cannot give this, he should waste no time.

While the political conditions just now may seem a little uncertain, yet I should state it is the universal belief that, within the next two or three years, the American Congress is going to give certain tariff concessions to Cuban products imported into the United States, which will ensure a profitable market. Because of this belief, many Americans are investing what capital they can get together in sugar-cane lands, fruit lands and in other forms of farm industry.

Cuba affords an ideal climate, that is in striking contrast with that of the Northern and Middle American States—temperate, equable, and salubrious. Some of these days, when Dr. Klopsch gets through with his great international charities, he may find time to come down to Cuba, and after looking over the field, he may be impressed with the desirability of founding here, in this lovely island paradise, a colony which shall be a restful retreat for the older generation of preachers and Christian workers, and for some of the great families of the Christian Herald family—a home for old age, where the balmy breezes, productiveness and natural charms would give to the close of such lives a sweet serenity and peace that cannot find elsewhere. Surely, the faithful service of such workers is deserving of no less. Such a philanthropy could everywhere find appreciation.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

A Momentous Decision

NEW conditions, arising out of our war with Spain, have developed constitutional questions which have been submitted to the United States Supreme Court for decision. One of these was adjudicated last week, with a result that astonishes many of our leading citizens. Briefly stated, it was the question whether, when we took possession of Porto Rico, that island became a part of the United States. Hitherto, the United States has been composed of States and Territories, which latter were eligible to become States. Action of Congress in legislating for Porto Rico appeared to indicate that the island had a position unique in our history. Congress fixed a tariff for that island so that goods entering the island from the United States and goods entering the United States from Porto Rico should be subject to customs duties. Now we do not impose a tariff on goods coming from Arizona, and the other Territories, so it appeared that Porto Rico was not to be regarded as a Territory, having the constitutional rights and privileges belonging to Arizona and the other Territories on this continent. What, then, was its status? Was it a foreign country? If so, what right had Congress to regulate its fiscal system? It appeared from the fact that Congress exercised that right that Porto Rico occupied a position midway between a foreign country and one of our Territories. This was a new member of our constitutional family was introduced, occupying a position novel to our ideas. For the first time in our history, the United States had a dependency having none of the rights conferred by the Constitution, except such as Congress might voluntarily extend to it. This view was strongly opposed by many constitutional lawyers, who contended that in annexing Porto Rico, we ended it with the Constitution and all the rights and privileges conferred by that instrument. In other words, wherever our flag might be raised, there the Constitution ruled as a natural consequence. The question was an interesting one, and so difficult was it, that it divided the Supreme Court almost equally, five Justices being on one side, and four on the other. The majority held that Congress had the power to regulate the tariff of Porto Rico, free from the constitutional restriction, providing that "all duties, imports and exports shall be uniform throughout the United States." This implies that Porto Rico has not become a member of the sisterhood of States and Territories composing the Union, but occupies the novel position of an outlying possession, or dependency. The Justices who concurred in this decision point out that it is necessary for the welfare of the Union, otherwise the time might come, even by conquest or in some other way, a multitude of people, alien in race, customs and religion, might be incorporated in the Union, exercising the right of voting and influencing legislation, to our national detriment. The dispute reminds us of that old contention which arose in the early days of Christianity, when the Jewish members of the Church were opposed to the admission of the Gentiles. It is well for us that the dispute in that case was settled, as Paul describes:

Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God (Eph. 2:19).

Lizards Stop a Train

A singular incident of railroad travel is reported from Boston, Mass. A heavy freight train was proceeding from Stonington, Conn., to Boston, on May 23, during a storm. Suddenly, on the up grade beyond Bolton, Conn., the wheels of the locomotive began to slip, and finally, when no further progress could be made, the brakes were applied to prevent losing ground. Then the crew of the engine jumped off and looked about the wheels with a lantern. They found the rails covered with a slippery matter, while along the track for three hundred yards ahead were myriads of lizards. They covered both rails, and as the locomotive came along were crushed. The train hands went to work with shovels, and after a half hour's work cleared the track ahead of the lizards and the train was able to go forward. Where the lizards came from, or what it was that attracted them to the rails, is not wife were to rise while he was asleep, he waited until she fell asleep, and then attached a rope that he passed around her waist to his arm. He thought that so secured she could not get up without waking him. He did not wake until morning, and then he was alarmed at finding her gone from his side. She had gnawed the rope in two and had taken one part and hanged herself. So the very device that he had designed to save her she had used for her death. He doubtless reproaches himself for using it; but without just cause, as his motive was pure. Such a miscarriage of design occurs in the spiritual world only too frequently. And it is not a modern evil, for the apostle observed it:

They that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction (11 Peter 3:16).

Mingled Soils for a Tree

The ceremony of planting a tree in memory of the late Queen Victoria, took place at Dobbs Ferry, N. Y., a few days ago. A number of citizens of British birth or descent, have had the project in hand for about three months. The managers communicated with prominent people in various sections of our own country and in Canada, and across the sea. The responses were numerous and cordial. From many States came letters of appreciation, and with them small quantities of soil. Similar contributions came from Great Britain and Ireland, and several British colonies. These packages of soil were opened, and mingled with the soil from our own States, and were carefully placed at the root of the tree. It is fitting that the tree, which is to be a memorial of the royal lady whom the whole world honored, should grow from the soil of many lands. It would be well if all rulers learned from the universality of these tributes the lesson they are fitted to teach.

known. Weak as they are, they were able, by sheer numbers, to delay the progress of the train, but it was done at the cost of their lives. So it will be in the history of the world. The kingdom which the prophet saw arise, like a stone cut without hands, often seems to be halted in its development by the opposition of wicked men, but in the end it will triumph over their puny efforts and fulfil its mission.

It shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever (Daniel 2:44).

A Fatal Device

A remarkable suicide occurred in Brooklyn, N. Y., last week. A well-known business man has been for some months past concerned about the mental condition of his wife. She has been subject to fits of melancholy, in which, as the physicians whom he consulted told him, she was liable to commit suicide. He watched her most devotedly and did all in his power to cheer her. He had lost so much rest in caring for her, that he knew that when he did fall asleep he was likely to sleep heavily. In order to be sure of waking if his

BRIEF NOTES

Readers belonging to the Christian Endeavor Society, the Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union, will find the Topic for June 23, discussed this week in the Sunday School Department on page 538, the two committees having chosen the same subject for the day.

Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon's Book Fund has been carried on by her for more than twenty-five years, and during that time 223,000 volumes have been distributed among poor ministers of all denominations. In addition, financial help is rendered in very necessitous cases, and during the last year about $2,000 has been dispensed in this way.

A new feature in the work of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, is a free summer course for the study of the Bible and practical methods of Christian work. This course is intended for pastors, evangelists, missionaries, and Christian workers generally, men and women alike. Prof. R. A. Torrey, of the Moody Institute, Chicago, will supply inquirers with all particulars.

At the recent anniversary of the American Tract Society, the Secretary reported that 27 new publications had been added to the organization's list during the year, and that the number issued since the beginning was 8,331, not including periodicals. The total number of volumes issued from the home office during the past seventy-six years is 32,391,827; of tracts, 479,399,719, and of periodicals, 258,401,568, making a total of 770,193,114.

THE HOLY CITY COMING DOWN

GOLDEN TEXT: "He that cometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God and he shall be his son."
Rev. 21: 7

BY DR. AND MR.
WILBUR F. CRAFT

THE International Lesson Committee, in selecting this as the quarterly temperance lesson, must have had in mind some such thought as prompted Layyah Barakat, when she had left the Mohammedan country of her birth, and had come as a missionary convert to America, where women are treated so much better, to say, "Your land would be heaven if the drink were not here." She found our country a heaven beside her own Turk-ruled Syria, except in the drink habit, in which we are worse than Mohammedans, whose one great virtue is that they are total abstainers, save as European and American example has influenced them for evil. The very latest statistics, those of the New York State Commission of Prisons (quoted Literary Digest, January 26, 1901), show that in the year ending October 1, 1900, one-third of all the commitments to penal institutions in that State were for drunkenness, besides those punished by fines only, which would raise the convictions for drunkenness to one-half the total. And many more not credited to drink should be added. Let any one imagine that in his own neighborhood every quarrel, crime, vice, deformity, want and sorrow due to drink banished from the homes and streets—what a heaven it would be!

The New Jerusalem coming down from God out of heaven. The city of Christ is now building on the earth. Our unbelief has made us think of the heavenly city as a city in heaven, which is a very different thing. The Bible plainly declares that the New Jerusalem, the righteous city, built on the square, but with no courthouse in its centre, is a city "let down from God out of heaven," a city on earth in which the law of Christ is to be really, though it may be not in this world fully, dominant.

When we speak of a "holy man" we do not mean a perfect, or even a sinless man, but one in whose life the law of God is supreme. One hundred such holy people may surely form a holy village, as indeed they do in the mountains of Burma, where missionary converts form new communities in which the law of Christ rules the social relations of man to man in business and politics and pleasure, to the prohibition of polygamy, drink, and opium, as well as the individual relations of the man to God. If there can be Christian villages there can be a Christian city—and will be when we get rid of that worst form of unbelief which assumes that the Gospel is not practicable in business and politics.

As the family, the holy family of Eden, is the point of departure in social study, its goal is the new holy city "let down from God," the kingdom of heaven, a divinely-ordered, divinely-promised, human and humane society of justice and purity and liberty and equality and charity and fraternity and humanity, in which God's will is to be done on earth as it is done in heaven. The central theme of both Testaments is this "kingdom of heaven,"

What is the Kingdom of Heaven?

Interpreted by the words of the Lord's Prayer, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, as in heaven so on earth."

This is a Hebrew parallelism, in which, as in the Psalms, the second line explains the first. Men debate, "What is the kingdom?" There is no room for controversy. Christ answers without figures of speech: It is the doing of God's will, as in heaven, so on earth—the word "kingdom" conveying the additional truth that it is not merely the individual doing of that will, but social obedience to God's law. Could Christ have taught us to pray for what was not to be? His command so to pray is an implied promise that his will is sometime to be so done, as in heaven, so on earth.

Matthew's phrase, "The kingdom of heaven," is manifestly a condensation of the two phrases we have quoted from the Lord's Prayer, and, like them, means a community in which God's will is done on earth as in heaven. Another parallel passage is "the holy city coming down," which means a city into which the customs of heaven have "come down," a city in which God's will is done, as in heaven, so on earth. If this seems a hard saying, contrast the cities of Christendom, not only with the New Jerusalem of the future, but also with Rome of the past, where the most cultured men and the most pious women found their supreme pleasure in seeing beasts, gladiators and martyrs "butchered to make a Roman holiday."

Behold thy King cometh unto thee, oh, city of sin, the old Jerusalem, where even Christ is sold for silver; but by the leaven of his love and law thou shalt become the new Jerusalem, a Christianized society, whose traders and rulers shall no longer be confused and alarmed when the cry is heard, "Where is he that is born King?"

There is an increasing number of modern "seers" who believe in such a city, and are helping to build it.

Hugh Price Hughes has said: "Christ came to create in this world the Christian City, where law is administered in the name of justice and humanity; where the poor, the sick, the solitary are wisely and tenderly benefited; where the young are trained in beautiful thoughts and lofty ideals; where art, literature and science flourish; where the welfare of all is the solicitude and the delight of each; that fair city of God, in fact, of which St. John had so bewitching a vision, where disease ravages no more, where the voice of complaining is not heard in the streets, where pauperism and crime and drunkenness and gambling and debauchery are forgotten insanities of a dismal and buried past."

Francis Turner Palgrave writes:

When'er the gentle heart
Finds courage from above,
When'er the heart forsook
Warms with the breath of love;
Where faith bids fear depart,
City of God! thou art.

Not throned above the skies
Nor golden-walled afar,
But where Christ's two or three
In his name gathered are,
Be in the midst of them,
God's own Jerusalem!

Dr. Everett D. Burr says: "It is theirs who bear the name of Christ to have their hearts filled with the sublime visions of the new city descending out of heaven from God, and, coming down from the great and high mountain of vision, work out in the valley of toil the pattern they have seen of the city which hath no heed of the sun nor of the moon to shine in it, whose gates are not shut by day, for there is no night there, neither shall there be any more death, neither sorrow nor crying—a city without the slums, a city of hope, a city of homes, a city of industry."

Dr. Mathewson writes: "Thou art descending, O! city of

Let us by the lightning express of thought go round the world and see the "tears"—the "light," also, if there be any—that a temperance tour of "nations" will reveal. In the sea we find the English people excited about the discovery of "arsenic in beer," but Dr. Janeway, New York City, says the worst poison ever found in drink is alcohol. Our next stop is in Germany, where beer does prevent its people from drinking more of the stronger than any nation except France, where our lightning next pauses a moment to hear its statesmen and scholars lament that its population is declining, because, for one thing, the general use of wine has not kept its people drinking more of the stronger liquors in proportion to population than any other nation of the world, as was shown in a recent report to the British Parliament. And now we go to Spain, which is the most temperate country in Europe, partly because it was for two hundred years under Mohammedan prohibition. That one virtue of an otherwise faith has also proved a breakwater to the tidal wave of drink in Africa, through which we now speed. The west coast is "one long gin-shop and graveyard." Missionaries tell that millions die there every year of Holland gin and Neapolitan rum, and other deadly drinks with which so-called Christian nations are making ten times as many drunkards as Christians. Slavery slew its thousands, but drink is its ten thousands. But "light" is breaking in "dark Africa." In treaties of 1890 and 1899, seventeen Christian and Mohammedan, agreed to protect the lives of those portions of Africa not previously protected by Mohammedan laws in the north and British laws in the south, against the white man's "fire-water."

The first treaty declares this is done because of the moral and material consequences to which the abuse of spirituous liquors subjects the native population. It is found that traffic injures not only the native, but also the life of the Christian nations, illustrating the great truth that in no case, as well as personal life, righteousness is not only the best principle, but also the best policy. But on we go to Madagascar, whose Christians were now exiled by France, used to license drink, to make revenue out of the misfortune and vices of her subjects, degrading prohibition instead, and putting money above manhood. On we speed, into the island world of the Pacific, in both of which, as we have said before, a petition for protection against intoxicants and opium gathering volume, which is so presented to the great nations of the world by a deputation of temperance reformers.

On we hasten to Burma, a large part of which Great Britain, repentant of its policy in forcing opium on China, has proclaimed prohibition that deadly drug for all not its hopeless victims. Wause a moment in Japan, where prohibition of opium is courted of the reasons for its superiority to China, and where prohibition of tobacco is the latest form. And now we have reached Manchuria, where Russia prohibits opium, and boasts of the contrast between her sphere of influence in this respect and those larger portions of China where British opium is degraded and impoverishes hundreds of millions in the cities of opium sots, and makes hundreds of millions of Chinese hate foreigners in general and the British in particular. And we end our tour for the present in Peking, where a petition of American Missionary Societies asks the United States to initiate, with Russia and Japan, a proposal, to which England is now ready to accede, to release China from compulsory treaty obligations to allow the awful opium traffic, and leave her free to prohibit this curse, which Ister Wu Ting Fang recently assured us the Chinese Government is still as eager to do as when, in 1840-42, the opium trade repealed the prohibition previously proclaimed by a no-peror, Tao Kwang, who said, when an opium licensor proposed, "I cannot receive any revenue from the causes misery and suffering to my people." What rebuke to the license policy which so many Christians support! We return across the Pacific, in good hope that the half-civilized and uncivilized peoples of the world will be emancipated from rum and opium, remembering at the beginning of the end of slavery was the battle against its extension to new territories. Without waiting for history to repeat itself, even an army of one may set foot to work to abolish the saloon in his own town, so help us against his own door to make a "new earth." In one of her late national addresses, Miss Willard told the story of a man who rode into an English village, and eagerly sought his favorite ale. He was informed that in that town there was no house where intoxicating beverages could be had. He asked the meaning of this most extraordinary state of things. The answer was: "About a hundred years ago a man named John Wesley lived in this town." When such men have made such changes in most of the towns of our old world, it will be a "new earth," indeed, and a "new heaven" be-

"I SAW THE HOLY CITY, NEW JERUSALEM, COMING DOWN FROM GOD OUT OF HEAVEN"

God; I see thee coming nearer and nearer, Tongues are dead; prophecies are dying; but charity is born. Our castles rise into the air and vanish; but love is bending lower every day.

"Man says, 'Let us make a tower on earth which shall reach unto heaven;' but God says, 'Let us make a tower in heaven that shall reach unto the earth.' O, descending city; O, humanitarian city; O, city for the outcast and forlorn, we hail thee, we greet thee, we meet thee! All the isles wait for thee—the lives riven from the mainland—the isolated, shunted, stranded lives. They sing a new song at thy coming, and the burden of its music is this, 'He hath prepared for me a city.'"

And Henry Drummond has said: "To make cities—that is what we are here for. To make good cities—that is for the present hour the main work of Christianity. For the city is strategic. It makes the towns; the towns make the villages, the villages make the country. He who makes the city, makes the world."

And God shall wipe away all tears . . . and the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light. Such a "new earth" with "light" in place of "tears,"

Temperance Tour of the World story, it is certain that there is no way by which we can help more to abolish the "tears" and increase the "light" of this world, than by doing what can be done by example and voice and vote to banish the drink demon that makes so much of earth a hell when it might otherwise be "a heaven begun below."

How to Do Things

THE French have a terse little phrase, savoir faire—which means to know and to do. A great many women are worried lest they shall be proved lacking in this, lest they shall make some mistake in their etiquette. In some little conventionality they shall blunder. Hence arises the solicitude about cases, how many to leave at a reception; about calls, how many to make the first one, and how soon must it be returned; about wedding gifts, how to acknowledge them, and about such matters as forks and spoons on the dinner table.

The fact is that manuals of good form would do very little towards setting awkward people at their ease, even if they were most assiduously studied. We acquire grace and polish of manner by practicing politeness in daily life. She who is habitually gentle and considerate, who never raises her voice to an unmannerly pitch, and never drops into slang or into ungrammatical expressions, will speak like a lady at all times, and need not be afraid though she find herself in the presence of royalty. Our conventional rules are seldom purely arbitrary; they rest on a solid base of kindness, convenience and common sense. Thus, in the matter of forks at the table: if you are giving a formal dinner, with a succession of courses, it will save trouble to lay all the forks for the whole dinner beside the plate when the table is set. As each course is removed, the fork used with it will be taken away. If, however, you do not happen to possess forks enough to do this, use what you have, and bring clean ones quickly as they are needed. Nobody will observe, unless you apologize. All fussing, fretting and apologizing in company is in bad taste and opposed to politeness, because it tends to make those who receive the excuse uncomfortable.

The diffident visitor is likely to miss the enjoyment he or she might have at a party, through fear of doing or not doing some expected thing. Yet it is very simple. You speak to your hostess at a reception or an evening company, and stand near the door, on purpose that you may have no trouble in finding her. Having made your manners to her, you may speak to whomsoever else you please, and enjoying yourself as you like until you take leave, when you bid your hostess good-by, with a brief acknowledgment of the pleasure you have had.

Young girls are fearful that they may be too pressing their attentions to young men. Shall they ask them to call? Shall they send them presents when they graduate? Shall they thank them for any civility? In the last instance, yes, cordially, but not effusively. In the others, no. A man, as a rule, asks permission to call. He can divine from a lady's manner whether or not he may venture to do this. Perhaps, he just calls, which is eminently sensible on his part, if he knows the lady well enough. And when he calls, he asks for Miss Lucy's mother, as well as Miss Lucy's self, since in these days it is very bad form indeed to ignore others. About sending presents: Elsie does not swifter them on Edward, unless he is her brother, her cousin, her brother's chum or her old schoolmate. In all of these cases, it is permitted her to give him a book, or a sofa cushion with his college colors, or any trifling souvenir, and equally he may present her with books, flowers or sweets, but with nothing costly, and nothing in the line of jewelry or dress.

About the setting of a table for any ordinary meal, do as you please. But for a formal dinner, put on only your finest linen, over a silence cloth of cotton flannel or of your prettiest centre-piece, and either silver candlesticks with tiny paper shades, or a lamp, not too large, which burns with a clear flame. A few flowers in low vases are pretty, and you may have little silver and glass dishes with salted almonds, olives and bon-bons, and there. Only the place plates are put on. The dishes are served from a side table, except that the hostess often serves the soup herself and the host carves the roast. In ultra-fashionable houses, all the carving and serving are done away from the table by the butler, but most of us are not very fashionable and are grateful that it is still good form for the man of the house to carve, and to ask his guests what part of the fowl, and what sort of cooking, under-done or well-done, they prefer. It is obligatory on the well-bred guest to make a choice. She must not murmur that she does not care, she eases her entertainer's burden by stating her wish.

The Children's Teeth

A great deal of care should be bestowed upon the first teeth of our little children, and the mother should take her wee toddlers to the dentist from time to time, that even small cavities may be filled. An infant crying in the night because of the toothache reflects seriously upon the good sense of his parents. Also, the second and permanent teeth depend very much upon the first. They must have room in the jaw, so that they will come into place evenly, like kernels of corn on the ear or rows of pearls. From the earliest hour, children should be taught to brush their teeth and to care as much for this part of their toilet as for the washing of face and hands. Too much candy should be avoided in the child's diet, and plenty of good oatmeal and corn meal and wheat, not too finely ground, should be given as food during the years when the teeth are forming.

All one's life, teeth will be useful servants if they are properly looked after during childish years. They are also a great beauty, if regular, white and sound. An unwholesome state of the teeth produces a disagreeable breath, and this is to be deprecated, since it makes a person offensive instead of pleasant to those whom he meets.

AUNT PRUDENCE PAYSON'S CATCH-ALL

—TRIED AND TRUE. Nothing is so contemptible as an anonymous letter. Never send or notice one.

—MARGERY. Send several poems at a time to the editor, if you choose. It will not work to your disadvantage.

—JANE. I regard the position of a general houseworker as most honorable, particularly if she fill it acceptably.

—MAY LOU. Wild flowers will grow in the garden if planted in good soil and in places like their native haunts.

—E. You poor mother. I am sorry for you. But pray, God can change the situation. Do not fret. Leave it with him.

—JEANIE. Your husband means no harm. I fear he is a little vain. Most men are. Be as neat and attractive as possible yourself.

—RUSTIC. Common politeness requires you to answer every letter you receive, unless there is some excellent reason to the contrary.

—INQUIRER. Should a woman curl her hair? Why not, if ringlets become her? But let her avoid heated curling irons, which ruin the hair.

—A LADY. By care in your own speech, and the absolute avoidance of slang, you will raise the tone of those around you, though you will of course be on your guard against hurting the feelings of your friends by criticism.

THAT GIGGLE

WHEN I arose to speak one day
I quite forgot what I had to say,
I thought and thought and tried in vain
To bring it to my mind again,
And there I stood with head downcast,
A-dreading what would come at last.

The room grew dark, my heart grew sad,
I thought I surely would go mad.
I tried to speak, but not a word,
Or e'en a whisper could be heard.
My limbs with palsy seemed to shake,
My heart with terror seemed to quake.

I heard a giggle clear and loud
Go rippling through the waiting crowd.
I could no longer stand the strain,
For bursting seemed my heart and brain;
Then to my feelings I gave vent,
And weeping to my seat I went.

Akron, O. From Smiles, BY ALICE LEWIS RICHARDS.

Among Negro Cabins

A FEW weeks ago we were thrilled and saddened by the tidings that beautiful Jacksonville, the lovely Southern city which so many of us have visited when first entering Florida, had been fire swept. Large hotels, great business blocks, and many sweet, rose-embowered homes were laid in ashes. White people and black sat side by side in their misery near the ruins of their houses, and ate the bread of charity.

While the Southerner of the "old school" deprecates the idea of social equality with the negro, he understands him better, and is often more practically kind to him than are the Northern friends of the colored race. In childhood the piccaninny plays with the white child on the most fraternal terms, and when grown up there is often great mutual confidence and loyal friendliness between members of the two races. So magnificent an organizer and patriot as Booker T. Washington is doing everything man can do to uplift his people, and, in teaching them trades, is showing them the way to self-support. It remains for us to employ them when taught, and not to slam the door of honest labor in the face of any man, white, brown, black, or red, when he seeks to open it, and is properly equipped. Paul Lawrence Dunbar is showing what a black man can do in literature, and Charles W. Chestnut, who has a mingling of white blood with the darker tinge, is taking a foremost place among the writers of current fiction.

From such a home as that shown in the picture, a typical negro cabin in Florida, swarming with half-clad, barefooted little ones, another Booker Washington may yet come. The Virginia cabin which was the cradle of Mr. Washington was no better than this, but starting there, with indomitable pluck and energy, the great black man has climbed to a place where he commands the esteem and confidence of the best among his countrymen.

In tropical climates, such as that of our beautiful land of Florida, the soil yields its harvests without exhausting labor. In these days the market gardener finds it very profitable to raise early vegetables and berries for the Northern cities, so that the orange industry has fallen into the background. In the strawberry field, men, women and children toil, and the scene when the fruit is picked and packed for shipping is a most varied and animated one, exceedingly picturesque and interesting.

Hoe-cake and bacon form the staple of food in the negro home, fried chicken being an occasional luxury, not often to be expected. The children sleep on the floor, and eat when they are hungry, a regularly appointed table being considered superfluous. Many of the people are increasing in thrift, and the earnings of those who are disposed to work form a creditable sum total at the end of a week.

CHINA'S TRIBUTE TO GRANT

Minister Wu's Remarkable Oration on Memorial Day

PROBABLY the most notable incident in connection with the Memorial Day services in New York this year, was the oration delivered by

WU TING FANG
Chinese Minister at Washington

Wu Ting Fang, the Chinese Minister, at the tomb of General Grant. Minister Wu appeared upon the platform dressed in the costume of his country, and was listened to with the deepest attention by the great audience. In the course of his remarks he said: "To address an American audience on a day consecrated to America's patriotic dead is an office for which a foreigner is not naturally fitted. The occasion calls for the ponderous periods of Webster, the gorgeous rhetoric of Sumner, and the classic diction of Everett to recount the story of deeds heroically done and duty nobly performed. I am sensible of the difficulties I labor under to come up to the requirements. But I could not very well decline the great honor, when several months ago I was invited to take part in the exercises of this day—the first Memorial Day in the twentieth century—and deliver an oration at the final resting place of the great American soldier and statesman whose achievements have commanded the admiration of the world, and whose fame has spread to far-off lands.

"The career of Grant is just such as is calculated to fire the imagination of the Chinese. 'Statesmen and Generals do not come from an exclusive stock,' is one of our favorite sayings. We Chinese have great admiration for men who have risen by their talents from humble beginnings to be acknowledged leaders of the people. Such was Grant. Naturally, all China delighted to do him honor.

"But there was one Chinese official who took a specially keen and indeed personal interest in the visit of Gen. Grant. That was the Viceroy of the Province of Chili, Li Hung Chang. When the United States man-of-war Ashuelot, with General Grant on board, steamed into the harbor of Tientsin, the Viceroy was the first man to bid him a hearty welcome. Thus began that singular friendship between the two great men.

"Little did Earl Li think that he should ever be able to make a voyage abroad and visit Grant's country, when the two were enjoying a friendly chat together over a cup of tea in the Viceroy's yamen at Tientsin. But the period of seventeen years that followed was an eventful one for China. Over seventy years old, Earl Li left his native land to visit the countries of Europe and America. In the meantime, Grant had already gone to the grave. When the aged Viceroy arrived at New York, the reception he received was an exceedingly warm one. As the steamship St. Louis, which bore him to this country, was drawing near her pier, he went on deck, in order to be ready to step on shore with the least possible delay. There he stood for a while in the midst of his numerous retinue, head and shoulders above all that were round him, feeling perhaps not a little sad that Grant was no more. But, strange to say, the first American that rushed down the gang-plank to meet him was one who bore a startling likeness to his departed friend. It was Col. Frederick Grant.

"After Grant's death, Earl Li gave instructions to the Chinese legation at Washington to bring every year on this day, an offering of flowers to the general's tomb on Memorial Day, as a token of his enduring friendship. When he was in this city during his visit to this country, he regarded it as his first duty to make a pilgrimage to the final resting place of his deceased friend. His placing a floral wreath upon Grant's sarcophagus was an occasion that will not easily be forgotten from men's memory.

"A nation which has produced such men as Washington, Lincoln and Grant can again produce men like them. A nation which has no lack of men able and ready to cope with every emergency that may arise in its progress, is truly great, and will continue to be so. The reason why Lincoln is revered by posterity is not only because he was a wise statesman and President, but also because he devoted and gave up his life for the cause of freedom and liberty. In like manner Grant is revered and honored now not only because he was a great and skillful commander—which, indeed, earned him to fame—but also because he was magnanimous and generous toward his friends and enemies alike, and firmly devoted to justice and peace.

"If Grant had done his work in China, there is no doubt that temples would have been erected in his honor throughout the Empire. Before his shrines, impressive ceremonies would be performed at stated intervals of the year, by officials of the Government, with burning of incense and the offering of sacrifices. But things are done differently in this country. Sometimes it has been said that republics are ungrateful. The grand mausoleum is at least a standing witness to the people of the United States are not unmindful of their obligations to the great leader that conducted them through a memorable crisis in their national life."

THE PRESBYTERIAN GENERAL ASSEMBLY YIELDS TO THE DEMAND FOR REVISION OF THE CREED

FUTURE generations of Presbyterians will probably be very familiar with the proceedings of the General Assembly of 1901, recently held in Philadelphia, which was the one hundred and thirteenth in the series. It will stand out from its predecessors as the one in which the bulwarks of conservatism were for the first time pierced by the shafts of progression. There are many now who lament the victory over which others rejoice, and there are many dismal predictions of the evils which will flow from this first yielding of the defenders of things as they are. Probably neither the optimists nor the pessimists will find any great change result from the action of the Assembly; nor will there be any important difference in the utterances from the pulpits. The doctrines which were the objects of attack have for a long time been kept in the background, and if the ministers really did continue to believe them, there has been little evidence of the fact in their sermons. The doctrines have been used chiefly to test the orthodoxy of candidates for ordination and to mark the outlines of the position on which the Presbyterian Church is supposed to stand.

The most conspicuous of these doctrines are those defined in the third chapter of the Confession, which deals with the subject of God's Eternal Decree, with the famous section on those "who are foreordained to everlasting death." Another section is that in the sixteenth chapter, which stigmatizes as sinful good works done by unregenerate men. A third section implies that there is a discrimination among children dying in infancy, and that it is possible that some of them are lost. A fourth object of attack was the declaration, which is offensive to persons who have Christian charity, that the Pope is Antichrist, a statement in which few students of prophecy concur. It was not proposed to expunge these sections from the Confession. A proposition so radical would probably have been promptly voted down. It was suggested that some amendments might be made, and that a committee be appointed to prepare a brief summary of the faith which should hold a similar relation to the Shorter Catechism that the Shorter Catechism holds to the Larger Catechism. It was hoped that in this "brief summary" greater emphasis would be placed on the love of God for all men and on the duty of preaching the Gospel to the heathen. By this means it was hoped that the attitude of the Church would appear less austere and more in harmony with the new view of the Divine relations to the world. Sixty-eight of the two hundred and ten Presbyteries endorsed the proposal for the brief summary, while fifty Presbyteries opposed any change or concession.

Dr. Charles A. Dickey, of Philadelphia, the retiring Moderator, preached an earnest sermon from Colossians 4: 11, in the course of which he said: "We have a noble ministry, nearly eight thousand strong, and the depleted ranks are being filled by colleges and seminaries, whose faithful work praises them. The ministry is strengthened and supported by a noble eldership, nearly thirty thousand strong, whose services, in both church and state, is for the glory of God. Ministers and elders lead a noble membership, more than a million strong, a body of devoted believers whose lives and generous gifts testify to their fidelity. And not our least joy and hope is our reserve, a million and a half strong, that is being trained in ten thousand Sabbath Schools, by devoted teachers, for work unto the kingdom of God."

The election of Moderator, which is always regarded as a test of the attitude of the Assembly, proved not to be so this year. There was an urgent appeal from the Pacific slope that the chair should go this year to one of its representatives, because of the need of strengthening the Church in that section. It so happened that Dr. Henry C. Minton who was the representative most in favor, was known to be opposed to change; but it was found that some revisionists would support him on geographical considerations. Besides which, his chief opponent, Dr. Purves, of New York, who succeeded the late Dr. John Hall, is a still more stalwart anti-revisionist. The vote of the Assembly gave the Moderatorship to Dr. Minton by a majority of sixty-one in a total vote of 613.

REV. DR. MINTON, MODERATOR OF THE ASSEMBLY

Dr. H. C. Minton is Professor of Systematic Theology in the Theological Seminary of San Francisco and has remained in that position for eleven years, rejecting invitations to more lucrative offices in various parts of the country. He is a native of Washington County, Pennsylvania, and is forty-six years of age. He studied at Washington and Jefferson College, graduating in 1879. His theological course was taken at the Western Seminary at Allegheny and occupied three years. His first pastorate was at the First Presbyterian Church of Duluth, Minn. In 1884 he removed to California to take charge of the First Presbyterian Church of San Jose. During his pastorate he obtained vacation for travel and made an extended tour abroad, the course of which he visited many of the mission fields of the Presbyterian Church. After a pastorate of six years at San Jose, he accepted an invitation to the pastorate of St. John's Church, in San Francisco, but before he was installed he received an urgent call to the position which he now occupies in the Presbyterian Seminary.

The crucial question of revision came before the Assembly on two reports from the committee appointed by the previous Assembly to collect the opinion of the Presbyteries. In view of the answers received, which showed that 131 Presbyteries were in favor of revision in some form, the committee reported in favor of the appointment of a new committee to amend some specified sections of the Confession. A majority of the committee recommended also a preparation of a brief summary, while the minority opposed it. The two reports occasioned a protracted discussion, though it was noted that this year there was less of bitterness and more courteous treatment of opponents than on previous occasions when the subject was debated. The sides were, however, quite as much determination on both sides and as earnest an endeavor to carry the vote of the Assembly. On four days the debate was continued, and then the Assembly grew impatient and demanded a final vote, which was accordingly taken. The numbers were: For the preparation of a brief summary, 271 against, 234. A committee was therefore appointed to do the work. The substitution of Dr. Minton's name for that of Dr. Dickey as Chairman of the Committee was secured after a struggle, and was regarded as a proof that the Anti-revisionists were taking what measures were left to them, of reducing the changes to the very smallest that would be conformable with the instructions to the committee. The concession, however, obtained from the Assembly is too important to be minimized, and it will, as the one side hopes and the other side fears, probably be the prelude to other still more vital.

A FILIPINO EVANGELIST

Nicolas Zamora and his Wonderful Spiritual Work Among his Fellow-Countrymen

THE recent movement toward Protestantism in Manila has attracted considerable attention locally. In the autumn of 1898, the first representatives of the missionary societies came to the Philippines to look over the field and report on the advisability of opening work for the natives. The secretaries of the Army and Navy Young Men's Christian Association had come with the aim of occupation, but they had devoted their energies to work among the ever increasing number of Americans, excepting the distribution of Spanish Bibles and Testaments. In the year 1899 the agents of the American Bible Society and the British and Foreign Bible Society began a work that has had a remarkable growth. About five thousand copies of the Word were sold by each society in the month of March, 1901.

Just two years ago, Bishop Thoburn came to Manila from India, and held several meetings in the Filipino Theatre and began a work that was carried on by volunteer workers and chaplains of the army.

the captain of an island steamer, and in this capacity met a gentleman who gave him a copy of the Bible. He studied the book and it became a part of his life. He talked of it so boldly that he was banished to a small island in the Mediterranean Sea, just off the coast of Spain. After two years of exile, he was allowed to return to Manila, about the time the Americans occupied the city. This family was one of those that welcomed the new power, for it meant the religious liberty they had long desired.

Less than twenty-five years old, above the average of his people in size, a fluent and forceful speaker in both Spanish and Tagalog, Nicolas Zamora is a power among his people. He was educated in the Jesuit college in Manila, and it was his uncle's wish that he should become a priest, but he chose to study medicine. His studies were broken by the insurrection, and for a year past he has been an ordained worker of the Methodist mission. The demands for his services are greater than his time and strength, but he preaches provinces, with hundreds of thousands of people, are now open to the Gospel and not a messenger to go to them. The responsibility for the people of these islands is surely on the church of God in the United States. E. W. HEARNE.

WAIFS PLEAD FOR OUTINGS

Many Tenement Tots are Begging to Go to Mont-Lawn --- Little Helpers

MORE applications for outings at our Children's Home are being received than ever before. These applications come from pastors, missionaries and Sunday School teachers and parents, and from the children themselves. The latter call in person or send pathetic little scrawls, pleading for the assurance that they can go to Mont-Lawn when the awful hot weather arrives. "I had such good times out there," writes one small man. "There was such beautiful grass to play on. I had enough to eat, and there was milk. I wish I was up there now. There is nuthin but street to play on here."

"CAN WE GO TO THE HOME?"

Nothing but "street," with hard, blistering pavements, for little feet to press when the sun beats down in summer on sweltering courts and crowded, ill-smelling alleys, where bar-room signs hang out at every corner, and vice flaunts itself in the very face of childhood! Poor little laddie! Your simple, eloquent plea—"nuthin but street"—voices the whole hard case of the tenement child's playtime—nay, much of its living time.

Children who have big, green yards, or broad, flowery fields to romp in, and cool, roomy homes to live and eat and sleep in, can hardly realize the situation of the child who, for all his pleasures in life, is relegated to the "gutter playground," and who, under certain stress of condition, keeps to that territory for the bare comfort of the thing long after he should be in bed.

The following letter, addressed to our Superintendent and House-mother, illustrates a very frequent form of application received from children who have passed the age limit of guests (twelve years), and who want to come as helpers.

Dear Miss Collins: Can I come to help William [our chef] in the kitchen? I will always be on time. William will not have to call me twice. I would like to earn some shoes this summer. Can my brother come too? My brother is little. JOE.

This pathetic note has won its way and a place will be made for the writer:

Dear Miss Collins: Can I come to help? My father is dead. My mother has been sick. My brother drinks all the time and makes my mother feel so bad. I will help, and be good. Mother will be so glad for me to come. Please let me come. ANNIE.

The attire in which many small applicants present themselves is in itself an argument in their behalf. On hot days some children come all bundled up in winter clothing, because it is their best—perhaps their only whole set of garments. Many thanks are due to the kind friends who are sending boxes of garments, shoes and hats for our children. Everything that can be worn by children from four to twelve years old is helpful. Mothers whose broods have outgrown their blouses, trousers, dresses and jackets are contributing much to the happiness of ragged tots by donations of these. Boxes should be expressed to Housemother Collins, CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home, Nyack, N. Y. Money should be sent to this office—$3 gives one child an outing.

PUTS THE "GINGER" IN.

The Kind of Food used by Athletes.

A former college athlete, one of the long distance runners, began to lose his power of endurance. His experience with a change in food is interesting.

"While I was in training on the track athletic team, my daily 'jogs' became a task, until after I was put on Grape-Nuts Food for two meals a day. After using the Food for two weeks I felt like a new man. My digestion was perfect, nerves steady and I was full of energy."

"I trained for the mile and the half mile runs (those events which require so much endurance) and then the long daily 'jogs', which before had been such a task, were clipped off with ease. I won both events."

"The Grape-Nuts Food put me in perfect condition and gave me my 'ginger.' Not only was my physical condition made perfect, and my weight increased, but my mind was made clear and vigorous so that I could get out my studies in about half the time formerly required. Now most all of the University men use Grape-Nuts for they have learned its value, but I think my testimony will not be amiss and may perhaps help some one to learn how the best results can be obtained. Please do not publish my name."

There is a reason for the effect of Grape-Nuts Food on the human body and brain. The certain elements in wheat and barley are selected with special reference to their power for rebuilding the brain and nerve centers. The product is then carefully and scientifically prepared so as to make it easy of digestion. The physical and mental results are so apparent after two or three weeks' use as to produce a profound impression. The Food can be secured at any first-class grocery store.

NO. 200 CALLE RIAL, MANILA, A CENTRE OF PROTESTANT ACTIVITY—NICOLAS ZAMORA

With the aid of interpreters, Spanish services were held, and in one of these meetings in August, 1899, on account of the absence of the regular interpreter, a young man named Nicolas Zamora was asked to act in that capacity. Though but 22 years of age, he showed that he had great natural ability as a speaker, and he has spoken almost every Sunday since that time, and usually many times during the week.

Within a year from this beginning, about a dozen missionaries were at work in the islands, representing the Presbyterian, Methodist-Episcopal and Baptist churches. With two or three exceptions, the workers were not masters of the Spanish language, and even yet none of them are able to speak publicly in the native dialects. While Spanish is spoken more or less all over the islands, it is not the language of the home, except in rare cases. The thoughts of the people are in Tagalog, Visayan, Pampanga, Pangasinan, Ilocano, Cagayan, Bicol, or whatever the dialect of their particular district may be.

Nicolas Zamora is a Tagalo, and comes from a family of some note. One of his father's brothers was a priest in the cathedral at Manila, and another brother was gilloté on the Luneta, a generation ago, for criticizing the government. Paulino Zamora, the father, was for many years to thousands weekly in and near Manila. Other native helpers are doing public work and the interest seems to be of a substantial sort, several hundred having joined the church. Much attention has been attracted by a Spanish service that has been held on Sunday mornings for a number of weeks in the Rizal Theatre. The first meeting was held immediately following a meeting of the Federal party, several Protestant workers speaking on the invitation of some prominent Filipino gentlemen, who were members of the Federal party committee. The statement that this religious movement was a part of the Federal party is erroneous. A few men are prominent in both, but this is only in one district of the city. An evangelical church will probably grow out of this theatre meeting.

At several points outside of Manila, on Luzon, and on the islands of Panay and Negros, missionaries are at work and the results are encouraging everywhere. It is remarked that in all the meetings the men are much more numerous than the women. The old system, the Romish church and its confessional, has a stronger hold on the women; but the people are gradually coming to realize that they can worship where they please, and that it is not a crime to attend a Protestant service or to look at a Bible.

The Renovation of the Earth

God's Promise of a Redeemed World in which Righteousness will Abide

...BY MRS. M. BAXTER...

THE apostle Peter, writing "to them that have obtained a like precious faith with us in the righteousness of our God and Saviour Jesus Christ" (II. Peter 1: 1, R. V.) speaks of "mockers" who shall be in the last days, "walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? For from the day that the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." (II. Peter 3: 3, 4, R. V.) This prophecy is fulfilled to-day before our eyes. Peter says that these men are wilfully forgetful of the destruction of the earth by water at the time of the flood; and he announces that not the earth only, but the heavens also, should be "dissolved," or "melt with fervent heat." But as out of the destruction of the world by water God brought forth the world as it now is, so "according to his promise [Isa. 65: 10; 66: 22], we look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (II. Peter 3: 5-7, 10-13).

"A new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." Oh, how one breathes freely at the thought! Pure heavens, no longer defiled by "the prince of the power of the air" (Eph. 2: 3), with his "wicked spirits in heavenly places" (Eph. 6: 12, margin): a pure earth where all remembrance of sin, all associations with sin, are forever taken away! And the first who comes to make a dwelling here is God himself. "Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he shall dwell with them, and be their God, and he shall wipe away every tear from their eyes" (vers. 3, 4). Tears were among "the former things," and have no place here. And death, "the last enemy [I. Cor. 15: 26], shall be no more;" for death and Hades have been cast into the lake of fire (Rev. 20: 14); their awful ministry of judgment upon sin has ceased forever, and they are no longer needed. "Neither shall there be mourning, nor crying, nor pain, any more. The former things are passed away" (R. V.).

While things are slowly developing, and God's long-suffering is waiting until man meets him in his purpose for the world, God has a people who are "not of the world even as Christ was not of the world" (John 17: 14-16); chosen in him before the foundation of the world (Eph. 1: 4), whose citizenship is in heaven. What he will do in the earth and the heavens materially, when he shall make all things new, he is now doing spiritually in his elect. As the earth itself must be cleansed by fire before it can be the dwelling-place of God, so he cleanses his own people, and tells them not to count it a strange thing if the trial of their faith is a fiery trial (I. Peter 4: 12), but to count it all joy (James 1: 2, 3), for the trial of their faith is "more precious than of gold which perisheth" (I. Peter 1: 7). He must, in his dealings with his people, also make all things new. All must pass through the fire in order that all which is corruptible, all which is not eternal life—Christ in you (Col. 1: 27)—all which is of that fallen nature which has been infected by sin, shall be destroyed, as we willingly yield it up to him, in test after test, through which he leads us. We have ever to depend upon the precious blood to cleanse our consciences from dead works to serve the living God, as the Holy Spirit reveals to us what is of Christ and what is of self. It is newness of life (Rom. 6: 4) to which we are called, and for which we are empowered, as we are led by the Spirit of God (Rom. 8: 14) through the tests in our life, day after day. "If any man be in Christ, there is a new creation," as new as the new heavens and the new earth. "Old things are passed away," as the old heavens and the old earth shall have passed away when God shall tabernacle among men. "Behold, they are become new" (II. Cor. 5: 17). How strikingly similar is this passage to Rev. 21: 1!

Oh, how one's heart yearns that this transformation may be complete! It is very glorious to know that this is God's purpose for us; for this we are predestinated, "to be conformed to the image of his Son" (Rom. 8: 28, 29), and our part in this great work is clearly shown in II. Cor. 3: 18. "We all, with unveiled face, beholding, as in a mirror [James 1: 23, 24], and therefore reflecting [cont. A. V. and R. V.] the glory of the Lord, are transformed into the same image, from glory to glory, even as from the Lord the Spirit." As we behold the glory of the Lord, not ourselves, not others, not circumstances, not doctrine, but himself, in his Word, the light of life is reflected upon and from us, and transforms us. And this transformation touches both our mind (Rom. 12: 2) and the spirit of our mind (Eph. 4: 23), which is renewed, not once for all, but "day by day" (II. Cor. 4: 16), and which is "renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him" (Col. 3: 10). In the new heavens and the new earth, the members of the body of Christ (I. Cor. 12: 12, 13) will be in him, inseparably one with him. Where he is they will be also.

"And I saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven from God, made ready as a bride adorned for her husband." Verses 9 to 23 give us the glorious description of this heavenly city, which God hath prepared for his saints of old (Heb. 11: 16), according to promise, "the city which hath foundations" (Heb. 11: 10; Rev. 21: 14, R. V.), which is "the city of our God," "the city of the Great King," "the city of the Lord of hosts" (Ps. 48: 1-3); for the description in this psalm far transcends what could be said of the earthly Jerusalem. This city is the bride, the external manifestation before the universe of God's union with his people. The expressions in the Old Testament of Israel as the "bride," the "married wife," etc., will be fully justified in those days of the new heavens and the new earth. Israel, during the Millennium, will have renewed her betrothal to God, and all the nations of the earth will have been blest through Abraham's seed; "for the law shall go forth from Zion, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem" (Isa. 2: 4).

ERIE, PA., HAS A REVIVAL

THE First Presbyterian Church of Erie, Pa., has lately experienced a remarkable revival. The church has had a succession of able ministers.

REV. H. C. ROSS

REV. M. S. REES

The Rev. G. Lyon, D.D., was pastor from September, 1829, until his death in March, 1871, this being his first and only pastorate. The Rev. Herbert C. Ross, the present minister, has done effective work, and is recognized and valued not only in his own congregation but in the community at large. The session lately secured the services of the Rev. M. S. Rees of Rochester, and Prof. W. S. Weeden of New York, to conduct a series of Gospel meetings. Mr. Rees is a practical and powerful preacher, trusting for success to the inherent power of the Gospel. Large numbers waited upon his ministry, and at the closing Sabbath services crowds thronged the church to hear this able evangelist proclaim the messages of life. For three successive Sundays he addressed the men in the hall of the Y. M. C. A. Prof. Weeden led the singing, and rarely have the Gospel songs been so fitly interpreted. The "bread cast upon the waters" shall doubtless come again, and in renewed lives and brightened hopes the Gospel of Christ shall prove its power to save.

FOUND CHRIST IN CHILDHOOD

How Bishop Willard F. Mallalieu, of Boston, and Mrs. Booker T. Washington, Entered upon Careers of Christian Service :

BY REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D.

BISHOP MALLALIEU is well known, not only in his own denomination, but beyond it, for two special phases of earnest and heroic work. One of these is his intensely evangelistic spirit. Wherever he goes, to attend conferences, he enters his audiences with his own great faith that the mightiest work of the Christian minister and the Christian Church today is to turn sinners to righteousness. His conferences are often the scenes of great religious enthusiasm and devotion to the uplifting of millions of colored people who have been hitherto without a opportunity for education. Bishop Mallalieu has carried the cause of the education of the colored race upon his heart many years, and has raised large sums of money and given largely of his time and strength most unselfishly to this cause. It is interesting to note how such intense and devoted religious career is carried on its way of blessing. In answer to my inquiries Bishop Mallalieu is the seventh of ten children, all of whom with the exception of one who died when he was a half-year old, lived to adulthood. Of the family seven are now living, at an average age of more than seventy years. He is now nine, with my father, after my conversion, were in due time converted and united with the church. From his childhood I was a constant attendant at the Sunday School and Sunday preaching services. Some of the texts and sermons he gave, before I was nine years old made impressions upon my mind and heart that have never been effaced. The most powerful religious and spiritual influence of all my life came from my mother. She was a calm, quiet, loving mother. She had a clear, firm experience of religion, and her life was most consistent and exemplary. Her life was mixed with faith, and her life was a beautiful illustration of the sweetness of the Gospel. She was a pre-eminent example of the best type of the genuine, on and stanch New England Puritan mother and Christian. For months, for many years, I kept my own counsel, and read to no one the conviction I had that I was to be a Christian and that some time I would be one. But in the good province of prayer-meeting—the first one I ever attended; and when the invitation was given to the who wished to be Christians to rise, I rose. Two weeks later I was converted. My mother's prayers, my mother's life, my mother's love, made effectual all other holy influences which helped me to make the eternal pact which I still hold with unyielding faith.

I have thought it not inappropriate to include in this article, the story of the open religious life of Mrs. Booker T. Washington, the wife of perhaps the most conspicuous and most universally admired colored man living. Next to the mother, the personality which counts most in supporting and sustaining a great character in a child, is the wife. The wife makes the atmosphere to which a man must come from the toils and struggles of life. The atmosphere be close and smothery with the little and flippant things of the world, it will be hard for the husband to rise above it and go forth from it refreshed and strengthened in mind and heart for the great work of life. But if the home atmosphere be prayerful, fragrant with reverent trust in God, cheerful with the atmosphere of divine confidence, then in its toils may be forgotten, weariness may be lost, and man go forth again to the morrow, not only refreshed in body by the sleep of the night, but refreshed in spirit and renewed in soul, by a sweet friendship with a pure and true spirit.

I am sure that no one, though he be ignorant of the self-denying devotion and the womanly skill with which Mrs. Booker T. Washington supplements the remarkably successful work of her distinguished husband, can look upon this strong, calm face, full of character and sweetness, without feeling that in fellowship with this good woman, Mr. Washington has found much of sustaining help that has made him, what in some respects is the marvel of our time, a man not only greatly loved by the black race, but as thoroughly respected and honored by the white people of the South as he is by those of the North. It is needless to say that Mrs. Washington is a very devout Christian. She is not only the helper of her husband in the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute, at Tuskegee, Alabama, but she is also the president of The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, among her own people, for that State. I have from her this brief but interesting note:

Your letter is received to-day, and I give to you these few facts, which mean a great deal to me, but may mean very little to others. I take pleasure in saying that when I was a very young girl, a little over ten years of age, I became a Christian. My mother was a devout Christian woman, and my lot has always been cast with people who were Christians, so that I early learned to love the Saviour, and early made up my mind to carry out the principles instilled by my mother. When a very small child I remember the very intense anxiety of my mother that all of her children should become Christians. I was early taught to look for direction from the Spirit, and when the time came I was glad to proclaim my love for the Saviour. I am now very glad that I did not wait until I was a grown woman, but rather as a child I came to Christ.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

A. M. P., Venetia, Pa., writes:

I have been encouraged by reading the answered prayers in your paper, and I am glad to tell it. God has answered my prayer. I was troubled about a man's getting a license to sell liquor in our neighborhood, and I prayed, and God heard and answered my prayer. Blessed be his holy name.

N. B. S., Hastings, Ia., writes:

For months I had been praying for a friend, and after reading some of the many answered prayers in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, my faith was strengthened. I pleaded with new faithfulness that God would bring this friend back to himself. God has answered that prayer.

Subscriber, Chester, Pa., writes:

In my distress I cried unto the Lord. He heard my cry, and is answering my prayer. My faith looks up to him for complete deliverance from my distress.

W. S., Rock Co., Wis., writes:

Last summer I prayed that a certain blessing might come within a year. With it would come great joy. Last week I learned that my prayer had been answered. I give my God the praise.

W. F. W., Clearwater Harbor, Fla., writes:

I besought the Lord to help me out of a great difficulty. He gave me just what I asked, only in a different way than I expected. He never fails to give us what is best.

Mrs. B. H. B., Kosciusko, Miss., writes:

I have been so encouraged by the answers to prayers in your paper. God does answer prayer and that quickly. My trouble was more than I could bear alone; so I pleaded with my God, and it is all passing away.

Mrs. A. M. W., Pillsford, Mich., writes:

Some time ago I saw the "Answered Prayers" in your paper. I had been bearing a burden for over a year, taking it every day to God in prayer. It was on account of a dear boy's not getting employment that would insure him friends and associates of the right character. I felt sometimes that he would lose faith in his Christian friends, and possibly in his dear Father in heaven, and I was deeply grieved. One day while reading the "Answered Prayers," fresh hope and faith came. My prayer for the boy has been answered. For over sixty years I have been a firm believer in prayer, and many times my petitions have been wonderfully answered—far beyond my hopes—and now that this burden has been lifted, I am so happy. I know the position the boy has received was providential. God gave it. Your paper, next to my Bible, helps me most. May God bless all connected in any way with it.

The Gospels in Our New Possessions

The following letter from the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A. will interest many readers who have aided us in spreading the Gospel in our new colonies:

"NEW YORK, May 29. "The Christian Herald": The twelve hundred copies of the Spanish-English Gospel of John, which you were kind enough to send for distribution in the Philippines, Porto Rico and Cuba, have been received, and, on behalf of our committee, I desire to thank you for the continued evidence of interest in the work. Mr. John M. Dean, one of our secretaries, who has just returned from the Philippines, informs me that although those which you have sent before to the Philippines have been used very judiciously, the supply has never been equal to the demand, so that if any of your subscribers wish to do a kindness to the men there, I am sure that gifts of these books would be appreciated.

"JAS. H. BANKS, Secretary."

IT SLUGS,

Even Harder than a Prize Fighter.

A newspaper man is subject to trials and tribulations the same as ordinary mortals. Coffee "slugs" a great many of them.

D. Beidleman, on the Wilkes Barre Record, says regarding his experience with coffee: "A little over two years ago I was on the verge of collapse superinduced by the steady grind of the newspaper office. For weeks I did not have a night's sound sleep and the wakeful nights were followed by despondency and a general breaking up of the constitution. I ran down in weight. My family physician insisted that I leave off coffee and take on Postum Food Coffee, but I would not hear of it.

"One day I was served with a cup of coffee, as I supposed, that had a peculiarly delicious flavor. I relished it, and when drinking the second cup I was told that it was not coffee but Postum Food Coffee. I was dumbfounded, and for a time thought I was the subject of a practical joke. However, I became a firm believer in, and a user of Postum from that time, and almost immediately I began to sleep nights and the irritableness disappeared, and in less than three months I was completely well and in seven months my weight increased up to 198 pounds. I can now do the work of two ordinary newspaper men."

There is a great big lot of common sense in leaving off coffee and using Postum Food Coffee.

These Questions will be Answered July 17

1. What is the longest word in the English language, and what is its derivation and its meaning?
2. Where did the "Week of Prayer" originate?
3. Why does not dew form visibly on stones as well as on grass and on the nearby ground?
4. Can there be genuine love without sympathy?
5. What are the origin and meaning of the expression, "A cycle of Cathay?"

Questions of the Week

1. What is the best way in which one can demonstrate his or her true patriotism?

Primarily, by good citizenship. This implies not only personal morality and obedience to the law, but the advocacy of good measures—such as laws to promote temperance—and the demand that the laws be enforced. In time of national danger, a true patriot will give his life at his country's call, but such times are rare and comparatively few may respond, while the duties of good citizenship are constantly calling on all, and a nation's greatness and security depend on how these duties are daily met. One who is truly patriotic will also believe in his country, love its history, encourage its literature, and, all being equal, add to its prosperity by buying its products in preference to those from foreign lands.

JAMES BELL MAJOR.

True patriotism consists in love of one's country, and whatever makes for the advancement of the best and highest interests of the largest number of one's countrymen and women is the truest kind of patriotism; hence the man or woman who devotes fortune, talents, time and influence to educating the ignorant, improving the social and spiritual condition of the rising generation, is conferring the greatest good upon his country. He who, under the stress of national excitement, will leave desk or bench, and shoulder a musket and march to battle, may never in his life-time be called upon to render this service to his country, but the man or woman, who day by day spends life in bettering the social, moral and spiritual condition of those about them, is rendering that assistance to their country, which will go further towards advancing the nation. Better by far are they who have heard the voice of the great King of kings calling them to alleviate suffering, enlighten ignorance, and turn many to righteousness.

JOSEPH C. LUDGATE.

2. What is the origin of the superstitions connected with the horseshoe?

The superstition that the horseshoe had protecting power against witches and other evil spirits probably originated in the following legend: St. Dunstan, who was noted for his skill in shoeing horses, was one day visited by the Devil, who asked him to shoe his "single hoof." Dunstan, knowing who his customer was, tied him tightly to the wall, and, in the process of shoeing him, purposely put the Devil to so much pain that he roared for mercy. Dunstan, at last, consented to release his captive on condition that he would never enter a place where he saw a horseshoe displayed. Another superstition is that to find a horseshoe brings good luck. The horseshoe unites in itself three lucky elements: it is crescent-shaped, is a portion of a horse, and is made of iron. The crescent, like the horseshoe, is semicircular in shape, and ends in two points. From the earliest antiquity, ornaments shaped in this way have been popular as preservatives against evil spirits and other dangers. Horses were looked upon as luck-bringers, hence a shoe was also considered lucky. Superstition has long endowed iron with protecting powers. The Romans drove nails into the walls of the cottages as an antidote to the plague. It is a good omen always to find old iron, and as horseshoes are the readiest form in which old iron is found, it is naturally the form to which superstition has longest clung.

ALICE L. FREESE.

3. When "Jacob kissed Rachel and lifted up his voice and wept," (see Gen. 29: 11) what was the cause of his weeping?

Jacob's life was sought by Esau in revenge. At Rebekah's suggestion he leaves home, in

4. In seeking the conversion of Jews, is it best to employ Gentiles or converted Jews?

In the beginning of Christianity the first Jewish converts were made by Jewish preachers, and no doubt they were the more easily obtained through their confidence in those of the same blood and training. It might be imagined that the Jews would hate a renegade, and some of them did with great bitterness, but many heard and were won. The Jews are largely the same in character to-day that they were then, being exclusive, clannish and proud of their origin. If a man of their own race, distinguished as to character, talents and reputation comes among them, they are far more likely to trust and to listen to him than to a Gentile. A Jew understands his people better than a Gentile, and has thus a great advantage in his efforts to lead those of his own race to Christ.

L. T. RIGHTSSELL.

The exalted estimate the Jews cherish of themselves as the chosen people of God is coeval with their history, and finds its antithesis in the contempt and hatred which they entertain toward an apostate. He is regarded as a renegade, disowned by his family and mourned as dead, formally excommunicated from the synagogue, and deprived of all the would be difficult to find any Scripture supporting such a demand. Indeed, Paul says (1 Cor. 7: 11): "Let not the husband put away his wife." Of course, in civilized communities the demand should be made, because the bigamist is a lawbreaker and should amend his ways before he is admitted to the Church. But in a heathen land, where polygamy is the rule, and the man in all good conscience has taken a second or a third wife, the missionary might admit him, without taking the responsibility of breaking up families, leaving the wife or wives in an anomalous position and number of children practically fatherless.

S. T. FIELDING.

Miscellaneous Questions

Mrs. A. L. S., Saratoga, N. Y. If God desires men to be saved, why does he not cause them to be saved, seeing that he is almighty?

There is no doubt that he does desire the salvation of all, but it is evidently part of his plan to respect personal freedom and responsibility. He would have men come to him voluntarily, not by coercion. He warns a invites and offers help to the weak, but will not compel any man to yield to him. This is, in the end, a much higher and nobler victory for divine love than could ever come by the exercise of divine power.

Mrs. S. F. K. When a pastor calls on the aged and afflicted of his church, should he wait to be asked to read a prayer with them?

If he holds the relation of a true shepherd to his flock there will be no restraint in such a case. Ordinarily, a pastor does not wait to be invited to give spiritual consolation. He feels quite free to say to the aged invalid that, if the latter is agreeable, he will read and pray with him. On the other hand, there are doubtless times when the pastoral visit is simply meant to be a social, kindly visit.

Mrs. E. M., Solomon, K. What would be the answer of the majority of ministers to this question: A man went to a minister and said, "I am lost. I want to be saved. For a year I have been in anguish. I cannot sleep. I die I will have an eternity. Can you tell me what I must do?"

We think the majority of ministers would give such a man the answer that Paul gave the jailer at Philippi: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." There is no need for the man to remain in jeopardy a single hour. There would be need if he saved only good and worthy men, because that case he might have to wait a long time before he became worthy. But Christ saves sinners. When a sinner desires salvation, a minister should honestly and sincerely put his case in Christ's hands, with the conviction that Christ can and will save him, Christ has his confidence by accepting him at once, and if the man died that night he would be saved. It is the act of faith, of implicit trust, that brings salvation to him. People make a mistake when they suppose that they must first reform in order to be saved. Christ saves them in order that they may reform, and he helps them to do it. The very first thing to be done is for the man to commit himself to Christ. A patient puts his case in the hands of a physician, fully prepared to take the treatment, whatever it may be. In that act he turns away from sin; and Christ takes hand to lead him to heaven. Whether the process be long or short, it is only a continuation of that first act, by which the sinner came a saint in embryo. By that first act he becomes a Christ's man or Christian, and of it comes the sure consequence of purifying sanctifying influence which never ceases as long as he lives. He has eternal life while Christ accepts him, because he is there united to Christ, and that eternal life begins to show itself in his daily life and to do ever more and more clearly to the end.

haste and despondency, to flee to Laban, his uncle, ostensibly to obtain a wife. At Beth-el, on the way, Jehovah promises to bless him. After a weary journey, uncertain of his reception, he reaches Haran and inquires for Laban of the shepherds at the public well. He is cordially received. When told that Rachel, his cousin, is approaching with the flock, a variety of emotions overwhelm him. He is overcome by this auspicious ending of his journey among kindred; by the evidence that Jehovah is thus beginning the fulfillment of his promise, and by the loveliness of Rachel, who wins his heart at first sight. Inspired to unusual effort, he removes the stone from the well, waters the flock, and, assuming the privilege of a brother (cousin), before all the shepherds kisses Rachel, and, in the excitement and reaction of the moment, weeps aloud for very joy.

CHARLES H. HARRISON.

Josephus, the old Jewish historian, furnishes the clue. He says that at their meeting, and after first greetings, "Jacob was quite overcome, not so much by their kindred, nor by that affection which might arise thence, as by his love to the damsel, which was so flourishing that few of the women of that age could vie with her." Jacob explained more fully their close relationship, ending by claiming cousinship. "And now," he added, "I am come to salute you and to renew that affinity which is proper between us." He had spoken so tenderly of Rebekah, his mother, the sister of Rachel's father, that the girl's heart melted, and as they embraced, she wept. Jacob being filled with joy at this delightful conclusion to his journeyings, and with gratitude to God for the wonderful fulfillment of the conditions of his vow, also shed tears, but they were tears of joy and sympathy, not of sorrow.

MARIA AYLMEY.

prerogatives of a Jew. Paul found this prejudice an almost insuperable obstacle in preaching the Gospel to Israel; and so he "turned to the Gentiles." Missionary work among them has been in the main undertaken by Jewish converts, but with comparatively small success. The Gentile missionary would be received with less suspicion and distrust, and if a persistent and consecrated effort were made, with adequate support, it would probably lead to large results.

CHARLES H. HARRISON.

5. When a polygamist in a heathen land is converted, should the Christian missionary make it a condition of admitting him to the Church that he put away all his wives but one, and if so, on what Scriptural ground?

A man should look after the temporal wants of his wives and children. It certainly would not be the spirit of Christianity to turn them adrift on the world without any way of maintenance; yet undoubtedly they should be put away, no matter how hard it might seem. The Biblical authority for this you will find in Ezra 10: 3, 5, 10, 11, 12 and 19. When the Israelites returned from captivity under the Babylonians, Ezra found that the people had taken strange wives. After prayer and confession before God, the congregation being assembled, the following declaration was made by Shechaniah (Ezra 10: 3). Then Ezra commanded this to be done—verses 5, 10, 11, and the people promised—verses 12, 19.

ANNA S. HARMON.

The rule ought undoubtedly to be enforced that Christians should have only one wife, and any member of the Church taking a second wife should be disciplined. But where a polygamist is converted, I think it would be unduly harsh to insist on his putting away the wives he married before his conversion. It

RELIEF WORK BEGUN IN CHINA

The Famine Sufferers in Four Provinces Now Being Fed with the First Remittance From THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund

CHRISTIAN America's life-saving campaign in China, undertaken amid many difficulties, has at last fairly opened, and we believe all of our readers and all who have the rescue of China at heart, will experience a feeling of real joy and satisfaction in learning that, as they read these lines, the food purchased with their consecrated gifts is already on the way to the famine-stricken people of four provinces—Shansi, Shensi, Shantung and Chi-li. It is hoped that many precious lives may be saved by the work thus promptly begun.

Our Missionary Famine Relief Committee in China, immediately on receipt of the intelligence that the first $20,000 had been placed to Chairman Smith by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, through the Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, held a meeting, and voted the following ratio of apportionment:

R. S. I. J. Atwood and E. H. Edwards, for the purchase of supplies for the Shansi famine sufferers	10,000 taels (equal to)	$7,000
R. M. B. Duncan, for relief work Shensi	10,000 taels	$7,000
R. Arthur Smith, for relief work province of Shantung	5,000 taels	$3,500
R. H. H. Lowry, for relief work province of Chi-li	3,000 taels	$2,100
Total	28,000 taels	$19,600

The Governor of Shansi has sent an official escort to conduct the missionaries to Taiyuen-fu, which is the purpose of the Committee, ancient capital of the empire, and once the scene of its greatest glories, is again the centre of the worst suffering. Some of the stories that have reached Shanghai of the terrible misery and destitution prevailing there, are almost incredible. Villages and towns deserted, save by the dead; the whole country stripped bare and apparently lifeless; a pitiful scarcity of all sorts of domestic animals, these having long ago been sacrificed to huntered suffering paralyzes feeling, and, it is not surprising if, under such terrible conditions, parents should sell their children, and, in some instances at least, there should be a mad resort to cannibalism.

The following letter from the Rev. F. C. H. Dreyer, one of the last missionaries to escape from Shansi during the massacres, will be read with interest by all who have the evangelization of China and the relief of the famine sufferers at heart:

SCRANTON, PA., June 3, 1901.

My Dear Dr. Klopsch:—The liberal and prompt response of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to the appeal on behalf of the starving multitudes in Shansi, gives me more satisfaction than the missionaries who have labored in that famine-stricken province. As one of this number, allow me to express my deepest interest and warmest approval of the great work you have undertaken, and assure you of my earnest prayers for its success.

Having heard the harrowing details of the great famine in Shansi of 1877-78, from the lips of the survivors themselves, one dare not think of the terrible scenes of suffering which are again being enacted there at the present time. China calls to us for help. Shall we ignore her cry? The noblest thing Christian America can do is to extend a helping hand to this people in their dire distress. China's need is America's opportunity. Nothing could furnish a more convincing proof of the reality of our boasted friendship with China, and nothing could better exemplify to the Chinese people the spirit of the Master whom we love and serve.

It is a mistake to suppose that the famine sufferers have, as a whole, been guilty of the recent outrages against the foreigners. Many doubtless are guilty; yet thousands of the greatest sufferers are peaceful farmers, who are quite innocent of any participation in the Boxer uprising. Moreover, none are in greater distress than all the workers who will be connected with them in the relief measures, to assist only those who are in the greatest distress. They will co-operate in the various districts with the native Christians, and will specially select as helpers those that are known to be reliable. It is learned that the news of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD relief work has already spread far and wide in the famine districts, and the expectation of the starving multitudes have been raised to the highest point. These unfortunates already believe that the help now being given is divinely sent. It is of the utmost importance that the second and subsequent appropriations be made as quickly as possible. Reliable authorities on the famine declare that the worst suffering is yet to come, and if Christian America, through its gifts, can avert the threatened calamity, even in a single district, a great work will have been accomplished for religion and humanity.

Peace is gradually returning to China, but the black pall of famine and suffering still hangs over Shansi and its perishing people. As was the case in the great famine of 1877, Shansi, the seat of the the native Christians. Many of those who have survived the terrible persecution of the past year are now on the verge of starvation. These are anxiously looking to their fellow-believers in our more favored land for help. I am glad that their cry is being heard and that, through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, something is being done to alleviate the terrible suffering. Sincerely yours,

F. C. H. DREYER.

Among the Chinamen who crowd the Chinese missions in New York City and elsewhere throughout the United States, there is a very active interest in the movement for the relief of the famine sufferers.

All the missionaries and others having personal knowledge of the China field, unite in declaring that the present opportunity is the grandest that has ever been presented for the advancement of Christianity in China. As was the case in India, where multitudes lately applied for admission to the Church, so the seed sown by our missionaries and relief workers in China during these days of suffering and anguish will yet yield an abundant harvest.

Acknowledgments of contributions to the China Famine Relief work will be found on page 556.

The Veil Partly Lifted

TEXT, Job 26: 14:

Lo, these are parts of his ways; but how little a portion is heard of him! but the thunder of his power who can understand?

HE has understood being in the universe is God. Blasphemous would be any attempt, by painting or sculpture, to represent him. Egyptian hieroglyphs tried to suggest him, by putting the figure of an eye upon a sword, implying that God sees and rules, but how imperfect the suggestion. When we speak of him, it is almost always in language figurative. He is "Light" or "Day-spring from on High," or he is a "High Tower" or the "Fountain of Living Waters." His splendor is so great that no man can see him and live. When the group of great theologians assembled in Westminster Abbey for the purpose of making a system of religious belief, they first of all wanted an answer to the question, "Who is God?" No one desired to undertake the answering of that overmastering question. They finally concluded to give the task to the youngest man in the assembly, who happened to be Rev. George Gillespie. He consented to undertake it on the condition that they would first unite with him in prayer for divine direction. He began his prayer by saying: "Oh, God, thou art a spirit, infinite, eternal and unchangeable in thy being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness and truth." That first sentence of Gillespie's prayer was unanimously adopted by the assembly as the best definition of God. But after all, it was only a partial success, and after everything that language can do when put to the utmost strain, and all we can see of God in the natural world and realize of God in the providential world, we are forced to cry out with Job in my text: "Lo, these are parts of his ways; but how little a portion is heard of him! but the thunder of his power who can understand?"

Archbishop Tillotson and Dr. Dick and Timothy Dwight and Jonathan Edwards of the past, and the mightiest theologians of this young century have discoursed upon the power of God,

The Attribute of Omnipotence

And we all see demonstrations of God's almightiness. It might have been far out at sea when in an equinoctial gale God showed what he could do with the waters. It might have been in an August thunder-storm in the mountains when God showed what he could do with the lightnings. It might have been in South America when God showed what he could do with the earthquakes. It might have been among the Alps when God showed what he could do with the avalanches. Our cheek was blanched, our breath stopped, our pulses fluttered, our whole being was terrorized, but we had seen only an instance of Divine strength. What was the power of that storm compared with the power which holds all the oceans? What was the power that shook the hills compared with the power that swings the earth through all the centuries, and for six thousand years, and in a formative and incomplete shape for hundreds of thousands of years? What is that power that sustains our world compared with the power which rolls through immensity the entire solar system, and all the constellations and galaxies, and the universe. The mightiest intellect of man would give way if for a moment there came upon it the full appreciation of what omnipotence is. What you and I see and hear of Divine strength are only "parts of his ways; but how little a portion is heard of him! but the thunder of his power who can understand?"

We try to satisfy ourselves with saying, "It is natural law that controls things, gravitation is at work, centripetal and centrifugal forces respond to each other." But what is natural law? It is only God's way of doing things. At every point in the universe it is God's direct and continuous power that controls and harmonizes and sustains. That power withdrawn one instant would make the planetary system and all the worlds which astronomy reveals one universal wreck, bereft hemispheres, dismantled sunsets, dead constellations, debris of worlds. What power it must be that keeps the internal fires of our world imprisoned—only here and there spurting from a Cotopaxi, or a Stromboli, or from a Vesuvius putting Pompeii and Herculaneum into sepulchre; but for the most part the internal fires chained in their cages of rock, and century after century unable to break the chain or burst open the door. What power to keep the component parts of the air in right proportion, so that all around the world the nations may breathe in health, the frosts and the heats hindered from working universal demolition. Power, as Isaiah says, "to take up the isles as a very little thing," Ceylon, and Borneo, and Hawaii, as though they were pebbles; power to weigh the "mountains in scales" and the "hills in balances"—Teneriffe and the Cordilleras. To move a rock we must have lever and screw and great machinery, but God moves the world with nothing but a word; power to create worlds and power to destroy them, as from the observatories again and again they have been seen red with flame, then pale with ashes, and then scattered.

What is that power to us, asks some one? It is everything to us. With him on our side, the reconciled God, the sympathetic God, the omnipotent God, we may defy all human and satanic antagonisms. And when we are shut in by obstacles we can say as did one of Frobenius's men, when the sailor was describing how their ship was surrounded by icebergs in the Arctic Sea, "The ice was strong, but God was stronger than the ice," and whatever opposition we may have, our God is mightier than the opposition. All right with God, we may have the courage of the General dying on the battle-field. He asked to be turned, and when they said, "Which way shall we turn you?" he said, "Turn my face toward the enemy." What a challenge that was uttered by the old missionary hero, "If God be for us who can be against us?" Think of it! God is the only being in the universe who has

Power to Do as He Pleases

All human and angelic forces have environments. There are things they cannot do; heights they cannot scale; depths they cannot fathom. Whatever their might and velocities they are servants of omnipotence which has no limitation, no hinderment, and no insurmountable obstacle. Martin Luther asked a Saxon peasant to recite the creed, and the peasant began, "I believe in God, the Father, Almighty." "Stop," said Luther, "what is Almighty?" "I do not know," replied the peasant. Then Luther said, "You are right, my dear fellow. Neither I nor all the learned men can tell what is Omnipotence." Human power, however great, tires, and must rest, but Omnipotence never wearies and a quadrillion of years from now will be as fresh as at this moment.

We get some little idea of the Divine power when we see how it buries the proudest cities and nations. Ancient Memphis it has ground up, until many of its ruins are no larger than your thumb-nail and you can hardly find a souvenir large enough to remind you of your visit. The city of Tyre is under the sea which washes the shore, on which are only a few crumbling pillars left. Sodom and Gomorrah are covered by waters so deathful that not a fish can live in them. Babylon and Nineveh are so blotted out of existence that not one uninjured shaft of their ancient splendor remains. Nothing but Omnipotence could have put them down, and put them under. The antediluvian world was able to send to the postdiluvian world only one ship with a very small passenger list. Omnipotence first rolled the seas over the land, and then told them to go back to their usual channels, as rivers and lakes and oceans. At Omnipotent command the waters pouncing upon their prey, and at Omnipotent command slinking back into their appropriate places. By such rehearsal we try to arouse our appreciation of what Omnipotence is, and our reverence is excited, and our adoration is intensified, but after all we find ourselves at the foot of a mountain we cannot climb, hovering over a depth we cannot fathom, at the rim of a circumference we cannot compass, and we feel like first going down on our knees, and then like falling flat upon our faces, as we exclaim, "Lo, these are parts of his ways; but how little a portion is heard of him! but the thunder of his power who can understand?"

The Wisdom of God

So all those who have put together systems of theology, have discoursed also about the wisdom of God. Think of a wisdom which can know the end from the beginning, that knows the thirtieth century as well as the first century. We can guess what will happen; but it is only a guess. Think of a mind that can hold all the past and all the present and all the future. We can contrive and invent on a small scale; but think of a wisdom that could contrive a universe! Think of a wisdom that can learn nothing new, a wisdom that nothing can surprise, all the facts, scenes and occurrences of all time to come as plainly before it as though they had already transpired. He could have built all the material universe into one world, and swung it a glorious mass through immensity; but behold his wisdom in dividing up the grandeurs into innumerable worlds, rolling splendors on all sides, diversity, amplitude, majesty, infinity. Worlds! Worlds! Moving in complete order, shining with complete radiance. Mightiest telescope on one hand, and most powerful microscope on the other, discovering in the plan of God not one imperfection. What but Divine wisdom could have planned a human race, and, before it started, built for it a world like this; pouring waters to slake human thirst, and giving soils capacity to produce such food, and lifting such a canopy of clouds, embroidered with such sunlight, and surrounding the world with such wonders that the scientists of the ages have only begun to understand them. Wisdom in magnitude and in atom, in archaic and in mollusc. Think of a wisdom that was able to form, without any suggestion or any model to work the eye, the ear, the hand, the foot, the vocal organs. Wonder that Galen, the most celebrated of medical authors among the ancients, fell on his knees at overwhelming wisdom of God in the constitution of human frame. Our libraries are filled with the wisdom of the great thinkers of all time. Have you considered the far superior wisdom which fashioned the brain of all those thoughts, of the Infinite Mind that built the intellects? But it is only the millionth part of that wisdom that has come to mortal appreciation. Close to every discovery is a wonder that has not been discovered. We see only one specimen among ten thousand specimens. What we know is overwhelmed by what we do not know. What the botanist knows about the flower is not more wonderful than the things he does not know about the flower. What the geologist knows about the rocks is not more amazing than the things which he does not know about them. The worlds that have been counted are only a small regiment of the armies of light, the hosts of heaven, which have never passed in review before mortal vision. What a God we have!

An Abrahamic Tradition

A tradition says that Abraham of the Old Testament was, when an infant, hidden in a cave because of persecutions of Nimrod. The first time the child came out of the cavern it was night, and he looked up at a star, and cried, "This is my God;" but the star disappeared, and Abraham said, "No, that cannot be my God." After awhile, the moon rose, and Abraham said, "That is my God," but it set, and Abraham was again disappointed. After awhile the sun rose, and he said, "Why, truly, here is my God," but the sun went down, and Abraham was saddened. Not until the God of the Bible appeared to Abraham was he satisfied, and his faith was so great that he was called "The Father of the Faithful." All that the theologians know of God's wisdom is insignificant compared with the wisdom beyond human comprehension. The human race never has had, and never will have enough brain or heart to measure the wisdom of God. I can think of only two authors who have expressed the exact facts, the truth was Paul, who says, "Oh the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God, how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out." The other author was the scientist who composed this text. I think he wrote it during a thunder-storm, for the chapter says much about the clouds, and describes the tremor of the earth under the reverberations, and, standing among those mysteries, Job exclaimed, "Lo, these are parts of his ways; but how little a portion is heard of him! but the thunder of his power who can understand?"

So, also, all systems of theology try to tell us what omnipresence, that is God's capacity to be everywhere at the same time. "Where is God?" said a heathen philosopher to a Christian man. The Christian answered, "Let me first ask you where he is not?" The child had it right when, asked how many Gods there were, and he answered, "One." "How do you know that?" he was asked again. He answered, "There is only room for one, for he fills earth and heaven." An author says that if a man were set in the highest heavens he would not be any nearer the essence of God than if he were in the centre of the earth. I believe it. If this Divine essence does not reach all places, what use in our prayer, for prayers are being offered to God on the other side of the earth as well as here, and God must be there and here to take supplications which are offered thousands of miles apart.

Ubiquity

No one has it but God. And what an alarm to wickedness, an everywhere-present Lord, and what a reinforcement when we need help. God on the throne, and God with the kneeling child, saying its evening prayer at its mother's lap. God above you, God beneath you, God on the right of you, God on the left of you. God with you. No pantheism, for that teaches that all things are God, but Jehovah possesses all things, as our souls possess our bodies. God at the diameter and circumference of everything, as close to you as the food you put to your lips, as the coat you put upon your back, as the sunlight that shines in your face. Appreciation of that, if through Jesus Christ, the atoning Saviour, we are right with God, ought to give us a serenity, a tranquillity that nothing could upset. Would it make us

Questions of the Week

1. What single occurrence during the present century has had the greatest influence on the welfare of the human race?

The application of steam has had the greatest influence on the welfare of the human race. Steam power was the forerunner of an infinity of inventions that could not have been made practicable without its aid. Its application made possible the transference of great masses of the raw material of the earth's production, from places where they possessed no value, to others where they became valuable, thus increasing the actual wealth of the world to a wonderful extent. By affording rapid transit for the population of the world, it has broken down the division walls of nationality and caste, and caused mankind to realize for the first time in its history, that "of one blood God has created all the nations of the earth." It has revolutionized human labor and completely changed the condition of vast majority of the human race, which in past ages was bowed beneath the servitude of arduous manual labor, with little opportunities for recreation and intellectual enjoyment.

L. T. RIGHTSSELL.

There are many occurrences in the remarkable events of the present century that have greatly influenced the welfare of the human race. But as a single occurrence, of the most monumental character, the Emancipation Proclamation, issued by Abraham Lincoln on the 22d of September, 1862, and which became effective on the 1st of January, 1863, giving freedom to about four million slaves within the United States and its territories, in its beneficent effects in hastening the end of the war, as well as, also, in its reflex influence on humanity, certainly towers above every other event of the Nineteenth Century.

F. J. STRAYER.

- How should we dispose of the old minister, when he is worn out in the service of the Church and unable, physically or intellectually, to keep up with the times.

He should not be turned out, as sometimes occurs, like an "old horse on the commons to die." Above all men, as Christ's ambassador, the minister is entitled to the treatment which should be accorded to the Master whom he personally is serving here. (Matt. 23:44-45). The Church, however, recognizes her duty to care for the class designated, and accordingly have "Sustentation Funds," "Ministers' Widows' Funds," "Ministers' Homes," but the provision is meagre and inadequate. Would it not be an excellent method for individual churches to supply a certain sum annually (it need not be large) in addition to salary, to be applied by the incumbent pastor to the purchase of an annuity payable at a designated age, or to his family in the event of death? Practically, this might not operate; but it would seem not to be impossible for several Churches thus to organize. An annuity so obtained would be earned, and not a charity. A better way, perhaps, would be for the Churches to make more efficient existing organizations, and contribute to them so liberally that no deserving minister need want. He should not be supported in a "Home," and bound by restrictions, and thus deprived of that independence which training and habit have made part of his life. Within reasonable limits, he should have the largest liberty of choice and action, and be regarded, not as a charge but as receiving only his due.

CHARLES H. HARRISON.

If, beginning with the new century, every denomination had its own "Old Age Pastoral Pension Fund," maintained by regular premiums and enjoying one collection per annum from each church in the particular denomination interested, the good men who consecrate their lives to the "shepherding of the flock," could look forward to old age without a shudder. No denomination has a right to take a man's best work and his best years and then unceremoniously drop him without a thought of providing for his future. Some denominations have ministerial sustentation funds already; others, to their everlasting shame be it said, have none, and while the strong, aggressive and ambitious grasp the prizes of worldly emolument, the aged saints, whose hands should be reverently and lovingly upheld, are driven to the wall by want and neglect. At the very time when their spiritual vision is clearest and purest, and when they are many degrees nearer heaven than ourselves, we reject their counsel, despise their wisdom, characterize their holiness and sweetness as imbecility, and toss them aside, to make way perhaps, for others who have not a hundredth part of their wisdom and spirituality. "Old men for counsel," says the proverb; but if our modern way had been applied in the early ages of the Christian Church, many of the venerable "fathers," whose wisdom and sanctity have adorned our Christian faith, would have been relegated to the limbo of worn-out ministers.

J. D. LORIMER.

The most alarming thought to the active minister of the Gospel is that of the "dead line." Why? It means, too often, putting him on the shelf to "rust out" in obscurity and poverty. He is left, not infrequently, to eke out an unhappy existence. This ought not so to be. What can be done? I have a plan which can only be suggested here. 1. Build him a home. Let it be his as long as he lives. To turn this man of God out homeless, after years of toil in the service of the Church, is a shame to our Christian civilization. He has not been allowed while young, and strong, more than enough to support and educate his family. His work debars him from money-making. Those who have wealth could, and ought to build homes for our worn-out ministers. Here is a chance for every lover of Christ's cause to lay up "treasure in heaven." 2. Let the congregations served by our old minister not forget him. Send him bright, cheery literature. Have THE CHRISTIAN HERALD sent to him. Hand him a new book now and then. Visit him. Have him visit you. Invite him to preach occasionally. Always give him the best pew at church. Pray for him. On his birthday give him a liberal "pounding." This will make his heart glad. Do this, and there will be no dread of a "dead line." By Christian thoughtfulness and love it will for ever be obliterated.

REV. CHAS. LYNCH.

3. What is the surest way of discerning God's will and distinguishing between it and our own strong wills?

1. Take the two wills, God's and yours, to the Bible. Place them under the light of that lamp of truth. If the light, falling upon one will, is reflected in unspotted glory, that is God's will. If the light, falling upon the other will, shows in it spots or flaws, that is your will. 2. Take them to prayer. If one will harmonizes with the spirit of prayer, that is God's will. If there is discord, even one note, between the other will and the spirit of prayer, that is self-will. 3. Take them before conscience. If one will accords with conscience, it will give you inward peace; that is God's will. If the other will conflicts with conscience, it will give you inward trouble; that is your will.

R. T. EDWARDS.

The surest way of discerning God's will is to fill ourselves with his Word. Prayerful study of the Scriptures is a means of educating the conscience, and without it conscience is not a safe guide.

God's word's a mine of priceless worth,
Where every Christlike one may find
More precious gems than from the earth,
By delving toilers e'er were mined;
Exhaustless treasures for the soul
That glad the eye of faith, nor tire;
That make the sin-sick nature whole,
And satisfy its each desire.

It makes us say, "Thy will, not mine,
Be done." From it pure godly men
In Bible days drew aid divine,
And it is helpful now as then.
In it we hear the Father speak,
His mysteries are no longer sealed;
In prayerful mood we come and seek,
And in it find his will revealed.

4. Is it possible to accumulate a great fortune in business, and yet conscientiously follow Christ's teachings through one's business career?

Yes. Christ promised that to him who has, shall be given, having reference to the steward who faithfully invests and uses his master's money. If a Christian is prosperous in business, and never loses sight of the fact that he is simply a steward of God's means, and faithfully practices the precepts of mercy enjoined in the Scriptures, there is every reason to believe that God will entrust more and more of the wealth of this world into his hands. The Apostle Paul enjoined diligence in business, showing that under the Christian dispensation, men are expected to strive for success of a worldly, as well as of a spiritual character, and there seems to be no reason why that success should be limited to a small accumulation of worldly effects. If the love of money is absent, and the desire to serve the Lord present, there can be no sin, but real merit in the accumulation of a fortune.

L. T. RIGHTSSELL.

5. Is it wise for husbands and wives to criticize each other's faults, or should they keep loving and charitable silence regarding them?

We should, as Christians, try to elevate every human soul. Our first duty, then, should be in our homes, among those who are nearest and dearest. It is a mistake to say that love is blind; she is blind only in one eye. A wife may see and tell her husband some glaring defect in his character that no one else would dare to mention to him; but she must approach him privately, not in the presence of others, and in a loving, not nagging spirit. If he loves her, he will try to correct it. Silence in regard to the faults of husband and wife is often mistaken kindness, and springs either from indifference, love of peace, or fear. "Perfect love casteth out fear," but leaves an earnest desire for the highest good of the loved one.

J. S. KRAUTH.

Criticism, as the word is generally understood, rarely, if ever, improves any one's faults. If, however, we are to understand the word to mean a pointing out of one's faults from the motive to help overcome them, the wisdom of such a course would depend upon at least two considerations, viz: 1. The disposition of the person committing the fault and the manner of criticism. 2. The nature or character of the fault. It would be wise to make a tactful and friendly criticism of any fault if the individual was such a one as would be likely to profit by it. But if the disposition was such that the person would be likely to be offended and the fault rather persisted in, it would be wise to "keep loving and charitable silence" and try some other means rather than criticism. If the fault was of minor importance, such as might arise from different training, tastes, or opportunities, it would be wise, perhaps, to keep silence. However, if the fault was an open and flagrant one it would not only be wise, but a duty, to criticize it in a Christian spirit, whatever the disposition of the offending one.

Thanks, Chatterbox, Wash. The parents are the natural and legal guardians of their own child and can only be superseded by evidence being submitted to the satisfaction of a proper court, showing that they are incapable or improper persons. In such case the court appoints a guardian upon application being made in due form by parties entitled to do so.

Miscellaneous Questions

Several correspondents have asked us to publish a prayer suitable for a little child, who, though too young to frame its own petition, is already beginning to understand the meaning of love and obedience. There are many such prayers, both in prose and rhyme, some of them very beautiful and touching, and almost all of them easily within the childish comprehension; but as these are probably already known, we would submit this brief petition, as one that could readily be adapted to the use of little children who are old enough to commit the words to memory:

"Dear Jesus, as Thou didst take little children in Thy arms and bless them, so bless Thou me. Forgive all my sins and help me to do Thy will. Grant that I may be truthful, kind and obedient, and, above all, love Thee. Bless my parents and my friends, and help the sick, the poor and those in trouble. May I grow daily more like Thee and at last live with Thee in heaven. Amen."

A CHILD'S PETITION.

THE food provided by thy love

Again our table covers;
From thee in whom we live and move
O'er us a blessing hovers.

We thank thee, Lord, for every gift
From thy good hand descending;
To thee, on high, our praise we lift
For mercies never-ending.

Give us, O Lord, a grateful heart
For love so kind and tender;
May souls and bodies do their part
Our need of thanks to render.

H. G., Plainfield, N. J. How did the United States rank with other nations in excellence of exhibits at the Paris Exposition?

As adjudged by the two highest awards, the "Grand Prizes," of which we received two hundred, and gold medals, six hundred and forty-two, we follow France in education. In fine arts, Italy, Germany and Great Britain took precedence of us. In liberal arts only France and Germany outranked us. In electricity, machinery, civil engineering, transportation, furniture, decoration, only France and Germany were our superiors. In agriculture Roumania and Russia, carrying away over one hundred prizes, led the United States. In chemical industries, Germany and Russia excelled us. In social economy we come next to France. In the army and navy we followed France, Germany and Russia leading Great Britain and other countries.

E. P., Colorado Springs, Colo. 1. How many Americans and how many Filipinos have been killed or captured during the past twelve months? 2. Is the pacification of the islands in sight?

1. According to Gen. MacArthur's report 268 Americans were killed, 750 wounded and 53 captured between Nov. 1899 and Sept. 1900. During the same time 3,227 Filipinos were killed, 604 wounded, 2,864 captured. 2. Gen. MacArthur says education of natives tends to secure this end, but he intimates that time, patience and an adequate force will be required. The absence of any dynasty, any organized system of feudal laws or of ideas opposed to republicanism, likewise contribute to the introduction of American institutions among a people who "are gradually coming to understand that these mean liberty and security," and who "left to themselves would gladly accept American supremacy."

Why? No, for God is the God of joy, and will augment our happiness. God in full possession of us is a light out of which you ought to make anthems, and vine garlands, and kindle illuminations. We have all been painfully reminded in our own experiences that we cannot be in two places at the same time, and yet here comes the thought that God can be in all places at the same time. Madler, the astronomer, sat on with his explorations of the heavens until he concluded that the star Alcyone, of the Pleiades, was

The Centre of the Universe

All the other worlds revolved around that world; some think that that world is Heaven and God's home is there, and there reside the nations of the blest. He is no more there than he is here. Indeed Alcyone has been found to be in motion, and it also is revolving around some great centre. But no place has been found where God is not present by sustaining power. Omnipresence! Who fully appreciates it? Not I. You. Sometimes we hear him in a whisper. Sometimes we hear him in the voice of the storm that jars the Adirondacks. But we cannot swim across this infinite. The finite cannot measure the infinite. We as Job did after finding God in the gold mines and silver mines of Asia, saying, "There is a vein for the earth and a place for the gold where they fine it." And exploring the heavens as an astronomer, and finding God in distant worlds, and becoming acquainted with Orion, and Mazzaroth and Arcturus, and noticing the tides of the sea, the inspired poet expresses his inability to understand such evidences of wisdom and power, and says, "Lo, these are parts of his ways; but a little portion is heard of him? but the thunder of power who can understand?"

Every system of theology has attempted to define and define the divine attribute of Love. Easy enough is it to define fatherly love, motherly love, conjugal love, fraternal love, sisterly love and love of country, but the love of God defies all vocabulary. For hundreds of years poets have tried to sing it, and artists have tried to sketch it, and ministers of the Gospel to preach it, and martyrs in the fire, and Christians on their death beds have extolled it, and we can say what it is like, but no one has yet fully told what it is. Men speak of the love of God as though it were felt between the pointing of the Bethlehem Star and the pounding of the crucifixion hammer. But no!

Long before that existed the love of God. The nature of God never changes, and from all eternity that holy passion glowed in the Infinite, and I think he was throwing out worlds into space, and inhabiting them, and more worlds, for the application of that love. But in the space of six feet by five was comprised the mightiest evidence of God's love that any world ever saw or ever will see. Compressed on two planks joined together as a cross. There was enough agony there concentrated, if distributed, to put whole nations into torture. That God allowed the assassination of his own Son, for the rescue of our world, is all the evidence needed that he loved the world. Go ahead, oh Church of God! Go ahead, oh world! and tell as well as you can what the love of God is, but know beforehand that Paul was right when he said, "It passeth knowledge." Let other poets take up the story of God's love where William Cowper and Isaac Watts and Charles Wesley and Horatius Bonar left it, and let other painters improve upon the "Sistine Madonna," and the "Adoration of the Magi," and the "Crucifixion," as Raphael and Titian and Claude and Correggio presented them. Let the German pulpit orator take up the theme of God's love where Frederick Tholuck left it; let Italian pulpit take it up where Gavazzi left it; let French pulpit orator take up the theme where Bourdeloue left it; let the Swiss pulpit orator take up the theme where Merle D'Aubigne left it; let the English pulpit take it up where George Whitefield left it; let the Scotch pulpit take it up where Dr. Candlish left it; let the Welsh pulpit take it up where Christmas Evans left it, and let American pulpit take it up where Archibald Alexander and Dr. Kirk and Matthew Simpson left it. But the world will never appreciate fully the love of God until they hear from his own lips the outburst of his infinite and everlasting affection.

The Beatific Vision

Only glimpses of God have we in this world, but what an hour it will be when we first see him, and we will have no more fright than I feel when I now see you. It will not be with mortal eye that we will behold him, but with the vision of a cleansed, forgiven, and perfected spirit. Of all the quintillion ages of eternity to us the most thrilling hour will be the first hour when we meet him as he is. This may account for something you have all seen and may not have understood. Have you not noticed how that after death the old Christian looks young again, or the features resume the look of twenty or thirty years before? The weariness is gone out of the face; there is something strikingly restful and placid; there is a pleased look where before there was a disturbed look. What has wrought the change? I think the dying Christian saw God. I think that gave that old Christian face after death the radiant and triumphant look. The bestormented spirit has reached the harbor; the hard battle of life is ended in victory. The body took that look the moment heaven began, and the curtain was completely lifted, and the glories of Jehovah's presence rushed upon the soul. The departing spirit left on the old man's face a glad good-by, and that first look gave the pleased curve to the dying lip, and smoothed out the wrinkles, and touched all the lineaments with an indescribable radiance. As no one else explains that improved and gladdened post-mortem look, I try to explain it saying, "He saw God!" "He saw God!"

The Midnight Sun

Last summer we journeyed thousands of miles to see the Midnight Sun from North Cape, Norway. We stood on deck in the Arctic seas, our watches in our hands and it was eleven o'clock at night, but light as an ordinary noonday. Then it was half past eleven o'clock at night, then it was fifteen minutes of twelve, but a long wide thick cloud hung over the sun. Are we to be disappointed, as thousands have been, and the journey here a failure? Ten minutes of twelve and the sun is still hidden. But about five minutes of twelve the cloud lifted and the Midnight Sun, the most wondrous spectacle of all the earth appeared, pouring forth a refulgence that turned the Arctic Sea into twenty miles of pearls, and rubies, and diamonds, and emeralds, and overpowering us with a glory that left us with body all a-tremble, and a mind full of all ecstasy, and a soul full of all worship. Thank God we saw it—the Midnight Sun. So with that departing Christian soul; the voyage of life has been long and rough and tempestuous; chilling sorrows have again and again snowed down upon him, and it is an Arctic sea. Many clouds have filled the sky. It is approaching twelve o'clock, and the close of life's day. Friends stand around and count the parting moments. The clock strikes twelve, and God breaks through the clouds and shines upon the features of the departing saint until they are transfigured with the glories of the Sun of Righteousness. That is what has so changed the features of the old man. It is the shining of the Midnight Sun.

— TWENTY-THREE YEARS' WORK OF THE PACIFIC GARDEN MISSION—OLDEST GOSPEL WORK IN CHICAGO'S CENTRE OF VICE —

THE GOSPEL WAGON OF THE PACIFIC GARDEN MISSION

COL. GEORGE R. CLARKE

A MISSION "PRAISE SERVICE"

AFTER nearly a quarter of a century of Gospel effort among the neglected masses of Chicago, the Pacific Garden Mission, with its faithful band of workers, is still active in the Lord's service. Probably no rescue work in the West has such a record of soul-winning as this pioneer mission, which stands as a living and notable example of a blessing that follows devoted and self-sacrificing labor for the Master.

The late Col. George R. Clarke, the founder of the Mission, was formerly one of Chicago's most active real estate men, participating in every enterprise to advance the interests of that city. He took a prominent part in introducing the magnificent system of parks extending round its suburbs. He accumulated a moderate fortune, but sustained heavy losses by the great Chicago fire in 1871. Undaunted by misfortune, he rallied, and again occupied a leading place in business. It was his ambition at one time to endow some great institution, or to build a church. This was his ideal of Christian philanthropy. But when Christ came into his life, he became persuaded to engage in the humble yet exalted work of seeking after the spiritual welfare of the neglected masses in the great western city.

After the Chicago fire, nearly all the churches were rebuilt at a distance from the centre of the city, leaving a free field to the saloons, gambling dens and vicious resorts. In 1877 Colonel and Mrs. Clarke established the first rescue work in Chicago, and from this other missions have sprung broadcast, and an influence has radiated throughout many States. For over twenty-three years, or for ten thousand consecutive nights, the Gospel has been sounding forth from the platform of the Pacific Garden Mission. The Mission has proved a Bethel to a great multitude of souls, who have found there peace in believing.

This work of the Pacific Garden Mission began in a very unpretentious room, surrounded by saloons, yet the Divine favor was manifested at the first meeting by the conversion of four souls. No service has ever been held in the Mission without some request for prayer being presented. Its seating capacity soon became inadequate. Larger quarters were secured by buying out one of the most notorious beer garden halls, at No. 100 Van Buren street. At Mr. D. L. Moody's suggestion, the name of the place was retained, and it has ever since been called the Pacific Garden Mission.

No pen will ever be able to fitly describe the wonderful spiritual transformations that have taken place here in all these years of earnest labor for souls. Over two hundred thousand hear the Gospel annually. What with the Gospel wagon, jail work and personal visitation, the seed sowing is such as to call for an abundant harvest. The Gospel wagon is the means of reaching thousands who would never come under the influence of the Gospel otherwise, but when brought face to face with redeemed lives they cannot gainsay its transforming power. All the work of the Mission is in the very centre of vice, in an area of many blocks given over to all the corruption that satanic skill can devise.

Since Colonel Clarke's death, in 1892, Mr. Harry Monroe, a young convert with marked adaptability for the work, has had charge of the meetings, while Mrs. Clarke retains the managerial responsibility, which she has now held for twenty-three years. Colonel Clarke expended a fortune on the Mission during his lifetime, and his widow's entire income is still devoted to the same object.

Mr. Wm. C. Trotter, the organist and assistant, is a valuable aid, and with other co-laborers and assistance from the Moody Bible Institute, the Mission is well-equipped for active service. Thousands who kneel at the altar are living witnesses of the sanctifying grace that is transforming sinful lives.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR'S 20TH BIRTHDAY CONVENTION

BY JOHN WILLIS BAER, Secretary of the World's Christian Endeavor Union

FOR five years the Christian Endeavorers of Cincinnati have urged their claims for an International Convention. In their invitation they have had the cordial support of the business men and citizens generally. Their persistence has been rewarded, and Cincinnati is to be the Mecca of Christian Endeavor in the first year of the new century.

Right royally are the Cincinnati Endeavorers and the executive officers of the United Society of Christian Endeavor planning for this, the Twentieth International Convention. Special excursions are planned from every State and from Canada, and the low railroad rate of one fare for the round trip granted by the various passenger associations, gives every indication that at least twenty-five thousand will be in attendance. Tickets will be placed on sale July 5th, 6th and 7th; also on July 8th, at points within one hundred and fifty miles of Cincinnati. Tickets are good returning until July 14th, and by depositing with the joint agent before noon July 11th, they may be extended to August 31st. The extended time limit is unusually liberal, and will afford ample opportunity for taking side trips to Mammoth Cave, High Bridge, Dayton Soldiers' Home, the Pan-American Exposition, and many other excursions that are being arranged.

Many Christian Endeavorers in the South and West will find that the low rates to the Cincinnati Convention, when added to the special side trip rate from Cincinnati to the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo, will enable them to attend both at less cost than if they went directly to Buffalo.

All excursion managers are expected to get their trains into Cincinnati by Saturday morning. On Sunday the Cincinnati Endeavorers have been requested by the national officers not to be at the stations to meet delegates, and for the same reason no one will be at the State headquarters. All are to be at Cincinnati upon Saturday, ready to enter with reverence upon the due observance of the Lord's Day.

Music Hall, where the Convention is to be held, is an ideal place for such a gathering. With the Exposition buildings adjoining it on each side, the Odeon near by, three or four very large churches, and Washington Park directly opposite, ample space is afforded for crowds of any size.

The Convention starts out on Saturday evening with the welcome meetings. The Hon. George K. Nash, Governor of Ohio, will speak twice on this evening. Chairman Meacham and Vice-Chairman Dawson, of Cincinnati's local committee of arrangements, who are working so hard and so zealously in our interests, will also give words of welcome. Responses will be made by Rev. Alfred Gandier, Toronto; Rev. W. J. Darby, D.D., Evansville; Rev. A. Miyake, of Japan, and Rev. T. C. Cleveland, of Atlanta, Ga. At these opening sessions, too, President Francis E. Clark will give his annual address, and I my annual report. These will be repeated in two auditoriums.

On Sunday morning the general theme for the morning services in all the churches will be "Twenty Years of Christian Endeavor." A glorious retrospect that will be! The pulpits, morning and evening, will be occupied by visiting delegates, and the list includes the names of many men famous in all branches of the Church of Christ.

On Sunday afternoon there are to be held three simultaneous evangelistic meetings. The meeting for men is to be conducted by Dr. Chapman and William Phillips Hall; that for women by Mrs. J. W. Baer, and that for children by Rev. Clarence E. Eberman, the new Field Secretary of the United Society of Christian Endeavor.

On Sunday afternoon, after the evangelistic meetings, two notable meetings are to be held in the interests of two most important reforms. At the temperance meeting the speakers will be Oliver W. Stewart, of Chicago; Col. George W. Bain, of Kentucky, and Rev. Anna Howard Shaw, D.D., all of them splendid temperance orators. At the Sabbath-observance meeting the speakers are Dr. F. D. Power, of Washington; Dr. David J. Burrell, of New York, and Gen. O. O. Howard.

At the same time an inspiring missionary rally is arranged. The Hon. S. B. Capen, President of the American Board, will preside, and the speakers will be Rev. J. P. Jones, D.D., of India; Rev. W. S. Ament, D.D., of China; Rev. Willis R. Hotchkiss, of Africa, and Courtenay H. Fenn, of China.

Upon Sunday, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday mornings there will be held three simultaneous Quiet Hour services. Heretofore at the Conventions but one has been planned. The programme committee feel that a long advance step has been taken in arranging to begin each day with three Quiet Hour services under the leadership of Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D., Rev. Cornelius Woelfkin, D.D., and Rev. Floyd W. Tompkins, D.D. Another feature for deepening the religious life each day of the Convention are special conferences upon the Bible, Bible teaching, and upon the Holy Spirit. Such leaders have been secured as Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, Rev. J. F. Carson, D.D., and Rev. R. A. Torrey, D.D.; these men will be heard regularly each day. Many other conferences are to be held, but lack of space prevents my mentioning them now.

The day afternoon will be given up to the denominational rallies which have each year become of increasing importance at Christian Endeavor conventions. The rallies and receptions are the order for Tuesday evening. These meetings are in charge of the State officers.

The closing day of the Convention, Wednesday, will be memorable. Christian Endeavor is twenty years old, and it is planned to mark the twentieth birthday with a celebration that shall be worthy of the cause and the cause. A Cry for Bread

THE two great nations yet to be civilized and Christianized are India and China. Slowly the work of evangelization went on in India until the massacre of missionaries at Lucknow and Cawnpore and other cities of India took place. Then it was thought by many that that bloody chapter would close forever the missionary work in India. So far from that prophecy coming true, the best Gospel work has been done there since those horrible transactions. I could hardly find a neighborhood in India that has not felt directly or indirectly the Gospel influences. The work in China has gone on with many good results, but greater achievements of evangelization will follow the recent uprising against foreigners in China than any successes which preceded the outrage. So God makes the wrath of man to praise him.

The widest door of opportunity has now opened. If the Christian nations will now rush into China for the relief of the present famine raging there, all that nation, from the government to its lowliest population, will practically say: "Here come those foreigners with rice and flour, and medicines, and practical help! A religion which sets itself to such generousities must be a good religion. Let us study it, and imitate it, and approve it. Their Christ is greater than our Confucius. We knew not what we were doing when we slew those Americans. Now let Americans come to us, and the more the better. If they can do as much for our souls as they have done for our bodies, we will be their debtors for all the future." Such an utterance is not far distant if in this crisis of the Chinese nation we, by returning good for evil, demonstrate that Christianity is better than barbarism. The twenty thousand dollars sent to China by the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a few days ago will do more good just now than twenty thousand Bibles, for the Bibles will follow the magnificent charity. The temporal good will clear the way for the spiritual good. The wholesale lying concerning our foreign missionaries, who have more religion in one joint of their little finger than their defamers have in their whole bodies, will be rebuked, now that these missionaries are trusted by good people to distribute these relief funds.

This world is to be taken for God and righteousness. That we must believe, if we believe anything. But the undertaking is so vast, we can see only a small section of it. The Divine mind alone can hold all the particulars of the scheme. We are ever and anon surprised at the unrolling of something we could not have anticipated. God's plans are beyond our comprehension. How often in American, in English, in German, Russian history has something occurred which seemed only destructive, but was found out afterward salvatory. Out of the worst crime that was ever committed, the murder of the Christ, came the redemption of a world. Following the ghastly assault upon foreigners in China may come the moral and religious liberation of her four or five hundred millions. But let no time be wasted. Hear a nation's cry for bread. What we did for Cuba, and Russia, and Armenia, and India, let us do for China, and the blessing will come on our harvest-fields, our homes, our churches, and upon the eighty million people who live between these two oceans.

You shall live without ten good things from you—J. 1: 3, 23

All Enlisted

LET us fight against dullness, whether in the pew or in the pulpit, whether in the Sunday School or in the prayer-meeting, and for that reason let us marshal all our faculties. If we have logical faculty, harness that. If imagination, harness that. If humor, harness that. If physical exuberance, harness that. There is not anything that is available, in a parlor or on a lecturing platform, in the art of persuading people to right feeling and right action that is not appropriate for the pulpit. If a man say a thing in church merely to make people smile, he is reprehensible; but if he say a thing so strikingly true that people do smile, that is another thing. I do not care whether they cry or smile, or hiss or applaud, or get up and go out, or what they do, if they only quit sin and with fleet foot start for heaven. For this purpose we must ransack the mineral, the botanical, the agricultural, the aesthetic, the scientific, the poetic, the literary, the historical, the astronomical worlds for illustration. If we cannot get anything better than two flints, we must smite them together and strike fire. In vain the gold-chasing on the hilt of the sword, if the edge of it is not sharp enough to cut. In vain the one-hundred-dollar rod and reel from Conroy's, with fly of gold pheasant or gray drake, if we cannot catch anything. In vain the expense of the collegiate and theological education of seven or ten years, if we get hopelessly buried in our own armor.

During the Civil War I was chaplain for a few weeks in a Pennsylvania regiment, and I was told one day that there was a cavalryman sick and wounded, and perhaps dying in a barn four or five miles away. I walked over to see if I could be of any service to him. He asked me to take his horse, which was suffering from lack of attention, and to transport his entire equipment up to headquarters at Hagerstown. I consented, but knew not what I was undertaking, for I had on and around me on the horse a heavy sword, a carbine, pistol, will be found to have done more for the race than so of us who have all the titles of the schools, and who wrap around us the robes of sacred office, which are enough to keep us from freezing to death in an ecclesiasticism ten degrees below zero!

The righteous Lord loveth righteousness; his countenance doth behold the upright. Ps. 11: 7.

"Taking the Oath"

CONSIDERABLE attention has been given of late to two important events that have occurred in connection with the administering an oath of office. The oaths taken by Edward VII., King of England, and William McKinley, President of the United States, were attended by grave and sacred services. In the one case, solemnly swearing to be "the 'Defender of the Faith' and of the Constitution of Great Britain," and in the other case "to uphold the Constitution of the United States." The reverence attending those ceremonies was marked and impressive. In this we greatly rejoice, because there has been, and still exists to a large extent, an utter irreverence and want of solemnity whenever or wherever the oath is taken. It is painful to a Christian mind, on entering into any of our courts, or places where testimony is being taken, where human life and liberty is at stake, to see how glibly and meaningless this ceremony is performed. The ancient idea coming down to us from the days of Abraham, that no man would dare to violate a pledge made with the Almighty, seems to have sunk into innocuous desuetude in too many quarters. This may be one of the causes why we have so many defalcations, absconding officers, and thieving officials and corrupt legislators, the sanctity of their oath having failed to impress their conscience. Why did it fail? Because administered so irreverently, and taken so thoughtlessly. We speak about revivals of religion, but if revival is needed in any quarter is right here, to revive the ancient reverence due to the ceremony of inducting into office judges, ministers, officials, and legislators by the church.

Too Much Work

LITERARY men have great opportunities open in this day. If they take all that open they are dead men, or worse, living men who ought to be dead. The pen runs so easy when you have good ink, and smooth paper, and an easy desk to write on, and the consciousness of an audience of one, two, or three hundred thousand readers. There are the religious newspapers through which you preach, and the musical journals through which you may sing. There are critiques to be written, and reviews to be indulged in, and poems to be chimed, and novels to be constructed. When out of a man's pen he can shake recreation, and friendship, and usefulness, and bread, he is apt to stop it shaking. So great are the invitations to literary work that the professional men of the day are overcome.

These men sit up late nights, and eat hastily, and scold their wives through irritability, and maul innocent authors, and run the physical machinery of a liver miserably given out. Some of the worst moped people of the day are religious people, from the fact that they have no rest. Added to the necessary work of the world, they superintend two Sunday Schools, listen to two sermons, and every night have meetings of charitable and Christian institutions. They stop after the beggars, hold conventions, speak at meetings, wait on ministers, serve as committeemen, take all the hypercriticisms that inevitably come to earnest workers, rush up and down the world and develop their brains at the expense of all the other functions. They are the best men on earth, and Satan knows it, and is trying to kill them as fast as possible. They know that it is as much a duty to take care of their health as to go to the sacrament. It is as much a sin to commit suicide with the sword of truth as with a pistol.

EARL LI CABLES CHINA'S THANKS

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 8, 1901.

DR. LOUIS KLOPSCH, "Christian Herald," New York:

I have received the following cablegram from Earl Li Hung Chang in Peking:

"Your telegram of June 5th received. The famine in Shansi is causing great suffering and distress to the people there. The benevolent people of America, through 'The Christian Herald,' are very kind in raising a Relief Fund and remitting as a first installment the sum of 20,000 American dollars to afford immediate relief. We are extremely grateful to the Americans, whose liberality and beneficence make no distinction of race or country. I have duly informed by telegraph the Imperial Government and the Governor of Shansi."

WU TING FANG (Chinese Minister at Washington).

saddle-bags, and a great many other things I knew not the names of, and I was so overloaded I had to go on a slow walk and hold fast to the pommel of the McClellan saddle, and when I got half-way up to headquarters the girth broke, and I went off, and it was a great job to get loaded up again. In the woods all around about there were stragglers from the Confederate Army, but they did not seem at all affrighted at my warlike appearance. When I rode up to the encampment, and the boys gave three cheers for the chaplain who had been so brave as to capture a horse, my embarrassment exceeded by exhilaration. But I was then in the condition in which a multitude of us are in the ministry today—loaded up with equipment enough to slay Apollyon, yet we cannot wield it, and we go along on a slow walk, afraid that our system of didactic theology will fall off on one side, or our church history or homiletics will fall off on the other side, carefully guarding to keep our theology right side up, while David felled Goliath with a shepherd-boy's sling, and Shamgar slew six hundred men with an ox-goad. I believe in the day of eternity it will be found out that some backwoods' minister, who never had but three months' education in his life, but set all the prairies on fire with zeal for God, and in the summer preached to his audience in his shirt sleeves,

United Australia

EARTY congratulations are in order to the new nation which has been born in the southern hemisphere. A few years ago there seemed little likelihood of the six colonies, of which the island continent is composed, sinking their mutual jealousies and becoming one federated union. There was some doubt, too, whether the mother country would approve such a union which to many minds is ominous of absolute independence. But the impossible has taken place, a constitution was framed: Great Britain gracefully accepted it; the new era was formally inaugurated by proclamation, and the Duke of Cornwall and York, heir-apparent to the British throne, has journeyed to Australia to open the first session of the new Parliament. Melbourne is for the present the seat of the new Government, but it will be one of the first duties of Parliament to choose a site for the federal capital. To Melbourne, therefore, the royal visitors proceeded for the ceremony of inaugurating the first federal Assembly.

Before a message from King Edward congratulating the assembled representatives and expressing his earnest wishes for the prosperity of the young nation. With dignified simplicity, the initial ceremonies were conducted, and the Parliament was declared open. It is the smallest legislative assemblies. Each of the six States sends six members to the Senate, and the Lower House is composed of seventy-five members, elected on the basis of population. New South Wales sends 26; Victoria, 23; Queensland, 9; South Australia, 5; Western Australia, 5; Tasmania, 5. Lord Hopetoun, as Governor-General, is a direct representative of the crown. He is not elected, but appointed by the home Government. It was his duty to invite some Australian statesman to organize a Cabinet. Sir John Forrest, of New South Wales, was his first choice, but that statesman was unable to secure sufficient support in the House of Representatives. Lord Hopetoun then offered the task to Edmund Barton, a distinguished lawyer of the same State, who has succeeded. It is an evidence of the good feeling prevailing in the nation that Sir William Lyne has consented to serve under him as Home Secretary. The new nation is now fairly launched on its independent career. It is worthy of remark, as a happy augury of the future, that its birth was accomplished in the usual course, as in the history of our own land, united Italy, and of the German Empire has been for a new nation to emerge into life from a sanguinary struggle, but Australia begins her national career in good peace and in peace with her neighbors. This is a welcome innovation in the world with that universal kingdom that the world is yet to see, of which the prophet said:

Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service at Washington has declared that "tuberculosis of the lungs is now considered a dangerous contagious disease." Immigrants with pronounced cases of consumption often have been deported. There are a few instances where a child ill of the disease has been permitted to land with its parents: hereafter there will be no more of these. The rule will apply also to alien passengers coming in the first and second cabins. The order will probably cause many bitter disappointments and perhaps some heart-breaking partings in cases of families coming in, of which one member has the disease. It is well for us that in the kingdom which offers the highest privileges to those who enter, there are no restrictions of that kind, but on the contrary the promise of healing.

The Christian Herald has been the first to publish the news of the death of the late Bishop of India, E. W. Parker.

His Theory Failed

A mysterious suicide was reported in the New York journals a few days ago. It was that of a man belonging to a prominent family whose life was wholly free from the troubles and worries that figure as causes in the lives of other people who take their own lives. The man who threw his life away in this out unharmed. "There isn't a thing," he said, "that a man can't do if he makes up his mind to do it." There is no doubt of the power of mind over matter, but it has its limitations, as people have found who have tried unaided to repress the desires of the flesh. The Apostle learned by painful experience that until he discovered the true source of strength, he was often defeated in his efforts to control his lower nature.

The good that I would do, I do not; but the evil that I would not, I do. (Rom. 7: 15.)

Death of a Bishop

Indubitably there are many among our readers who will learn with sorrow that Bishop E. W. Parker, of India, is dead. He had been sick for many weeks, but was believed to be recovering. The latest intelligence by mail was of strong hope that the crisis of his disease was safely passed, and that he was gaining strength. But on Tuesday, June 4th, came a cable message of only two words, reporting his death. Dr. Parker had been stationed at Lucknow, and it is matter for gratitude that during the famine of 1897 THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was enabled to materially help him in relieving the fearful suffering by which he was surrounded. He spoke with pathetic earnestness at a meeting in New York last year of the intense joy that he felt when the money to buy food for the starving people was put into his hands. Dr. Parker left India during the famine of 1900 to come to this country, and at the general conference, held in May, he was elected a Bishop to aid Bishop Thoburn in his work in India. He shortly afterwards returned to India, and had barely begun his episcopal services, when he was prostrated by the illness that has now terminated fatally.

Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted. Ye also, therefore, that they may rest from their labors, and their sorrow follow them (Rev. 14: 13).

BRIEF NOTES

Many persons have been helped by the use of the Christian Herald. It is a powerful weapon in the hands of the Christian worker. It is a powerful weapon in the hands of the Christian worker. It is a powerful weapon in the hands of the Christian worker.

The Salvation Army is holding a great meeting in New Zealand, for the redemption and evangelization of the people.

The Y. M. C. A. of Birmingham, England, has accepted plans for the erection of a building to cost a quarter of a million dollars, for the development of its work.

The church, as announced, received a contribution of $100,000 from the Y. M. C. A. of Birmingham, England, for the development of its work.

A Chinese mandarin has begun the publication of a weekly journal. In its first issue he promises that a portion of the proceeds will be reserved for contributions to the Christian mission.

Sir Robert Hart, the Chief Director of Customs in China, is a student of the Bible. He was a member of a church in the New Connection, near Belfast, Ireland, and notably his young days were a pupil in good standing in the Sunday School of that Church.

Miss Ruth Cordis Long, niece of Hon. John D. Long, Secretary of the Navy, died lately at her home in Danvers, Mass., of pneumonia. Miss Long, who had great musical talent, had been troubled for the specific stage, but she gave up her music and devoted her talent exclusively to Gospel work. She was a leading feature in many revival services in recent years.

Consumptive Emigrants

A new order has been issued to the Immigration officers in our ports by the Superintendent of Immigration in Washington. It orders the exclusion of all migrants with tuberculosis of the lungs, hereafter, from all ports of the United States, regardless of boards of special inquiry, which heretofore have used their discretion in the matter. The order is mandatory. The board of Special Inquiry in any port after receiving the report on a case of tuberculosis from the chief of the medical division of the local immigration service, will solely have to debar the immigrant. The Supervising instance was not a resident of New York, but having friends in the city, was in the habit of coming here when he wanted relaxation and change of scene. He visited one of his friends on the day of his death, and afterwards went to the Brooklyn Bridge. He walked to the middle span, and there jumped off into the water. A boat went to his assistance, but when he was taken on board he was dead. None of his bones were broken, and an autopsy showed that he had died from shock and asphyxiation. The friend from whom he had departed said: "He was a great student of physics, and I firmly believe that he intended his jump to demonstrate the power of mind over matter. He had absolutely no reason for taking his life, as he had had a good place in Washington, and his domestic relations were happy. When he came to my house that day, we got a launch and went up the Hudson for several miles. On the way, he said several times that he was confident he could dive a hundred feet into the water like that and come

REVIEW OF THE LIFE OF CHRIST

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSON FOR JUNE 30
GOLDEN TEXT—I. COR. 6: 14

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

THE lessons of the quarter have reminded us that Christ's life did not end with the ascension, but continued in heaven, where he ever lives for us to intercede, with greater manifestations of power than ever before on earth, such as the conversion of Saul of Tarsus. We can make no better use of this final review of the Christ lessons than to continue the story of Christ through the nineteen Christian centuries, after a brief review of the preceding chapters, some of which are too frequently overlooked.

COMPLETE BIBLICAL LIFE OF CHRIST

Chapter I. "He was before all things." Jesus prayed to the Father: "Glorify me with the glory that I had with thee before the world was." "Thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world."

From Everlasting to Everlasting

II. "Through him God made the worlds." (See John 1, Heb. 2, Colossians.)

III. Old Testament patriarchs and prophets had many glimpses of a visible Divine person, who must have been the Son of God. (John 1: 18). These brief visits were accompanied by many promises that the Son of God would make a longer visit to the world, to become its Saviour and King.

IV. He came close to the youngest and lowliest by coming, through birth and boyhood, into a home of toil and poverty, where he lived thirty years as a workman.

V. The first year of his ministry was also one of comparative obscurity. All we know of it, save the baptism and temptation, is told in the first four chapters of John.

VI. The second year of his ministry was one of popularity, when crowds gathered to hear his words, and to see his miracles.

VII. The third year of his ministry was a year of persecution, following his rejection of a visible crown of earthly power. These persecutions grew more intense in three extra months of a fourth year, during which he walked to Calvary in the ever-deepening shadow of the cross.

VIII. His ascension introduces a new period of heavenly life, in which Christ not only intercedes above, but interferes in the wrongs of earth, manifesting himself to persecuted Stephen and persecuting Saul.

IX. Since Bible times, Christ has been marching down the centuries, making of the kingdoms of this world the kingdom of Christ, the "new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."

X. The final consummation shall be the glorious appearing of Christ, when "every kindred, every tribe," shall "crown him Lord of all."

Draw an outline-map of the world as it was when Christ was born, when not even ten feet square of it could be found under any government that acknowledged the true God, on which the Son of God could be cradled. Then, by a blue crayon, indicate the growth of Christendom, the ever-increasing sway of governments that have called themselves Christian, and have in some imperfect way followed the ideals of Christ in ever-kindlier, juster treatment of the weak and the poor. In the days of Constantine, our blue wave sweeps over the Roman Empire. The union of Church and state was a mistake, but the Christianizing of government was not. Women and children and slaves and prisoners and captives were less and less oppressed because Constantine uplifted the standard of the Cross. Both rulers and masters became more humane because of the laws and the social ideals that the Romans learned of Christ. As the centuries go by, the blue wave deepens, and flows northward into the Germanic forests, and westward into Scotland and Wales and Ireland, until all Europe is covered by the blue wave. The law codes of Justinian, Charlemagne, and Alfred, all began with the Decalogue, and all felt the gentler touch of the Golden Rule.

The Expansion of Christendom

In the days of Columbus, this blue wave, like a gulf stream, flows across the Atlantic, strikes the American continent midway, and sweeps southward and northward, until all the Americas come under Christian governments. Early in the nineteenth century, this blue gulf stream flows across the Pacific, and covers Hawaii, which becomes a Christian republic, with prohibition for sixty years. It sweeps over Fiji, and in every village of those cannibal islands the bell rings the signal for family prayer. It sweeps on to Madagascar, whose Christian queen refuses to license the liquor traffic, selling woe and sorrow for gold and silver. It sweeps on into Africa, soon to be entirely under Christian governments. Another wave, meanwhile, has swept even over Burma, where England has just introduced prohibition of opium, a token, it is hoped, that she is now ready to permit China to do the same. On sweeps the blue wave to the coast of China, which it has tinged at least, and over Japan, which, though nominally pagan, has garnered Christian institutions from all parts of Europe and America.

And so, already more than half the world's surface is directly governed by nations that call themselves Christian, and in some imperfect degree have adopted the law of Christ, and the remaining portions of the world are fast becoming the "spheres of influence" of Christian Power, so that there can be no reasonable doubt that in a few years Christendom will cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, and history will echo, like the sound of many waters, the sure word of prophecy, "The kingdom of this world is becoming the kingdom of our Lord." (Rev. 11: 15). And we must see to it that this Christendom shall deepen as well as widen, by Christianizing Christianity, on our own individual part of it first of all.

That brings us to the consideration of a life of Christ, without which other lives of Christ will do us no good.

THE INNER LIFE OF CHRIST

"Christ in You" "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Our Bethlehem: "I travail in birth again, till Christ be formed in you."

Our Spiritual Baptism: "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus."

Our Transfiguration: "Be ye transfigured by the renewing of your minds."

Going About Doing Good: "Walk even as he walked."

Our Crucifixion: "Crucified with Christ, nevertheless, I live."

Our Resurrection and Ascension: "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things that are above."

This is the best review of Christ's life, one written in the heart, beginning with the birth of Christ in us, and culminating in our ascension into a heavenly life even while we still walk the earth.

Imagine an intelligent heathen, who had never heard of Christ, landing in New York. He goes on shore, and sees up Fifth Avenue. "What are these tall buildings on your most beautiful avenue?"

The Christ of To-Day "whose spires point to the sky?" "Those are Christian churches." "And what are these great institutions that cover acres?" "Those are Christian hospitals and Christian asylums." "And, in this great gallery, who is the reverent figure that appears more prominently than any other?" "That is the Christ, in whose name the churches and asylums are raised." "Who is this Christ? Was he your greatest American?" "O, no, our Washington, for whom we name our streets and cities, and our children, is only admired, while this Christ is loved and adored. And in every other civilized land, also, you may see great buildings, pictures, songs, books that bear Christ's name, and millions that love him with a love strong as death, though he was neither American, nor European, but African in race."

A story whose results are to-day seen in song and story in brick and books, in laws and life, cannot have been a myth. Like golden links, the "Lord's Day," in unbroken weekly sequence, leads us back to the empty tomb of his resurrection. Every day is dated from his birth. His matchless influence in the present world leads us back to the two other kindred miracles found in the Gospels, namely, his matchless words, and his matchless life. There they are in the printed page. To suppose a dozen uneducated fishermen wrote such words, and invented such a life, would be to substitute credulity for faith, to give up a consistent miracle for a monstrous myth. Reason joins with faith to say:

"I believe in God, the Father, Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth, through Jesus Christ, his only Son, our Lord, who was conceived of the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary, suffered under Pontius Pilate, the third day he rose again from the dead; he ascended into heaven, from thence he shall come again to judge the quick and the dead."

more quickly over Australia, which has led the world in eight-hour laws, and secret ballots; over New Zealand, first to make a success of compulsory arbitration for capital and labor; over India, where Great Britain has abolished a hundred cruel customs, such as throwing children to the Ganges and burning wives on the funeral pyres of their husbands;

One Earnest American Soldier's Valiant Work for Christ in the Philippine Islands

VE have come away from Manila to a densely populated province near, reached by the only railroad in these islands. We are now about sixty miles in the interior. We three missionaries make this our headquarters and drive from here to towns within ten miles. This is a most productive province—sugar, maize (Indian corn), rice, cocoa, pineapples, oranges, bananas and vegetables of all sorts. It is a wonderful experience we are having, getting close to the people, and holding large meetings with them, as well as having small gatherings in their homes.

This country here has been the centre of terrible insurrectionary wars. The larger buildings and churches are roofless, in many cases are complete ruins. The natives are now very quiet, and most friendly to us, as we come bearing the olive branch. Arms are rapidly being laid down, and they are returning to their homes to civilized life. This is our time to step in and give them the Bible—"La Santa Biblia," as they lovingly call it. For the first time in the history of these people they are allowed to read this Book, to whose mighty influence the three great Protestant nations owe their power.

We had such an interesting time yesterday. A few prominent men of the town of Mexico invited us to dine over for a public meeting. The road lay past stumps overhung with palms and bamboo. It was almost a continuous village. The quaint little nipa hut of palm leaves and bamboo lined the road. "The cockpit" was to be our place of meeting. It was made of the same palm leaves and bamboo—a large building, which would hold about 1,200 people. Where usually the cocks fight we unfolded our American organ, and soon the place was well filled with all sorts of Filipino people. They were so eager to get a close view of the American ladies, that as soon as I began playing the organ I found myself quite shut in by the crowd. We distributed hymns on leaflets, each one having a copy, which they afterwards took to their homes. We taught them such hymns as "Come to the Saviour, make no delay," or "Pass me not." They are passionately fond of music and sang with a will, catching the time easily. Our missionaries had prayer in Spanish, also reading of the Bible, and both spoke afterward. Many broke into the discourse to ask questions, or to supply a Spanish word if our speakers halted an instant. The Alcandy, or head man of the town, was most pronounced in his approval of our coming, and sat in a prominent place. He followed us to the house of the young man who had invited us to dinner. Before we left we had prayer, and promised soon to meet again. We also told them of the Bible study courses to be opened in Manila, for those in the provinces who can come to Manila for a few weeks at a time. They were interested in this.

We were invited to several other homes. One was a large house with every appointment typical of the old Spanish regime. It had been in this family for ninety years. There were grand staircases; broad, elegant salas (halls) all of naru wood, exactly like mahogany and beautifully carved, and the floors were brilliantly polished. We asked how this home had escaped destruction, and they replied, "By always offering the house to the army in power."

In another beautiful old house we found a mother, five sons and five daughters. The father was a prisoner of war, held by our army. The oldest son had also been a prisoner, but had lately been pardoned. While he was in prison, he had formed the acquaintance of an American soldier who was an earnest Christian, and who had explained to him the Bible and the principles of the Christian religion, with the result that the young Filipino ultimately became a convert. On his liberation and return home he at once began teaching his brothers and sisters, and the entire family is now a group of Protestant Christians. The second son had read the entire Bible through in four months. He was quite a musician, and was learning our Moody and Sankey hymns from a book gotten from Manila. Before we left that town we had many more proofs of what the earnest work of one Christian soldier can do. He was a simple private, but he had turned that whole town Godward. The distributing of the Bible was his strong point.

We have now in Manila a prosperous Christian Endeavor Society, composed of American soldiers. Every Sunday they have a large meeting. They are constantly being sent on duty to different provinces in these islands, so our membership is always changing. We have also in Manila a Filipino Christian Endeavor Society, which promises to be a strong and most valuable adjunct to the Protestant Church just springing into existence. This is the beginning of what is to come.

SAVED IN HIS CELL BY A SERMON

BY CHAPLAIN MUNRO
New York Tombs Prison

IT is certainly true that the lot of the average Prison Chaplain is full of exciting experiences. He has poured into his ears many a tale of dark sorrow and woe, the result of a misspent life. I have also seen scalding tears roll down the cheeks of the transgressor, followed by remorse that convulsed his entire frame. Retribution always follows the steps of young men and women who wander away from God, to gale themselves with the "pleasures of sin," which last only for a season.

I seldom have I seen the hand of God more clearly manifest than in the experience of a young man, who, I have reason to believe, was converted in prison through the instrumentality of a copy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. When I visit a prison, I make it a point to hold up Jesus Christ and him crucified for it may be my last opportunity, as I can never see that man again till I meet him at the judgment-seat. The young man of whom I speak was between thirty and thirty-five of more than the average intelligence, amiable, and withal a ready conversationalist. He had passed through a checkered career, had embarked in many wild schemes, and failed in all. He was still on the stormy sea of life without a pilot, without hope and without God. Like thousands of other young men, he started out on a career of drinking and gambling, went on the rocks and became a wreck. Poor soul! He never expected to come to such a sad end. But then the way to hell is paved with good intentions. His wild career brought him, at last, to a prison cell, where he drank the bitter dregs of a wretched life. I had many interviews with him on the subject of personal religion, but without apparent result. While I sought to point him to Jesus Christ, the sinners' friend, he thought only of the troubles which he brought upon himself by his own misconduct. I could see he had no desire to forsake his sins and turn to God.

As the weeks passed by, I became deeply interested in him. In going over his past life, he mentioned that he had been in business in New York City for several years, during which time he had made his home in Brooklyn. Though he had made no profession of religion during those years, yet he was a frequent attendant at church, and was often greatly impressed, perhaps, like King Agrippa, "almost persuaded" to be a Christian; but when he came to decide the great question, business absorbed his attention, and he delayed, hoping for a more convenient season. But God's gracious spirit did not leave him, even in prison; and I know from the conversations I have had with him that his heart yearned continually for something more than this world could give.

CHAPLAIN MUNRO

This young man came from a Christian home, and had had a praying mother, who taught him the Word of God in his earliest days. Often in the prison night-watches, promises from the Word of Life would come rushing to his mind like an Alpine torrent. How he came, finally, to trust in Jesus and become a child of God was little less than a miracle. I will allow him to tell the story in his own words:

"I came to the conclusion that I was a lost young man on the brink of a hopeless despair. That I ever should have come to a felon's cell, I had never for a moment expected. In passing my cell one morning, you gave me a copy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I looked it over carefully, as I had done on many previous occasions, and in due season I laid it aside, where it found the same resting-place as other exhausted literature, viz., the floor. Being at constant war with myself, I would alternately pace my narrow cell until fatigue would seize me; then throw myself on my cot again to lose consciousness in sleep. But, like the ebbing of the tide, instead of finding sweet rest, it often dashed me back into the gulf of my own unfathomable despondency and doubt.

"As I turned on my bed in almost hopeless despair, I stooped to pick up the paper from the floor, where it lay with others. One of the pictures seemed familiar to me; it was that of Dr. Talmage. The text of his sermon in that issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was: 'A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver' (Prov. 25:11). This sermon I read, and re-read many times. It fitted my longing heart exactly, and took a deep hold upon me. What a solace those words became to my soul! My burden rolled away; my anxiety ceased; the troubled waters within became calm; and out of chaos and despair came order and courage. From that moment I became a changed man, to live the rest of my life for him who died for me, and saved me by his blood. That I may remain steadfast is my sincere prayer, and when I am again a free man, I will strive to ever keep before me the guiding hand of God; and the fact that, through his mercy and the instrumentality of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, I became a saved man in the New York Tombs prison."

He is now a free man, and I have the best reason for believing that he is "holding fast" to his faith and living as a humble and exemplary Christian.

The Trouble at Ingleside

INGLESIDE'S good name is in danger, sister," said Miss Rowena solemnly to Miss Kroutz, who was the principal of the school. "Something must be done, and done at once."

"But the difficulty is," replied Miss Kroutz, "there is nobody to suspect. The servants have been with us for years, and surely there is not one of the pupils who would steal. If it is a pupil, she is a kleptomaniac, of course. I have never come in contact with a kleptomaniac, and I cannot associate the idea with any of our girls."

Miss Kroutz shook her head mournfully. "You know, sister Katharine," Miss Rowena urged, "if this thing is allowed to go on, it will injure our reputation. The parents will not like to send their daughters back, if these depredations are not checked. It exposes innocent girls to contamination as well as to the kleptomaniac theory. I do not believe in a person who steals, a thief, in any terms."

Misses Kroutz had carried on the seminary for young ladies prosperously and efficiently since their own childhood, and they were now stately women of middle age. The school was well selected, also very homelike, and when, latterly, small losses of pocket money, jewelry, and even ties and caps were constantly reported, the situation was both novel and trying.

The girls ought to be more careful of their purses," said Miss Kroutz, firmly.

There should be no occasion for this to be careful," said Miss Rowena, firmly.

Both ladies were exceedingly distressed. The school itself was unhappy. There was a cloud brooding over every one. And now as the Christmas examinations were drawing near, the girls could not fix their minds on their work. It was a new experience at Ingleside, this of locking bureau drawers and trunks, of bolting bed-room doors at night, and of hiding one's belongings, for fear they might be lost.

Even as the principal and her sister conferred, they were interrupted by one of the seniors, who happened at the door, and came in with a very white and scared countenance.

Well, Angie?" said Miss Rowena, "what else has happened?"

Instinctively, everyone's first thought was of the annoyances which were becoming increasingly frequent.

Angie Bryant was a tall, slender girl, dressed in deep mourning. Her eyes filled with tears and her lips quivered as she said that her mother's picture had vanished from her dressing-table, and with it a ring of chased gold, which had been lying loosely on her hairpin tray.

Miss Rowena repressed an exclamation of impatience. She had not dealt with schoolgirls for thirty years without learning how careless they are in leaving their things about.

"I do wish you would all wear your rings, or give them to me to keep in the safe," she said earnestly, then added: "But, Angie, who would covet the photograph of your dear mother? Its value to you is inestimable, but to others it would only be the picture of an unknown lady."

"I know that, and I have had it on my mind for that reason. I feel as if mamma is near me when I can look at her sweet face, and she seems to permeate the place where I am. Somehow heaven does not seem so awfully distant with my mother at my side. The picture all but speaks. I have dreamed of losing this treasure, and now the dream has come true."

Before Angie had fairly reached her room, another girl, Beth Armour, followed her with a complaint.

"Miss Kroutz and Miss Rowena, my desk was opened at night, and my essay—the first rough draft—was snatched off. Nobody but Angie Bryant and I knew that I was writing the examination essay, and to any other girl than I it would be mere waste paper. It is most vexatious, and I think it has been done as a trick—a practical joke."

Miss Rowena was a little lady—a wee bit of a dame, of most dignified presence. She drew herself up to her full height, and had the effect thus of being very impressive.

"Elizabeth Armour, I agree with you. A practical joke of this sort is very unseemly and very discreditable to Ingleside. It appears as if the series of disgraceful occurrences which have disturbed our tranquillity of late belong to the same category. I shall sift the matter—sift it to the bottom, and shall begin, with my sister's permission, by searching every box, trunk and drawer in the house."

Miss Kroutz was reluctant to consent, but as the search was to be general and public, and as the losers of property were numerous, she yielded. One of the most puzzling particulars was that the thief could not dispose of the goods taken in any apparently easy way. Ingleside was in the country, six miles from the railway station, and there was no village. No young lady, and no servant had gone away for the last month, and the only visitors had been the clergyman of the parish, his wife, and sister, and two elderly ladies, former preceptresses at Ingleside.

The trunks were searched, the rooms were ransacked, closets and cubby-holes were, so to speak, turned inside teachers had lost nothing. The step that disturbed her, the faint waft of chill air from a softly opened door, were hardly more than enough to startle her slightly as she turned on her pillow, and being very tired she relapsed quickly into sleep again. She would have thought the experience a dream, if she had not in the morning discovered that her watch was gone. Miss Rowena's watch! If there was an article at Ingleside which was invested with sacredness, which partook of its owner's personality, it was that admirable time-piece, presented, as all the girls knew, to Rowena Kroutz on her twentieth birthday by her father, in appreciation of her rare qualities of heart and mind. More, it was not a watch bought originally for Miss Rowena; it was an heirloom.

Miss Rowena was now thoroughly incensed; she said little, but she meditated long. Finally, she announced to Miss Kroutz and the staff of assistants gathered in a conclave that she should sit up and watch every night till she had solved the mystery. Miss Eleanor Kirkman, the teacher of rhetoric, agreed to share the first of her vigils. Nothing of their intention was disclosed to the girls. For two nights nothing happened. On the third, the denouement came.

When everything was hushed at Ingleside in the dead stillness of midnight, as Miss Rowena and Miss Eleanor were nodding beside a shaded lamp in the dim precincts of the library, they were suddenly shaken into alert wakefulness by the unmistakable sound of a footfall on the stair. It was a bare foot, and it made almost no noise; but they heard it, stepping slowly and carefully down, one step at a time, as a child descends, and there was also a very soft swish as of a trailing garment. Miss Kirkman would have screamed, but Miss Rowena's grip on her arm was of iron, and Miss Rowena's eyes were stern.

"Not a breath!" she whispered. "Come with me."

Truly there was nothing to fear, and the mystery was at once cleared. For, there on the stairway, clothed in her white nightgown, her long, fair hair in a heavy braid, her unseeing eyes looking neither to the right nor the left, came Angie Bryant, and in her hand was an unlighted silver candle-stick, always kept on a bracket in the upper hall. On, on she came, through the corridor to the back door, which she noiselessly opened; then down the steps, and through the long garden to the old summer-house, which nobody ever entered.

"Oh, poor, poor Angie!" cried Miss Rowena, as she caught up a long shaker cloak and enveloped herself in its folds to follow Angie. Miss Kirkman's golf cap and cape were on a peg in the hall. They were warmly protected against the cold night, but the sleep-walker was lightly clad.

They walked down the long garden walk between the rows of privet and box, past the white statues set here and there among the flower-beds and over the narrow footbridge that spanned a little ravine, and paused at the summer-house, which Angie had entered. They observed her silently.

With the utmost care Angie deposited the candle-stick in a recess under the seat in the summer-house. Then she retraced her path, and did not stop until she gained her own chamber again.

Examination found every missing bit of property safe. Not a trinket, not a knickknack, not a pocket-book but was there in the miscellaneous collection of the kleptomaniac somnambulist. Miss Rowena was now confronted by a yet more delicate and difficult obligation. She sent for the physician who looked after the Ingleside girls when they were ill. He advised quietly returning every article to its owner, without further explanation than the information that it had been discovered after search and that nobody was to blame. "But," he said, "tell Miss Angie the whole story when you give her back her mother's picture. It will be a great shock, and a shock often proves the needed remedy for somnambulism."

Ingleside no longer suffers from predatory incursions. Angie Bryant was far more chagrined at finding herself the author of deeds of darkness than in discovering that she walked in her sleep. She has never repeated the latter performance, and she has had a long fit of illness, from which she has recovered, entirely to be trusted, asleep or awake.

"HER UNSEEING EYES LOOKING NEITHER TO RIGHT NOR LEFT"

The Busy Life of a New York Deaconess

Woman's Work Among the Sinful and Needy--Ministering to the Lonely and Sorrowful

BY ZAIDA TYRRELL

MISS MARION GRIEVES
Deaconess Home, New York

THE history of the Methodist Episcopal Deaconess Home and Training School in New York is a striking instance of the extraordinary growth of the deaconess movement, and of its value in solving many difficult problems of which work in great cities. This institution, from a modest beginning, has developed into a great educational and spiritual centre, sending out helpers to many churches. The building on Fourteenth street, which answered requirements some years ago, became entirely inadequate to recent demands. Next fall, the commodious new quarters at 1175 Madison Avenue, one block from Central Park, will be opened. Deaconess work has been more than doubled in its possibilities for usefulness by the purchase of this fine property. It is deemed that fifty young women present themselves for training at the opening of the school this fall. The demand for trained workers is not nearly met by the supply. Not only in my own, but in other denominations, the deaconess has come to be regarded as an essential quantity in successful pastoral work.

It is in tenement district work that the deaconess is needed most. Passing along the labyrinthine streets of the East Side, particularly the densely populated foreign quarter, one sees a motley throng elbowing each other on the street, ignorant of each other's language, in Christian homes, works with destructive force in the tenements, where the submerged classes struggle for existence. What does the deaconess find in many a tenement home? The entrance is through an alley, and she shrinks from the sound of the obscene jest, the profane oath; she is half stifled by the mingled odors of nameless impurities. She sees a little child emerging from the family entrance of a saloon, carrying a pitcher of beer, and follows her as she threads her way along the street, past unkempt women sitting on door-sills; now the little one darts across a court, where children are re-enacting in play the tragedies so familiar in life. "Let's play papa has come home drunk," they say, "and we children must all hide, 'cause he's cross then." Climbing the dark stairs, she follows the child into a sunless room, bare and forbidding. A tired-looking woman, with a heavy baby in her arms, looks questioningly at her. A family of seven live here and in the adjoining room, into which the light of day never shines; there is only one bed—the children sleep on the floor. With children from homes like this the deaconess works from day to day. Her heart is gladdened as she sees the Gospel truths taught in Sunday School, transforming little lives. She draws children into Junior Leagues, into kindergarten, kitchengarden (where they learn housekeeping) and physical culture classes. Then there is the sewing school, the event of the week, when the little women learn to baste, to run, to hem; and when the model sewing-book is neatly made they may enter the millinery or the dressmaking class, where five years vites the mother to the weekly mothers' meeting, held in the church parlor, where she may take her baby. The service is opened with prayer and hearty singing, and while busy fingers ply the needle, fashioning garments for her little ones, the mother listens to a helpful story and later enjoys a social cup of tea.

Sometimes, in her rounds of visits, the deaconess finds strangers, who have just moved into the neighborhood—a friendly word means everything to them. She uses her influence to secure employment for the father; she gathers the children into the Sunday School; invites the family to church, and promises to meet them at the door and introduce them to the pastor.

In the varied phases of practical Christian usefulness open to the deaconess, is recognized the need of homes to afford protection and helpfulness to struggling women earning a livelihood. One of the deaconesses found a young girl, member of the church and of the Young People's Society in her home town, in surroundings which, for the time, offered amusement and questionable opportunity for forgetfulness of her struggle to make the small sum she earned each week meet her needs. Here was a case for preventive work. These young working women, are sadly in need of cheerful, helpful influences, home surroundings, and Christian fellowship, that they may not turn from God and be-but follow competitors in a crowded market for work, by which they may buy bread to put into hungry children's mouths. Their moral condition is not what it should be in a Christian land. How can one reach these families, save the children, and make good citizens of them? That is a problem for the deaconess to solve. The law of environment, which produces noble results of faithfulness fits them to be competent wage-earners. Sometimes sickness lays hold of a child, and the deaconess enters the home as nurse and provider of comforts. Service to their sick child wins mother and father; the invitation to the mission near by is accepted and a bit of higher living is introduced into lowly lives. Quick to see a new opportunity, the deaconess income careless and worldly. To provide such environment for them at rates which they can pay, provision has been made for the opening of a Home in the early autumn as a feature of deaconess work in New York. I will gladly answer inquiries concerning our work. Until August 20, letters should be addressed me at 60 Seventh avenue; after, at 1175 Madison avenue.

The New Addition to Our Children's Home

HOPE COTTAGE, THE BEAUTIFUL NEW BUILDING FOR MONT-LAWN'S WAIFS, ERECTED IN MEMORY OF JANE HOPE.....

BETWEEN the principal building—the "Home on the Hill," as our children call it in their song—and the annex, at Mont-Lawn, stands a pretty, new building, with the beautiful name—Hope Cottage. Could a dwelling-place for children be more happily described than by just such a title as this?

The beautiful name, "Hope," was given by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to the new cottage, in honor of the noble and generous lady of whom the building is a memorial. Here is the story of Hope Cottage and, in brief, of her whose monument it is.

In the New York dailies of Saturday, April 8, 1889, appeared this simple notice: "Died, Friday, April 7, 1899, at her residence, Miss Jane Hope." Few and modest as were these terms, they announced the passing of one who had been a friend to many, and a benefactor to hundreds whom she had never seen. The name was thoroughly familiar to readers of this paper. For a number of years, hardly any cause enlisting sympathy or any good work needing help had been presented in these columns but Miss Hope had come forward as one of the first and most generous givers. Her letters were as modest as her generosity was large. Her first contribution came with the simple name appended and without any explanation. No summer did she forget the Children's Home at Mont-Lawn; and a few weeks before her death, she remembered it in a thoughtful donation. She was over eighty when the end came. In childhood, Jane Hope had come to this country from Scotland, with her parents and her brothers. They had passed away, and but for the constant companionship and dutiful care of her niece, Belle Hope, lonely, indeed, would have been her journey towards the "Land o' the Leal." In her later years she was an invalid, and this niece was eyes, ears, hands, and feet to her venerable aunt. After Miss Jane Hope's death, Miss Belle Hope wrote to the Proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,

Architect's Drawing

THE JANE HOPE MEMORIAL AS IT WILL APPEAR WHEN FINISHED

enclosing a check for $2,500, for the purpose of erecting a cottage at Mont-Lawn, concluding with the words:

I was thinking if $2,000 would pay for the building, you could use the $500 for furnishing it, but as I know nothing of the cost of such cottages, I shall leave it entirely to your judgment, knowing that you will make the best use of the money. If you mention this in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, just say that the money has been sent for this purpose, as I feel that had my aunt made a will she would have remembered the children. Consequently, I deserve no credit for giving the amount.

So, the pretty new cottage, complete with all its furnishings, will stand as a memorial of the aged friend who had such a warm place in her heart for little children of the poor and whose hand was often outstretched

ed to help them. No pains have been spared to secure the very best results for the expenditure. The big dormitory will accommodate sixty children. It is a large, airy room with high ceiling. Little enameled beds have been purchased for the opening into it are two smaller rooms. An attractive feature of the building is a piazza, sixty-eight feet long, furnishing a cool shelter for tots on rainy days. Carpenters are busily at work, and we expect to have Hope Cottage ready for occupancy at an early date. Think of our surprise and how happy our children will be when they see this delightful addition to their home! What a lesson and what a sermon that cottage will be to those who enjoy its privileges, speaking as it will the unselfishness and kindness of one never having seen them, remembered for love's sake. If when the little tenement waifs, dreaming of the day's happy day, are slumbering in their snowy coats far from the hot city's turmoil of suffering, sickness and sin—the spirit of their departed friend could hover above them, perhaps even heaven's happiness might be increased by knowledge of the work wrought in her name.

Never was Mont-Lawn more beautiful than now. The green lawns, the flower fields, the blossoming hillsides seem aiming for the children. The very birds seem to be singing, "When will the children come?" Miss Collins, our Superintendent and Housemother, has been at the Home for some time, seeing that everything is made ready for the hundreds of little guests who will soon make the hillsides ring with their joyous shouts and merry songs. Great joy is in the tenements, where many small, ragged folk are counting the days that intervene between them and the sail up the Hudson to Mont-Lawn and the ten happy days there. It costs only $3 to give one waif this pleasure, that small sum covering all cost of transportation, medical examination, caretakers' attention, shelter, food, clothing, etc.; $6 sends waifs $9 three; $12 four; $15 five; $30 makes ten waifs happy. Gifts will be acknowledged in these columns.

TONI'S CHILDREN

IT was a double-decker tenement of the old, unimproved type. Unlike many of its neighbors, it had never seen better days, for it had sprung into existence with the influx of the Italians into Harlem. To-day, those who passed in and out paid little heed to the piece of crape fluttering from the greasy doorway!

ANNA C. RUDDY

Another life had gone out, to be sure, but that was of frequent occurrence in the old house, and what was one among so many? Away up on the fifth floor, in a forlorn apartment, the body of a woman lay prepared for burial. The face was pitifully young, and told a story of starvation and ill treatment that was confirmed by the wretched surroundings. Four children played, cried and quarreled by turns, and were admonished in no gentle terms by their father, an elderly Italian of forbidding aspect.

The young Irish-Protestant girl had married him in good faith seven years before, though she had never known a bright day since. Death had ended it all at last, and she lay there very still and white this morning, while her mother, sobbing out her grief, discussed funeral arrangements with her son-in-law.

Toni had pronounced ideas on capital and labor, the strongest of which was, perhaps, his desire to do as little of the latter as possible. He also had a contempt for priests of all denominations, and declared that no religious service should be held in his house. The old lady as positively asserted that her daughter had been brought up a good Episcopalian, and was not going to the grave "without a word of prayer, if she knew it." Little six-year-old Eva had been patiently pacing the floor with baby Mary in her arms, when, at the sound of her grandmother's words, a thought came to her which almost made her drop the baby in her excitement.

"Oh, papa," she exclaimed, "the teacher at the Home Garden knows how to pray, and she loved mamma. I know she'll come if I ask her. Please let me go right away."

After a little bickering, the compromise was effected, and a little later, a tiny mite of a child came to the teacher's door with the plea, "Please come and say a prayer for mamma, 'cause she's dead."

So it was that three of us climbed the rickety stairs and conducted the strange funeral service that night, amid the filth and evil odors of the old house. The only bright thing there was the flowers we laid on the coffin, as a tribute to one of the bravest lives we had ever known in the tenements. At the sound of the hymn, a crowd gathered, though we could scarcely distinguish their faces, for the smoky oil lamp only served to throw an unnatural glare over the face of the dead, and to leave the rest of the room in darkness.

The intense silence was only broken by an occasional sob, as the simple Gospel story touched some heart. When we closed they went out almost without speaking, except one old man, who reached out his hand and said, "Thank you, signorina, for the beautiful words of hope you have spoken to us to-night. We all must die, and it is a great leap in the dark; but perhaps there's hope."

And he went away shaking his head and muttering, "Perhaps there's hope; perhaps; perhaps."

The family moved away a few days after the funeral and the children came to the Home Garden no more. We knew how they must need us and tried to locate them, for they had never missed a day since the first time their mother had brought them, asking that they be taken into Sunday School, adding, in a frightened whisper, that she "wanted them to learn something good." Our quest was vain, until, on May 1, a year later, they came to us themselves. To write a story of that year would be impossible. Eva was six and the rest of the family, so to her it fell to become mother and nurse-keeper to the little brood. Her devotion to the bal was pathetic. The rest of the family dispensed with the mere money of a wash day, but baby's clothes were faithfully boiled once a week and hung out to dry. To the baby she was "mamma" often the other two gave her the same name.

...A GLIMPSE OF CHILD-LIFE IN NEW YORK'S ITALIAN QUARTER

There had been little in the house to eat for a week and absolutely nothing for twenty-four hours. Joe had taken a latchet the day before, and had cut Margherita's thumb off. Little Mary had bruises all over her frail little body. This was too much for Eva. With a great sob, she caught the baby in her arms and set out with all the children to find the Home Garden. How they ever succeeded in finding it is a mystery; but it was a pitiful little group that we welcomed that afternoon. With the exception of Joe, they returned to the father. The ugly mark on the face of the "Little Mother," which looked suspiciously like the iron heel of a man's boot, decided that. It took weeks in a hospital before they were able to go to the Home, where they are now being cared for.

The Home Garden at 322 Pleasant avenue, New York, was started three years ago in two rooms in a tenement house, and now occupies a roomy house with a good sized playground. It has a Sunday School, sewing schools, manual training classes, boys' clubs, etc., besides a summer garden and playground. The children come in every day after school hours and stay until six o'clock. It is supported entirely by voluntary contributions, and its object is to teach just such children as those whose story has been told above. Help is needed in carrying on the work. Any reader who is interested may address Miss Ruddy, the Superintendent, at No. 322 Pleasant avenue, New York, who will supply all information that may be desired.

"DEBT-RAISER" KIMBALL'S DEATH

MR. EDWARD KIMBALL, who died June 6, at the residence of his son, Dr. R.H. Kimball, in Oak Park, a small suburb of Chicago, Ill., was known all over the United States and Canada by the unique title which heads this article, because of his marvelous success in freeing churches of debts. Obligations to the extent of $15,000,000 were lifted from various temples of worship in this country and in Canada through his exertions. In New York City, he secured in two sermons $110,000 and paid off the debt on Dr. Robinson's Presbyterian Church. No denomination or creed were specially favored by him; his eloquence and energy were at the service of any church in financial distress. Churches in Chicago, San Francisco, Portland, Denver, Washington, Boston, Philadelphia, Newark, and other places were assisted by his labors, and through his efforts millions of dollars were raised to lift mortgages and other debts from sacred buildings.

In 1879 he abandoned secular business entirely, in order that he might devote himself wholly to this unique, but most useful line of Christian service. It is not often considered a pleasant line of duty; the calling is not a crowded one; and it might almost be said of one who gave himself to it that he spent his life in bonds that the House of the Lord might go free.

Edward Kimball was born in Rawley, Mass., in 1823. When twenty-three years old he engaged in business in Boston, where he soon became head of a large carpet house. While a resident of Mount Vernon, and a member of the Mount Vernon Congregational Church, he taught a Sunday School class there, and Dwight L. Moody was one of his pupils. It is said that he bought Mr. Moody into the church. If this be so, the Church of God owes Mr. Kimball a greater debt even than that of the millions he wiped out.

Before taking up the work which he followed faithfully for so many years, Mr. Kimball was a successful business man in Boston, New York and Chicago. His first wife was a Boston lady, daughter of Dr. Inchman, a prominent physician and chemist. She died in 1870, and two years later he married Miss Harris of Brooklyn, N. Y. Three children survive him.

WON BY A SISTER'S PRAYERS

How Isabella McDonald Alden, the Authoress, Became a Christian

BY REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D.

"ANSY" is a household name, and a household saint, to millions of Americans, both young and old. Her beautiful stories, fresh as the fields on a June morning, and sweet and fragrant as a garden of roses, have been an untold blessing to the young people of our time.

The story is told of a famous man, who has been a popular writer in his day, that when he came to die, he said the dearest wish he had in the world was, that he might live long enough to get together all his books, and pile everything he had written a great bonfire, that it might not go out blighting and desolating the world after he was dead. How different with a writer like Mrs. Alden! Surely, she has never written anything that the world has so that she would want to destroy, and she can pillow her head every night on the sweet assurance that multitudes of young people in all parts of the world find goodness more attractive, and the Christ she loves more beautiful, because of what she has written.

very stream has a fountain-head. You see the stream winding down through the valley, and you know that back among the hills yonder, there is a fountain—a place where a spring bubbles out from under the rocks, and goes singing down the hillside, gathering other streams until it has become the steadfast blessing which we behold, when it is large enough to submerge the thirst of a thousand herds, and turn the mill-wheels of a city. So, when you see a good woman, and a great writer, whose character is wholesome and noble, whose books are strong and true, with the vitality in them to give new life to discouraged hearts, and new stability to the will that is ready to give way, you know that back somewhere amid the hills of youth there was a fountain that started the blessed influences that have grown into this noble stream of character and work.

I think it was Doctor Talmage who once said, that it is often true that "our sick-beds are God's flower-beds," and certainly most of us have found out, that hard experiences and trying times have often been the birthdays of the most precious things that have come into our lives. This was true of the beginning of Isabella Alden's confession of Christ, and her entering upon the Christian life. When she was a child of twelve, she was seriously ill, and lay, as her friends supposed, at the point of death for several days. After her recovery, a very dear sister, nine years her senior, who had watched over Isabella's sick-bed with unceasing care, asked her if she thought she should have gone to live in heaven if God had called her at that time. The sister added that the thought of parting from her forever had been one of unceasing agony to her, and that her constant prayer during all those days and nights of illness had been, that "Isabella might be spared until she could choose Christ."

These words made a lasting impression upon the young girl. They came to her with all the power and force of a sudden revelation; for though she had been carefully trained, and knew in a theoretical way the plan of salvation, yet she had never given the matter five minutes serious thought, until her sister appealed to her as she did. She tried to put the subject aside again, feeling that it darkened the day and made her uncomfortable; but the Holy Spirit had carried it home to her soul, and over and over again the words of her sister rang in her ears. The spirit of God rang the changes on that word "choose!" "It is not enough for me to believe in Christ as a Saviour, I must 'choose' Christ as my Saviour." Soon she began to feel that in a strange and wonderful way her sister's earnest and loving prayer, that she might be spared to "choose," had been answered. And with it came the conviction that she was compelled to make a definite choice. Not long afterward, she did choose the Lord Jesus Christ as her personal Saviour. What a blessed decision that was, for that choice was the bursting forth of the fountain that has gone singing on its way, gathering in strength, and beauty, and power to bless, refreshing multitudes with the Water of Life, and never blessing the world so widely as to-day.

Let any young girl who is moved by the Spirit of God to make that same choice, and on the other hand is lured away by the pleasures of the world, listen to these words of Mrs. Alden, with which she closes the reminiscence of her conversion: "In a few more years it will be half a century since I chose Christ. I have had abundant reason to thank God for sparing my life at that time, and for giving me a faithful sister."

ANSWERED PRAYERS

L. L., Hurricane, W. Va., writes:

I desire to acknowledge direct answer to special prayer. One was for renewed strength for myself; and for change in the life of my son, that I might place him under better and purer influences.

rs. H. S. T., Denver, Colo., writes:

I want to acknowledge God's goodness in answering my prayers—prayers made many a time as I sat about my housework. God hears if we ask in faith.

W. M., M. D., Chapel Hill, Tenn., writes:

I am an earnest believer in answers to prayers for special blessings. I labored and prayed for my recovery, but I never felt that my prayer was answered until my heart went out in sympathy with others in affliction. Then it was that I sent THE CHRISTIAN HERALD $15 and took upon myself the care of an India orphan.

D., Haledon, N. J., writes:

Since winter I was very sick. A friend of mine lent me some issues of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Reading the many answers to prayer, I was encouraged to plead with the Lord in renewed faith for restoration to health. My prayer has been answered. I have subscribed for the paper. I feel that I cannot do without it. What has not that dear reading of "Answered Prayers" meant to me!

A Mother, Lewisburg, Pa., writes:

We had trouble in regard to an absent son, and I had been praying that we might hear from him. We have heard, and I know that my prayer has been answered.

John H. M., Henton, Ill., writes:

I was in deep trouble. I could not see my way out. I took it to the dear Lord in prayer. He heard me, and answered while I was yet praying.

Rev. J. R., Five Points, Pa., writes:

I wish to add my testimony to the list of prayers answered. God has wonderfully blessed me in my old age. I know that God answers prayer. Praise his dear name.

J. R. S., South Bend, Ind., writes:

I wish to acknowledge answer to prayer for a wayward friend. I have reason to have great faith in prayer.

L. L., Baltimore, Md., writes:

There is no part of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD read with more interest than the one on "Answers to Prayer." I write to give thanks to God for answers to my prayers and to praise and bless his holy and great name forever.

H. M., Fella, Ia., writes:

Having read of so many of your readers who praise God for what he has done for them, I also wish to express my gratitude to our prayer-hearing and answering God. I have prayed our dear Heavenly Father for health, friends, employment; for joy, peace and wisdom to do my daily tasks. And I can testify that he has heard my prayers, whenever I have asked him anything in the name of his dear Son, who said: "Whatsoever you shall ask in my name, I will do it." I pray God that I may ever be truly grateful for what he has done for me; and that all creation may experience the blessing in prayer like I have.

M. S., a reader, Paterson, N. J., writes:

I wish to acknowledge God's wonderful goodness to me. He has answered my prayer, and given me what I have asked for. I will always love and trust him, for he surely answers prayer.

E. J. C., Bunker Hill, O., writes:

What peace it brings to us to know there are people who still believe God answers prayers! A few years ago when the earth was parched and dry and men gave up all hope for vegetation and rain, I said to my little daughters: "Come with me, we will kneel down as Elijah knelt, and ask God for rain." Then, after prayer, one daughter said: "Mamma, God will send rain." O God be praised for such faith! Rain soon came in abundance, and our prayer was turned to thanksgiving.

Spent Her Vacations for India

MISS JENNIE WEASE, a student at the Normal University at Ada,

MISS JENNIE WEASE

Ohio, gave her time and energies during the vacation season last year to securing contributions of several hundred dollars to the India Famine fund. $317 of this was sent through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, this amount being secured from people of all denominations, and some of no church. Miss Wease proposes to give her coming vacation to the little children who were orphaned by the famine, and who were themselves saved by this kind friend and just such devoted workers all over our land.

THE LITTLE CARETAKER

"WOULD you like to go out in the country?"
"Of course, I'd like to go!"
If I could take poor Teddy there; I think, perhaps he'd grow.
You see, my mother told me the very day she died, To take good care of Teddy and tend him when he cried.

"I've tried to, honest and true, ma'am; I gave him most of my bread,
And when he was sick and fretful, I gave him rum instead.
I never thought 'twould hurt him, till a little while ago,
A real good lady told me he surely wouldn't grow.

"He seemed to miss it awful, and begged for 'just one drop.'
But I never gave in once, ma'am! I knew I ought to stop!
For father's cross when he drinks it, and lays all night on the floor;
And the good, kind lady told me 'tis whiskey makes folks poor."

"He'll grow fast out in the country!" "Then take him, please, oh, do!"
Just take my brother Teddy if there isn't room for two.
But I could hang on anywhere and stay outdoors all right,
Tho' Teddy's sure to need me when he goes to sleep at night.

"He used to be so pretty when mother kept him neat,
And he wouldn't cry for whiskey if he had enough to eat.
He's awful poor and little, and if he shouldn't grow,
Big boys would all beat him and laugh and 'buse him so."

"There's room for both in the country, and bread enough and to spare."
"Oh, Teddy, ain't that jolly! Won't we be happy there?"

"There're flowers enough for you both, dear, and room on the grass to play."
"I'm 'fraid we can't go, then—we ain't a cent to pay."

"But good, kind people pay for you, and send for you to come, Away from the stifling city, out to the Children's Home."

"God bless those dear, kind people! O! I'm awful glad to go.
For I think out there in the country, poor Teddy 'll surely grow."

People Quit Coffee and get Well on Postum Food Coffee.

A man in Milford, Ind., says he did not quit drinking coffee because he thought it hurt him, but because he found a morning beverage he liked better in Postum Food Coffee, but to his wonder and surprise, he found in a few weeks all of the old symptoms of sickness had left him.

He had been greatly troubled with his stomach and heart, also with what is called "water brash," and dull headaches "which made me very irritable and quick tempered."

All of these symptoms disappeared and he discovered, in spite of all his previous theories that coffee was really the cause of his trouble, and the leaving off of coffee and taking on Postum Food Coffee brought about a perfect relief.

He speaks, also, of Mrs. Josephine Kelly, living at Elkhart, Ind. Says she was afflicted much as he was, but had become more emaciated than he. So she quit drinking coffee and took on Postum Food Coffee. She is now a healthy and robust lady and willing to make affidavit that Postum Food Coffee saved her.

The gentleman from Milford speaks also of Thomas McDonald as having recovered by using Postum. It can be had at all grocers. A good cup of Postum cannot be made unless it is boiled long enough to bring out the flavor and food value, then it is delicious.

WHATEVER

Loyalty to Christ and the Resolve to do His Will the Supreme Test of Membership in His Kingdom

MORE and more the spirit of personal loyalty to Christ is displacing doctrines and creeds as the rule of life. The Christian has discovered that men of other denominations, whose creeds are diametrically opposed to his own, are reaching the ends at which he also aims. The same purity of life, the same unselfishness of motive, the same consecration of body, soul and spirit, which he strives to attain, are the goal at which they aim, and though they travel a different path, they are honestly endeavoring to attain the same end. This is a revelation which ought to lead to a recognition of brotherhood and comradeship, which has not hitherto been realized. After all our theological study and the intellectual refinements which have divided the Christian world, we are coming back to the bond of union, which is the essential foundation of Christianity. It is not so much what we believe about Christ, about the immaculate conception, about the eternal decrees, about baptism, about church government, that is important, as whether in our daily life we are sincerely trying to fulfil the purposes which Christ came to achieve. Christ said very little about creed, but he insisted on loyalty to himself, trust in him, and recognition of his claims to homage, obedience and service. There is no need to abjure denominational preferences. Every man has his own ideas of detail, but, over all and beyond all, his supreme ideal should be loyalty—the embodiment in his life of Christ's spirit.

A popular preacher relates that during a recent visit to Italy, he entered a provincial church of the Roman Catholic faith. He noticed, with something akin to contempt, the tawdry dolls set up there with their poor dresses trimmed with cheap lace. He wondered that any one could regard them with veneration, and set down the worshippers, bending before them, as idolaters. While he stood there, he saw a man enter, on whose face there was an expression of sorrow and distress, indicating acute spiritual suffering. He saw the man prostrate himself before one of those poor tawdry dolls and offer up a prayer. Presently, the man rose to leave the church, and the observer saw in his face such signs of relief and renewed courage that he was amazed. How he had obtained help to take up again the burden of life and renew his struggle, it was difficult to understand; but in some way the help had come, and it was a changed man that walked out of that church. The observer felt that if he had been in that man's trouble, there was nothing in that wretched doll that could have helped him; but he felt, too, that he had no right to despise anything which had helped another. He wished that the man had possessed more sense, but he was glad that by any means, the burden which was crushing out his life, had been lifted. So it is with our denominational differences. The doctrines that seem to us incredible and perhaps repulsive, may be to a mind of another order, or to a man of different education a pathway to deeper holiness and more thorough consecration. Minds are variously constituted and each has the right to take to himself the principles that tend to his elevation.

Much as we may wish that intelligence and a clearer conception of spiritual truth were more prevalent, we cannot but rejoice in any means that leads to better conduct. No means ever approach in power the consecration to the ideal of Christ's life. The conception of our Lord as a living Being, who even now knows intimately the circumstances of our life, is the surest help to a holy life. We may read of his tenderness, and admire his sweet compassion, and reverence his majestic simplicity, but all this is intellectual. It is only as we realize him now living and observing us, and desiring our fealty, that our ideal becomes operative. We must believe that he is, and is the rewarder of those who diligently seek him, before our theories become influences and our conduct is affected. We may sing about doing being a deadly thing, but Christ did not so regard it. The man who heard and did not was, in his view, a man who built his house on the sand, and his most pathetic reproach was: "Ye call me Lord, but ye do not the things that I say." He looked for fruit, and nothing else would satisfy him. He wanted the principles that he taught to control the lives of his followers; he wanted his spirit to live again in them, so that the men who called themselves Christians should be men like himself, compassionate to the fallen, helpful to the weak, and pure in life and conduct. This conception underlies Christ's idea of the kingdom. The men who belonged to that kingdom might differ in race, in language, in denominational name and grouping, but they must be one in loyalty to him, in love and obedience, and must make a sincere effort, founded on his promise of help, to model their lives upon his, as the supreme and overmastering ideal of perfection.

The Sin of a Land

Apostasy in a Nation the Prelude to National Calamity

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

APART from our individual, personal responsibility, we all have certain corporate responsibilities, as being members of families, churches, societies, cities, nations, etc. We are, in our measure, responsible for all of which we form a part, and we cannot and may not ignore such responsibilities. The house of Eli must suffer because his sons had made themselves vile, and he restrained them not (I. Sam. 2: 27-36; 3: 1-13). The house of Saul, the house of Jeroboam, the house of Ahab, etc., each had to suffer for the sins of certain members. Lot barely escaped being involved in the destruction of the guilty cities of the plain. Isa. 13: 23; Ezek. 25: 32; Zeph. 2: 4-15, show us how God deals with nations as such. We cannot share or accept the benefits of association with others, and yet escape the responsibility which such association entails. As in the case of Lot, a righteous man may live in a wicked city, and vex his righteous soul with the deeds which are done in it, but the very fact of his being there made the sin of the city so far his sin. He could not be untouched by it; it must affect him some way; if it did not contaminate him, it must afflict him.

"When a land sinneth against me," saith our God, "by committing a trespass, and I stretch out mine hand upon it, and break the staff of the bread thereof, and send famine upon it, and cut off from it man and beast; though these three men, Noah, Daniel and Job were in it, they should deliver but their own souls by their righteousness, saith the Lord" (Ezek. 14: 13, 14). Noah had saved his family, but now things were different: responsibility was greater. The Word of God had been sent to his people Israel; prophets had visited them; even a Noah could do nothing for them now. Job had delivered his friends; but those who had been God's chosen people, his inheritance, and who had defiled by their iniquity the land of which he said, "The land is mine" (Lev. 25: 23), could not be delivered by the righteousness of a Job. And Daniel: he, too, had saved his friends in Babylon, where the imperious Nebuchadnezzar had commanded that all the wise men should be slain. But what Noah could do in a judged earth, what Job could do in the land of Uz, what Daniel could do in Babylon, could not be done in the land of Israel, which had so awfully sinned against light and knowledge.

"Thou son of man, thus saith the Lord unto the land of Israel, an end, the end is come upon the four corners of the land" (Ezek. 7: 2). The land would not awake, and therefore judgment must awake. "Ichabod," the glory is departed (I. Sam. 4: 21-23), must again be written upon it; it must soon be shorn of all power and glory, and become the province of the foreign power, until Israel shall know her Messiah and recognize God's King, whom she has rejected, but whom he, in his decree, has set upon his holy hill of Zion (Ps. 2: 6, 7). God spoke of the land of Israel as "a land that I had espied for them [his people] flowing with milk and honey, which is the glory of all lands" (Ezek. 20: 6); yet he says, through his prophet, to this same land, "Now is the end upon thee, and I will send mine anger upon thee, and will judge thee according to thy ways, and I will bring upon thee all thine abominations. And mine eye shall not spare thee, neither will I have pity; but I will bring thy ways upon thee, and thine abominations shall be in the midst of thee; and ye"—not thou, for this is not an individual thing—"shall know that I am the Lord" (Ezek. 7: 3, 4).

In this dispensation, in which we are now living, God is not dealing with us, the members of his Church, in judgment, but in grace. Does he, however, deal with nations in grace? While he is in these days taking "out from the nations a people for his name" (Acts 15: 14) with whom he deals in grace, does he not deal with the nations out of which he takes them according to their works? If, in Ezekiel's time, a Noah, Job, or Daniel could not deliver so much as son or daughter, when the national corruption had reached such a pitch, may not the time soon come when the salt will be no longer permitted to stay the process of corruption in so-called Christian lands? Professing Christianity will have filled up the measure of her iniquity, and Christ will have filled up the number of his elect. Then when "he that now restraineth shall be taken out of the way," shall be revealed the lawless one, the great antichrist of the future, and the awful time of the great tribulation must come upon the world, which is professedly Christian. We have only to call up past history as a witness that God deals with lands according to their works. Those lands which have honored the Word of God, and have observed the Lord's Day, which have given hospitality to God's ancient people, which have repudiated slavery, have been especially blessed. But in measure as sin and greed lay hold of a land, reverses attend its progress.

Honors to an ex-Slave

An old colored man was buried at Stephens City, Va., a few days ago, and the funeral was attended by one of the largest crowds that has been at a funeral in this part of the country in several years. Robert Turner was born a slave sixty-nine years ago, and lived with his old master, William S. Jones, until a few years ago, when the latter broke up housekeeping. At that time, "Uncle Robert," as he was generally called, bought himself a farm. He and his master were very much devoted to each other, and the master promised him that he would leave him his gold watch at his death. The watch was buried with him, but the children of the master presented "Uncle Robert" with a handsome gold watch, of which he was very proud. A great many white people attended the funeral, and different members of his old master's family were present. Some even came from different States to pay their last respects to one they loved.

Miners Hear the Gospel

Palmer, Mo., has recently experienced a revival of unusual interest. The Rev. A. R. Sitton, of Garfield, held a series of evangelistic services at Palmer, which is in the famous Missouri lead mining district. He was called to Palmer to attend the funeral of a relative, and while there preached a sermon which made so deep an impression that he was urged to remain, and begin revival work. This was the first of three weeks' continuous services, which resulted in many conversions. Among the one hundred and two persons who confessed Christ were an ex-sheriff, collector, county school commissioner and superintendent of mines. On the Sunday before his departure, Mr. Sitton baptized fifty-one persons. The miners came in crowds to the services, and many were so touched by the preacher's exhortations that they made bonfires, into which they cast their cards and other gambling devices.

FOOD FOR MEMORY.

The Kind That Builds Up the Brain.

It is hard to believe that certain kinds of food will strengthen the memory, and yet, upon the condition of the brain depends the character of the mind, and its power to remember, and to exert itself in various ways and a healthy brain can only be maintained by well selected food.

Now we know that daily use of the brain uses up certain parts that are thrown out through the pores to the outer surface of the skin. This waste is natural and must be made up from food.

Grape-Nuts Food was made especially to rebuild the brain and nerve centers. An experience in Chicago will illustrate.

Mrs. G. H. Baber, 528 South Paulina St., writes, "I had a terrible siege of gastritis, my stomach refused everything in the way of food until I got hold of Grape-Nuts. It was perfectly wonderful and marvelous to see the difference, I began to improve at once. I weighed myself about that time and found that I had 118 pounds to my credit. I gained in weight, strength and health steadily and rapidly, and now weigh 160 pounds and am strong and in better health than ever in my life."

I have lately had a seven months' course of vocal instruction and have memorized 58 songs and most of the accompaniments besides several piano pieces. When I started in it seemed difficult to memorize one, but my memory has been growing better every day and I now find it easy to commit to memory without difficulty.

I have taken no medicine, but my steady diet of Grape-Nuts Food has given me strength, health and memory."

I did a double washing for myself yesterday and made 65 cts. from my boarders, besides all my cooking, milking and housework. It takes less soap and your machine than in the old way. I have no need of the washboard any more. Mrs. L. A. BARKER.

We are a family of 5 and as I had 3 weeks' wash it was an immense one. Had it all out in 3 hours and never had nicer looking clothes. I did not even put my hands into the water. I cannot too strongly recommend the "1900" washer. Mrs. J. M. WILSON.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

Remarkable Autobiography*

It would be difficult to find, during the literature of a century, a book which could properly be ranked as a parallel to the remarkable narrative which is contained in the volume entitled Five Years of My Life, by Alfred Dreyfus—Captain of Artillery in the French army. The Dreyfus case has now passed into history, but the world will not soon forget the sensational events which only a few years ago convulsed the French Republic and excited Europe. The trial of Dreyfus on the false charge of treason; the manufactured evidence and the gross marriage of justice; his degradation and deportation to a remote tropical island prison, where, for five years, he suffered indignities and tortures that recall the stories of the treatment of political prisoners in medieval times, or the methods of the Spanish Inquisition—all these and much more are related anew in the autobiography and letters comprising the present volume. Sustained amid these trials by the knowledge of his innocence and the hope of a vindication, Dreyfus welcomed the news—which reached him through his prison-guard on June 5, 1899—that the Supreme Court of France had annulled his sentence, remanded him to a court-martial, and ordered his return to France. But there was nothing of the "come-coming of the hero" about this result. He tells of the miseries of his voyage on the cruiser Sfax, still a prisoner, and of his night-landing at Port-Houligh, whence he was taken to the military prison at Rennes. His reunion with his wife is one of the most affecting passages in the book.

It was now the 1st of July. At nine o'clock this morning, I was told that in a few minutes I could see my wife in the room next to the one I was occupying. This room, like my old one, had a wooden grating which shut out the view of the courtyard below. It was furnished with a table and chairs. Here it was that afterward my interviews with my own people and my counsel took place. Strong as was, violent trembling seized me, my face flowed—tears which I had not known for so long a time.

It is impossible for words to express in their intensity the emotions which my wife and I felt at seeing each other again. Joy and grief were blended in our hearts. We sought to tell each other the traces of our suffering, we wished to tell each other all that we felt in our souls, to reveal all the feelings sufficed and stifled during these long years; but the words died away on our lips. We had to content ourselves with trying to throw into our looks all the strength of our affection and of our endurance. The presence of lieutenant of infantry, who was stationed there, prevented any intimate talk.

On the other hand, I knew nothing of the events which had taken place during the past five years, and had returned with confidence—confidence that had been much shaken by the varied events of the previous night. But I did not dare to question my dear wife for fear of exciting her grief, and she preferred leaving to my lawyers the task of informing me.

My wife was authorized to see me every day for an hour. I also saw in succession all the members of our family; and nothing could equal the joy we had in being able to embrace each other after such a separation.

On the 3d of July, Maitre Demange and Maitre Labori came to see me. I threw myself into Maitre Demange's arms, and was afterward presented to Maitre Labori. My confidence in Maitre Demange and in his wonderful devotion, had remained unchanged. It was at once the keenest sympathy with Maitre Labori, who had been so eloquent and so courageous an advocate of the truth. To him I pressed my deep gratitude. Then Maitre Demange gave me chronologically the history of the "Affaire." I listened breathlessly while the strong together for me, link by link, that fatal chain of events. This first exposition was completed by Maitre Labori. I learned of a long series of misdeeds and disgraceful crimes constituting the indictment against my innocence. I was told of the heroism and the great efforts of noble men; the unflinching struggle undertaken by that handful of men of lofty character, opposing their own courage and honesty to the cabals of falsehood and iniquity. I had never doubted that justice would be done, therefore Maitre Labori's account of these events was a great blow to me. My illusions with regard to some of my former chiefs were gradually dissipated, and my soul was filled with anguish. I was seized with an overpowering pity and sorrow for that army of France which I loved.

The concluding chapter deals with the Rennes court-martial which, in direct defiance of the evidence, condemned him anew, adding "with extenuating circumstances." His efforts for a new trial were discontinued at the pleading of his family and friends, who, as well as his counsel, saw no hope of formal vindication and urged him to accept the pardon which was then offered, although the military authorities were granting as a gift what was his by right. His enemies had been thoroughly exposed, and two of the worst had mysteriously died in prison, the result, it is supposed, of the efforts of the chief conspirators to shield themselves against possible revelations. That Dreyfus has still a life task before him—that of personal vindication—he intimates clearly in the closing sentences of his book:

It is nothing to me without honor. Beginning with to-day, I shall unremittently strive for the reparation of the frightful judicial error of which I am still the victim. I want all France to know by a final judgment that I am innocent. My heart will never be satisfied while there is a single Frenchman who imputes to me the abominable crime which another committed.

A Brazilian's Work for Christ

A missionary in Brazil writes: "A month ago, a young Brazilian farmer, who only a short time ago united with the church, sent for me to come to his farm, twenty miles distant, that he might talk over his plan for opening an industrial school for boys. His idea is to organize the school so that poor boys may have an opportunity of working their way. One or two days each week he would have given to work on the farm, so that the pupils might plant and harvest their bread-stuffs, and make something with which to clothe themselves. He also wished a night school for men and women where they could at least learn to read. On his own and his brothers' farms there are quite a number of tenants, and the large majority of them cannot read. This young farmer's heart is full of the love of Christ, and he has this idea of helping the young men of his own and of more distant neighborhoods who wish to study, and who are prevented from doing so by lack of means. He wanted me to find a married man who could take charge of this work, and whose wife would do the house-keeping and teach the women. Here is a great field for some one who is willing to work in a more humble way for the Lord and for his cause."

Death of Mr. C. A. Bunting

Charles Atwood Bunting, founder of The New York Christian Home for Intemperate Men, and for twenty years its manager, died at Keyport, N. J., May 30, aged 73. He devoted a large part of his life to the bettering of his fellow-men. During all his years of active Christian work, Mr. Bunting used only one instrument for reaching the shipwrecked, namely, the Word, absolutely rejecting all human appliances and agencies. His early training by sea and land developed a character well fitted to deal with the particular class of men with whom he labored. He advocated his doctrine with great earnestness and tenacity, and employed plain, practical, yet potent methods in his daily instructions. He had a very large circle of friends throughout the country, who esteemed him and his reformatory work most highly.

San Francisco is an ideal summer resort—weather always cool. Trip thither in summer, across high tablelands of New Mexico and Arizona, is pleasant—air bracing, no oppressive heat or dust.

On the way visit Indian pueblos, and petrified forest, also Grand Canon of Arizona—world's greatest scenic spectacle, now easily accessible.

See southern California—its noted resort hotels, idyllic valleys, majestic mountains, smooth beaches and lovely islands, its old missions, its semi-tropic fruits and flowers, its great oil wells. This important section reached via Santa Fe Route cheaper than most other lines and with greater comfort.

Artistic Monuments in White Bronze

Marble is entirely out of date. Granite soon gets moss-grown, discolored, requires constant expense and care, and eventually crumbles back to Mother Earth. Besides it is very expensive.

White Bronze is strictly everlasting. It cannot crumble with the action of frost. Moss-growth is an impossibility. It is more artistic than any stone. Then why not investigate it? It has been adopted for nearly one hundred public monuments. We have designs from $4.00 to $4,000.00. Write at once for free designs and information. It puts you under no obligations. SPECIAL HALF-PRICE OFFER.—Final Notice. Ridpath's History of the United States

THE NEW IMPERIAL EDITION REVISED TO DATE. . . . Only 50 Cents Required

NO AMERICAN HOME, however obscure and humble, can afford to be without some readable, authentic and patriotic narrative of the struggles and triumphs of that land whose name has become, in a the world, the synonym of liberty. Such work is Dr. Ridpath's Popular History of the United States. It is a compendium of the stirring facts of our history woven into a narrative so brilliant and dramatic as to leave an ineffaceable impression on the mind of the reader. A GREAT INTERNATIONAL JUBILEE

Delegates From all Lands Celebrate the Golden Jubilee of the Young Men's Christian Association

BY J. L. HARBOUR

THE Golden Jubilee of the Young Men's Christian Association, held in Boston from the eleventh to the sixteenth of June, will pass into history as one of the most remarkable and inspiring gatherings of the early part of the new century. The Convention in full assembly was by far the largest and most important in the history of the Y. M. C. A. in the United States. It did not fall short of anything hoped for it when the Jubilee was planned, and it gave gratifying evidence of the fact that the Y. M. C. A. is to-day one of the active, vital religious influences that is helping to evangelize the world.

When George Williams organized that first Y. M. C. A. in the world in London, nearly fifty-seven years ago, he had no idea of the deep mark it would make on the men, both old and young, of his generation and of generations to come. His highest hopes for it did not include the wonderful proportions to which it has grown. He saw the urgent need of the Gospel among the young men by whom he was surrounded in his London home, and he builded better than he knew when he organized the Association that is the primary cause of the great Jubilee in Boston.

The Jubilee began on the morning of Mechanics' Hall was the Mecca of thousands in the evening, when the formal welcome meeting was held. It proved, however, to be a delightfully informal affair, although there were on the platform distinguished men from all over the world, including peers, Senators, business men, famous ministers and representative men from nearly every station of life. Mr. William E. Dodge, of New York, called the meeting to order, and stated the interesting fact that it lacked but a few months of fifty years since he became secretary of the McCook, of New York, who spoke with great force and power. Mr. Sankey was present and sang "Saved by Grace," as only he could sing it.

The speakers on Wednesday morning were Mr. Herbert Ames, of Montreal and Judge Selden P. Spencer, of St. Louis.

At the afternoon session the first speaker was Mr. Edwin L. Shuey, of Dayton, Ohio, and President G. Stanley Hall, of Clark University. At the close of these addresses there were greetings from European National Unions.

Long before the hour of opening the hall on Wednesday evening, a fast-increasing crowd of hundreds had assembled in front of the entrances waiting for the doors to open. Every seat and every available foot of standing room was occupied when the time came for beginning the services. Colonel Curtis Guild presided, and Miss Helen M. Gould, Mrs. Russell Sage, and many other ladies were on the platform. Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman conducted devotional exercises, after which stirring addresses were given by Rear-Admiral F. J. Higginson and Captain Wadhams, of the United States Navy, and also by Major-Gen. Joseph Wheeler of the Army. Admiral Watson spoke for a few minutes, and one of the best addresses of the even-

DELEGATES TO THE Y. M. C. A. JUBILEE CELEBRATION AT MECHANICS' HALL, BOSTON, MASS.

Tuesday, when there was a meeting of the delegates at the great Mechanics' Building, in which most of the sessions of the Convention were held. The first public meeting was held in Trinity Church, hallowed memories of Phillips Brooks, at 3.30, Tuesday afternoon. This meeting took the form of a united praise service under the direction of Rev. Charles Herbert Hall, of New York, who delivered the sermon. It was an impressive sight when, at the beginning of the service, and while a processional hymn was being sung, the foreign delegates, the officiating ministers, the International Committee and representatives of many Christian denominations entered the church in a procession and took seats reserved for them. The great church could not seat nearly all who sought admittance.

first Y. M. C. Association ever organized in New York. Telegrams were read from President McKinley, Baron Von Holleben, the German ambassador at Washington, from the King of Italy, through his ambassador, and from others. Mayor Hart welcomed the delegates on behalf of the city of Boston, Lieutenant-Governor Bates welcomed them in the name of the State of Massachusetts, and Mr. Henry M. Moore gave the welcome on behalf of the Boston Association, and at the close of his address introduced to the audience Mr. Howard Williams, son of Sir George Williams, who came as his father's representative. Other speakers were Rev. A. H. Plumb, of Boston, Mr. C. T. Williams, President of the Montreal Association. The only long address of the evening was by Hon. John J.

ing was by Mrs. E. A. McAlpin, President of the Woman's Auxiliary, and the only woman speaker on the programme, excepting at the woman's meeting on Sunday in the Old South Church. The last speaker was Richard Pearson Hobson, the hero of the Merrimac.

The Thursday sessions began with a praise service at nine o'clock, conducted by Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, after which there were addresses by Cephas Brainerd, of New York; President W. H. P. Faunce, of Brown University, and Rev. Francis E. Clark, of the Christian Endeavor Society. A reception was given to the delegates by Governor Crane at the State House at 1.30 o'clock, and at half-past two one of the most interesting meetings of the jubilee took place in the Old South Church, in the chapel of which the first Association in the United States was organized. The speakers were Hon. Franklin Smith, of Washington; Rev. Alexander McKenzie, of Cambridge. The chief interest of the meeting centered in the formal unveiling of the bronze tablet by Mr. Arthur Johnson, President of the Boston Association. On this tablet were the words:

Maine road, and other prominent railroad officials. A letter of greeting was read from Prince Hilkhof, Imperial Minister of Russian Railways.

The meetings on Friday were of a deeply interesting character. In the morning, Dr. L. W. Munhall, Dr. Canfield, Dr. W. Craven and Rev. W. W. White of Montclair, delivered stirring addresses. In the afternoon, sectional meetings were held simultaneously in Edward, of England, expressing his hearty sympathy with the work of the Y. M. C. A., and his cordial greeting to the delegates in conference at Boston.

On Saturday an agreeable surprise, not on the programme, was the appearance of seven young Dakota Indians, who, in simple language, told how they were led to become Christians through the agency of the Y. M. C. A. Dr. J. M. Buckley, Mr. Robert E. Speer, and Walter C. Douglass delivered addresses. In the evening Hon. James H. Eckels, formerly Controller of the Currency, delivered an inspiring address. On Sunday there was no morning session, but in the afternoon there was a huge evangelistic meeting, when

After the meeting in the Old South, another meeting was held in Faneuil Hall, at which the speakers were Mayor Hart, Lord Kinnaid, of England, M. L. Rallia Ram, of India, Charles Femand, of Switzerland, and others.

The evening meeting was held in the Mechanics' Building, and it was presided over by Hon. J. J. McCook, and there were songs by Mr. Sankey and the Association quartette. It was railroad evening, and the speakers were President Tuttle, of the Boston and various churches. These included: The Work for Boys; The Railroad Work; The Religious Work; and The Physical Work. In the evening, President Patton, of Princeton, delivered an address in Mechanics' Hall, and there were addresses also by President Northrop, of Minnesota, and Booker T. Washington. An interesting feature of the meeting was the reading of a cable message from Lord Roberts, bearing testimony to the value of Association work in the British Army in South Africa. Another cable message read was from King audience of fully six thousand men in Mechanics' Hall, at which Mr. Fred B. Smith, of Chicago, made an earnest appeal to any young men present who had not decided for Christ to do so, then and there. Ira D. Sankey sang "The Ninety and Nine," and a large number of young men rose to ask for prayer. The closing meeting of the Conference on Sunday evening was a wonderful spectacle of enthusiasm. John R. Mott gave the farewell address. So ended one of the most inspiring conferences of our time.

CHINA WELCOMES THE RELIEF FUND

The Governor of Shansi Thanks all Engaged in the Work — Earl Li's Cordial Letter — Progress of the Fund

NE by one, Providence is removing every obstacle that stood in the way of our famine relief work in interior China. The road is now clear to Shansi, and there is little doubt of the cordial welcome that will await the missionaries on their arrival there, carrying with them the generous gifts of Christian America to the starving multitudes. Indeed, the people of Shansi, and more especially the native Christians, are now eager for the return of the missionaries. Governor Chan Chun Hsuen, to indicate his appreciation of the kindness of America, has sent the following message, to be transmitted by cable through Earl Li Hung Chang at Peking to the Chinese Minister at Washington, for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

Shansi's Grateful Governor

have received telegram from Earl Li Hung Chang, informing me that the benevolent people in America, through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, have kindly raised a relief fund for the famine in the province of Shansi. In with the people of this province to express our grateful thanks to you for your co-operation, and to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and the generous contribution for their friendly sympathy with their fellow-men in distress."

Signed by CHAN CHUN HSUEN,
Governor of Shansi Province.

We have also received from Acting Director William C. Cox, of the Bureau of American Republics, Washington, D. C., a letter from Acting United States Minister Rockhill at Peking, enclosing an official communication from Earl Li Hung Chang to Mr. Rockhill, in which the great Chinese statesman pledges the fullest aid and co-operation from the Imperial Government to the relief work. The Earl's letter is as follows:

PEKING, May 5, 1901.

Your Excellency: I have conveyed the contents of Mr. Fox's telegram to His Excellency Li apropos to relief measures for famine victims in Province of Shansi, which are being inaugurated at the instance of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and include contributions from President McKinley, Mr. Hay, Mr. Conger and numerous other distinguished Americans, and that Your Excellency was requested to form a committee. His Excellency Li wishes, before entering into details, to request you to telegraph his sincere thanks, partly for himself and partly on behalf of the famine-stricken in Shansi, for this benevolent and philanthropic action of China's well-wishers in America.

His Excellency will telegraph to His Excellency Cing Chih Tong about the matter, and suggests that your Consuls in Wuhu and Hankow shall be appointed to co-operate with His Excellency Chang. His Excellency and His Excellency Li will be able to attend to such duties as may be required to be done in Peking, and His Excellency Chang, in company with your Consuls, be responsible for purchasing rice, devising means of transport and distribution from Hankow, leaving His Excellency Cing to confer with our Shansi government authorities.

His Excellency Li would like to know Your Excellency's view with regard to the matter.

I have the honor to be,
Your Excellency's obedient servant,
(Sgd) K. TSENG."
(Secretary to Earl Li Hung Chang.)

This very cordial letter from the great Earl, through his secretary, provides for every important contingency in relation to the transportation and safeguarding of the supplies as they are forwarded to Shansi. Our missionary committee will doubtless benefit by the wise forethought of Earl Li in these matters. Moreover, the letter indicates the restoration of communication with the province of Shansi, which had been interrupted by the military operations along the border. At the present writing, the missionaries, Rev. J. J. Atwood and Rev. E. H. Edwards, and their associates, are already far on their way to both Shansi and Shensi, and it is not improbable that they have already arrived, and that the work of relief is even now progressing at the centres of suffering there. Meanwhile, relief work in the nearer provinces of Shantung and Chi-li, is progressing under the supervision of Rev. Arthur Smith, Chairman of the Committee in the former province, and Rev. H. H. Lowry in the latter.

The Rev. S. L. Baldwin, now in this country after a long career of missionary service in China, has rendered splendid service to the Famine Relief movement at home. He writes this letter from Clifton Springs, N. Y.:

Missionaries Endorse the Fund

"DR. LOUIS KLOPSCH:

"Dear Brother: The International Missionary Union just assembled at Clifton Springs, N. Y., adopted unanimously a very hearty resolution, thanking you and your associates for your work on behalf of the famine relief in Shansi, and commending the fund to the contributions of all Christian people throughout the land. You will receive a copy of same in a day or two.

"I had conversations with J. Howard Taylor, M. D., the son of J. Hudson Taylor, founder of the China Inland Mission, and his wife, and they promised to write immediately an article, giving particulars of interest, and commending the movement for relief.

"Very sincerely yours, S. L. BALDWIN."

Rev. F. C. H. Dreyer, lately returned from Shansi writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD: "I rejoice that you have organized your committee, and that $20,000 has already been sent. May God nobly bless you in this great work. . . . A letter from Shanghai, just to hand, from Mr. J. W. Stevenson, says: 'Two young men, T'ong hsi cheo, and Sang hsien u, have reached Tientsin from Shansi. They have a very sad account of the Christians. They are suffering greatly from the famine. The relief given by the Governor did not amount to much more than a name. I am very glad that elder Hsu and his companions are now so far on their journey. They carry some relief with them'. . . This is, of course, very limited."

In an address delivered before the International Missionary Union, at Clifton Springs, N. Y., Mr. Dreyer told anew the story of the Boxer rising, and the escape of the missionary survivors from Shansi, and closed with a glowing tribute to the fidelity of the native Shansi Christians. His closing words should appeal to every one who has the missionary spirit, and who loves the service of the Master. He said:

Missionary Love for China

"Is it not worth our while to take the Gospel to a people who have produced Christians such as these, true martyrs for their faith? I think it is. I count it the greatest privilege and honor of my life to have been permitted to have a hand in it. As far as one is able to judge, one sentence in Mrs. Atwater's farewell letter to her friends, written only a few days before her massacre, voices the sentiment not only of the glorious band of Shansi missionary martyrs, but also of all the missionaries who have escaped. She wrote: 'I am not sorry for having come to China, I am only sorry for having accomplished so little. We are not sorry we went in the first instance and we are going back as soon as the way is opened, notwithstanding the treatment we have received. These missionaries and native Christians have given their lives a sacrifice by death, let us, one and all, offer our lives a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is our reasonable service.'"

The prevailing tone at the Convention of the International Missionary Union was one of deep sympathy for those bereaved, of heartiest thanksgiving for those marvelously delivered, of fervent prayer for the further triumph of the Gospel, and of buoyant expectation of a glorious future for China. The resolutions adopted, approving the Shansi Famine Relief work undertaken by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and commending it to the support of the Christians throughout America, need no comment. All present rejoiced that the Missionary Relief Committee had been organized and that the work was well under way. The missionaries love and interest in the Chinese is undiminished, and all are looking forward with joy to the time when they shall be able to return to their posts of duty.

Act Quickly to Save Life

Contributions to the relief work are now coming in rapidly, in response to the appeal in these columns. We again urge upon our readers the importance of haste. A second remittance should be sent to our Missionary Committee quickly, in order that the life-saving campaign may go forward without interruption. Your contribution, sent quickly, may save some poor perishing ones in the famine districts and bring a new blessing into your own life. All contributions to the China Relief work, however small, will be acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Letters from many warm sympathizers with the relief work will be found on another page.

TEXT: Ecclesiastes 11: 4:

He that observeth the wind shall not sow

WHAT do you find in this packed sentence of Solomon's monologue? I find in it a farmer at his front door examining the weather. It is seed-time. His fields have been ploughed and harrowed. The wheat is in the barn in sacks, ready to be taken afield and scattered. Now is the time to sow. But the wind is not favorable. It may blow up a storm before night, and he may get wet if he starts out for the sowing. Or it may be a long storm, that will wash out the seed from the soil. Or there may have been a long drought, and the wind may continue to blow dry weather. The parched fields may not take in the grain and the birds may pick it up, and the labor as well as the seed may be wasted. So he gives up the work for that day, and goes back into the house and waits to see what it will be on the morrow. On the morrow the wind is still in the wrong direction, and for a whole week and for a month. Did you ever see such a long spell of bad weather? The lethargic and over-cautious and dilatory agriculturist allows the season to pass without sowing, and no sowing, of course no harvest. That is what Solomon means when he says in my text: "He that observeth the wind shall not sow."

As much in our time as in Solomonic times there is abroad a fatal hesitancy—a disposition to let little things stop us—a ruinous adjournment. We all want to do some good in the world, but how easily we are halted in our endeavors. Perhaps we are solicitors for some great charity. There is a good man who has large means, and he is accustomed to give liberally to asylums, to hospitals, to reform organizations, to schools, to churches, to communities desolated with flood or devastated with fires. But that good man, like many a good man, is mercurial in his temperament. He is depressed by atmospheric changes. He is always victimized by the east wind. For this or that reason you postpone the charitable solicitation. Meanwhile the suffering that you wish to alleviate does its awful work, and the opportunity for relief is past. If the wind had been from the west or northwest you would have entered the philanthropist's counting room and sought the gift, but the wind was blowing from the east or northeast and you did not make the attempt, and you thoroughly illustrated my text: "He that observeth the wind shall not sow."

Rain Postpones a Sermon

There comes a dark Sabbath morning. The pastor looks out of the window and sees the clouds gather and then discharge their burdens of rain. Instead of a full church, it will be a handful of people with wet feet and the dripping umbrella at the doorway or in the end of the pew. The pastor has prepared one of his best sermons. It has cost him great research, and he has been much in prayer while preparing it. He puts the sermon aside for a clear day, and talks platitudes, and goes home quite depressed, but at the same time feeling that he has done his duty. He did not realize that in that small audience there were at least two persons who ought to have had better treatment. One of those hearers was a man in crisis of struggle with evil appetite. A carefully prepared discourse under the Divine blessing would have been to him complete victory. The fires of sin would have been extinguished, and his keen and brilliant mind would have been consecrated to the Gospel ministry, and he would have been a mighty evangel, and tens of thousands of souls would have, under the spell of his Christian eloquence, given up sin and started a new life, and throughout all the heavens there would have been congratulation and hosanna, and after many ages of eternity had passed there would be celebration among the ransomed of what was accomplished one stormy Sunday in a church on earth under a mighty Gospel sermon delivered to fifteen or twenty people. But the crisis I speak of was not properly met. The man in struggle with evil habit heard that stormy day no word that moved him. He went out in the rain uninvited and unhelped back to his evil way and down to his overthrow. Had it been a sunshiny Sabbath he would have heard something worth hearing. But the wind blew from a stormy direction that Sabbath day. That Gospel husbandman noticed it, and acted upon its suggestion, and may discover some day his great mistake. He had a sack full of the finest of the wheat, but he withheld it, and some day he will find, when the whole story is told, that he was a vivid illustration of the truth of my text: "He that observeth the wind shall not sow."

There was another person in that stormy Sunday audience that deserved something better from that pastor than extemporized nothingness. It was a mother who was half awakened to a sense of responsibility in regard to her household. She had begun to question herself as to whether it would not be better to introduce into her home a religion that would decide aright the destiny of her sons and daughters. Her home had so far been controlled only by worldly principles. She had dared the riot of the elements that morning and had found her way to church, hoping to hear something that would help her to decide the domestic question which was to her a solicitude. A good, strong sermon under the Divine blessing would have led her into the kingdom of God, and afterward her whole family. The children, whether they became farmers, or mechanics, or merchants, or artists, or men of learned profession, or women at the head of households, would have done their work in a Christian way, and after lives of usefulness on earth would have taken thrones in heaven. It would have been a whole family saved for time and saved for eternity. But the pastor had adjourned the strong and effective discourse to a clear Sunday. The mother went home and concluded not to trouble herself or household about the future, and to let to-morrow take care of itself, and keep on doing as they had been doing. No God in that home. No religious consolation in time of bereavement. No formation of thorough Christian character in the lives of those growing up boys and girls. They will go out into the world to meet its vicissitudes without any sublime reinforcement of the Gospel. What a pity it was that he did not put down the manuscript of his well-prepared sermon on the Bible, if he preached from notes, or pour it out of his soul, if he had lodged it there through careful preparation. No. He allowed that opportunity, which could never return, to pass into eternity unimproved. He observed by the way the rain dashed against the windows of the parsonage and the windows of the church that the wind was from the east or the northeast, and he did not sow, or sowed that which was not worth sowing.

Chilled in Body, Mind and Soul

In all departments of life there are those hindered by the wind of public opinion. It has become an aphorism in politics and in all great movements, "He is waiting to see which way the wind blows." And it is no easy thing to defy public opinion—to be run upon by newspapers, to be overhauled in social circles, to be anathematized by those who heretofore were your friends and admirers. It requires a heroism which few possess. Yet no great reformatory or elevating movement has ever been accomplished until some one was willing to defy what the world should think or say or do. But there have been men and women of that kind. They stand all up and down the corridors of history, examples for us to follow. Charles Sumner in the United States Senate. Alexander H. Stephens in Georgia Convention. Savonarola staking his life in time of persecution. Martin Luther fighting the battle for religious freedom against the mightiest anathemas that were ever hurled. William Carey leading the missionary movement to save a heathen world, while Churches denounced him as a fanatic and with attempting an impossibility. Jenner, the hero of medicine, caricatured for his attempt by vaccination to beat back the worst disease that smote the nations. They who watch will not sow. It is an uncertain indication, and is apt to blow the wrong way. Communities and churches and nations sometimes are thrown into hysteria on some momentous subject, and it requires a man of great equipoise to maintain a right position. Thirty-three years ago there came a time of bitterness in American politics, and the impeachment of a President of the United States was demanded. Two or three patriotic men, at the risk of losing their senatorial position, stood out against the demand of their political associates, and saved the country from that which all people of all parties now see would have been a calamity and would have put every subsequent President at the mercy of his opponents. It only required the waiting of a few months, when time itself removed all controversy.

"Let us have war with England, if needs be," said the most of the people of our Northern States, in 1861, when Mason and Slidell, the distinguished Southerners, had been taken by our navy from the British steamer Trent, and the English Government resented the act of our Government in stopping one of their ships. "Give up those prisoners," said Great Britain. "No," said the almost unanimous opinion of the North. "Do not give them up. Let us have war with England rather than surrender them." Then Wm. H. Seward, Secretary of State, faced one of the fiercest storms of public opinion ever seen in this or any other country. Seeing that the retention of those two men was of no importance to our country, and that their retention would put Great Britain and the United States into immediate conflict, said, "We give them up." They were given up, and through the resistance of popular clamor that one man, a world-wide calamity was averted.

Some of us remember as boys huzzaing when Kossuth, the great Hungarian, rode up Broadway, New York. Most Americans were in favor of taking so decided steps for Hungary. The only result of such interference would have been the sacrifice of all good precedent and war with European nations. The Daniel Webster, in his immortal "Hulsemann letter," braved a whirlwind of popular opinion, and saved the nation from useless foreign entanglement. Webster did not observe the wind when he wrote that letter. In State and Church there have always been men at right time ready to face a nation full, yea a world full opposition.

How many there are who give too much time to watching the weather-vane and studying the barometer. Make up your mind what you are going to do, and then go ahead and do it. There always will be hindrance. It is a moral disaster if you allow prudence to master all the other graces. The Bible makes more of courage and faith and perseverance than it does of caution. It is not once a year that the great ocean steamers fail to sail at the appointed time because of the storm signals. Let the Weather Bureau prophesy what hurricane or cyclone it may, next Wednesday, next Thursday, next Saturday the steamers will put out from New York and Philadelphia and Boston harbor, and will reach Liverpool and Southampton and Glasgow and Bremen, their arrival as certain as their embarkation. They cannot afford to consult the wind, nor you in your life voyage.

The grandest and best things ever accomplished have been in the teeth of hostility. Consider the grand enterprise of the eternities—

The Salvation of the World

Did the Roman Empire send up invitation to the heavens inviting the Lord to descend amid vociferations of welcome, to come and take possession of the most capacious and ornate of the palaces, and sail Gale with richest imperial flotilla, and walk over flower of Solomon's gardens, which were still in the outskirts of Jerusalem? No; it struck him with insult as soon it could reach him. Let the camel-drivers in the Ishmael caravan testify. See the vilest hate put him to the borders of the Nile! Watch his arraignment as a criminal in the courts! See how they belie every action, misinterpret his best words, how at times with worst mobs, wear him out with sleepless night on cold mountains! See him hoisted into a martyr's chair at which the noonday cowed itself with midnight shadows, and the rocks shook into cataclysm, and he dead started out of their sepulchre, feeling it was no time to sleep when such horrors were being enacted. The winds of stormiest opposition blew on his crest, blew on his mountain pulpit, blew upon the homestead that dared to give him shelter, blew upon his great but he went right on and sowed the earth with pathetic tears, and redeeming blood, and consolation, and helpfulness, and redemption, and victory. It was an awful time to sow. But behold the harvest of churches, asylums, world-wide charities, civilizations, millenniums!

Just call over the names of the men and women who have done most for our poor old world, and you will find the names of those who had mobs after them. They were shunned by the elite; they were cartooned by the satirists; they lived on food which you and I would not throw to a kennel. Some of them died in prison; some of them were burned at the stake; some of them were buried at public expense, because of the laws of sanitation. They were hounded through the world, and hounded out of it. Now we cross the ocean to see the room in which they were born or died, and look at monuments which the Church or the world has reared to their matchless

Fidelity and Courage

After one or two or three hundred years, the world has made up its mind that instead of being flagellated, they ought to have been garlanded; instead of cave of the mountain for residence, they ought to have had bestowed upon them an Alhambra.

Young man, you have planned what you are going to be and do in the world, but you are waiting for circumstances to become more favorable. You are, like the farmer in the text, observing the wind. Better start now. Obstacles will help you if you conquer them. Cut your way through. Peter Cooper, the millionaire philanthropist, who will bless all succeeding centuries with the institution he founded, worked five years for twenty-for dollars a year and his board. Henry Wilson, the Christian statesman, who commanded the United States State with the gavel of the Vice-Presidency, wrote of his early days: "Want sat by my cradle. I know what it is to ask a mother for bread when she has none to give. I left my home at ten years of age and served an apprenticeship of eleven years, receiving a month's schooling each year, and at the end of eleven years of hard work a yoke of oxen and six sheep, which brought me eighty-four dollars. In the first month after I was twenty-one years of age, I went into the woods, drove a team and cut mill-logs. I arose in the morning before daylight and worked hard till after dark, and received the magnificent sum of six dollars for the month's work. Each of those dollars looked as large to me as the moon looks to-night." Wonderful Henry Wilson! But that was not his original name. He changed his name because he did not want on him the blight of a drunken father. As the Vice-President stood in my pulpit in Brooklyn, making the last address he ever made, and commended the religion of Christ to the young men of the city, I thought to myself, "You yourself are the truest spectacle I ever saw of victory over obstacles." For thirty years the wind blew the wrong way, yet he did not observe the wind, but kept right on sailing.

Any of us who are now preachers of the Gospel, or medical practitioners, or members of the bar, or merchants, or citizens in various kinds of business, had very poor opportunity at the start, because we had it too easy—far too easy. We never appreciated what it is to gain education, because our fathers or older brothers paid the schooling, and we did not get the muscle with nothing but hard work can develop. I congratulate you, young man, if to you life is a struggle. It is out of such circumstances God makes heroes, if they are willing to be made. Cut your way through. If it were proper to do so, and you should stand in any board of bank directors, in any board of trade, in any legislature, State or National, and ask all who were brought up in luxury and ease to lift their hand, here another hand might be lifted; but ask all those who have an awful hard time at the start to lift their hand, almost of the hands would be lifted. The heroes of Church and State were not brought up on confectionery and cake.

Columbus, by calculation, made up his mind that there must be a new hemisphere somewhere to balance the old hemisphere, or it would be a lopsided world. And I have found out, not by calculation, but by observation, that there is a great success for you somewhere to balance your great struggle. Do not think that your case is peculiar. The most favored have been pelted.

But my subject takes another step. Through medical science, and dentistry that has improved the world's mastication, and stronger defense against climatic changes, and better understanding of the laws of health, human life has been greatly prolonged. But a centenarian is still a wonder. How many people do you know a hundred years old? I do not know one. We talk of a century as though it were a very long reach of time. But what is one century on earth compared with centuries that we are to live somewhere, somehow—ten centuries, a million centuries, a quintillion of centuries? We are all determined to get ready for the longer life we are to live after our exit from things sublunary. We are waiting for more propitious opportunity. We have too much business to attend to now, or too much pleasure to allow anything to interfere with its brilliant progress. We are waiting until the wind blows in the right direction. We are going to sow, and sow the very best grain, and we are going to raise an eternal harvest of happiness. We like what you say about heaven, and we are going there, and at the right time we will get ready; but my lungs are sound, my digestion is good, the examining physician of the life insurance company says my heart beats just the right number of times a minute, and I am cautious about sitting in a draught, and I observe all the laws of hygiene, and my father and mother lived to be very old, and I come of a long-lived family. So we adjourn and postpone until, like the farmer suggested by my text, we allow the seed time to pass, and sudden pneumonia, or a reckless bicycle, or an ungoverned automobile puts us out of life with all its magnificent opportunities of deciding aright the question of everlasting residence. A Spanish proverb says: "The road of By-and-By leads to the town of Never."

Whether in your life it is a south wind or a north wind, a west wind or an east wind that is now blowing, do you not feel like saying: "This whole subject I now decide. Lord God, through thy Son Jesus Christ, my Saviour, I am thine forever. I throw myself, reckless of everything else, into the fathomless ocean of thy mercy."

"But," says some one in a frivolous and rollicking way, "I am not like the farmer you find in your text. I do not watch the wind. What do I care about the weather-vane? I am sowing now." What are you sowing, my brother? Are you sowing evil habits? Are you sowing infidel and atheistic beliefs? Are you sowing hatreds, revenges, discontents, unclean thoughts, or unclean actions? If so, you will raise a big crop, a very big crop. The farmer sometimes plants things that do not come up, and he has to plant them over again; but those evil things that you have planted will take root and come up in harvest of disappointment, in harvest of pain, in harvest of despair, in harvest of fire. Go right through some of the unhappy homes of Washington and New York and all the cities, and through the hospitals and penitentiaries, and you will find stacked up, piled together, the sheaves of such an awful harvest. Hosea, one of the first of all the writing prophets, although four of the other prophets are put before him in the canon of Scripture, wrote an astounding metaphor that may be quoted as descriptive of those who do evil: "They have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind." Some one has said, "children may be strangled, but deeds never."

There are other persons who truthfully say: "I am doing the best I can. The clouds are thick and the wind blows the wrong way, but I am sowing prayers, and sowing kindnesses, and sowing helpfulness, and sowing hopes of a better world." Good for you, my brother, my sister! What you plant will come up. What you sow will rise into a harvest, the wealth of which you will not know until you go up higher. I hear the rustling of your harvest in the bright fields of heaven. The soft gales of that land, as they pass, bend the full-headed grain in curves of beauty. It is golden in the light of a sun that never sets. As you pass in you will not have to gird on the sickle for the reaping, and there will be nothing to remind you of weary husbandmen toiling under hot summer sun on earth, and lying down under the shadow of the tree at noon-tide, so tired were they, so very tired. No, no; your harvest will be reaped without any toil of your hands, without any besweating of your brow. Christ in one of his sermons told how your harvest will be gathered, when he said, "The reapers are the angels."

How · a · Sunday · School · Class · Became · a · Great · Mission

It is a strange story that a Sunday School class should survive the Sunday school of which it was a part, and develop into a great Mission or Church of the people, conducted along educational lines. Yet such is the story of the Markham Memorial of St. Louis. The class which triumphed thus gloriously over adverse conditions had to outlive forced migrations from this place to that (having abode once over a market and once over a police station); it even survived a cyclone, which tore down the building in which it had had its home for years. June, 1875, South Mission Sunday School, corner of Ninth and Marion streets, ended its existence; but one of its classes, taught by Wm. H. Markham, obtained permission to meet Sunday afternoons in a church at Eighth and Chouteau avenues. On the second Sunday of July, with twenty-two additional pupils present, they decided to organize a Sunday School. In less than a year the church was filled to overflowing every Sunday afternoon with children and young people studying God's word. In 1877, when it was necessary to find new quarters, Mr. Markham rented the hall over the old Souard Market, furnishing it with chairs, benches and other apparatus for continuing the work, at his own expense. Here the school met for nearly nineteen years, until the cyclone of May 27, 1896, destroyed the Souard Market Hall and all its contents. Next Sunday, the school met in the Police Department building on Eighth at Souard streets. In September it was moved to the First German Presbyterian Church on Tenth and Rutger. Now, friends of the work saw that it must have a permanent abode or else it must perish.

Before the coming of the cyclone, efforts had been made in the direction of securing a home of its own for the school. It had outgrown the hall; it had taken on mission and settlement features; prayer-meetings were held Tuesday nights; Gospel meetings Sunday evenings; a Christian Endeavor Society had been organized; a Literary Society had sprung into existence; and a busy Sewing School was in session every Saturday afternoon. It had won powerful friends, and in 1884 had passed under the care of the Lafayette Park Presbyterian Church. April 1, 1896, the attendance on the school, which had had its beginning in a small wayfaring Sunday School class, was 1,378.

The fund for the new building began in as humble a way as the mission itself, and grew almost as wonderfully. Mr. J. I. McClelland's Bible Class of young ladies originated the idea of the Souard Market Penny Building Fund, when, at their teachers' suggestion, they gave the fruit of their self-denial as the nucleus of a sum which, under the name given above with Mr. McClelland as treasurer, was raised to about $1,500. The fund was then developed on broader lines by the Lafayette Park Presbyterian Church, until at last a lot was bought and a building erected upon it. In May, 1897, the new mission, corner of Julia and Menard streets, free of debt, was dedicated to God. Known for a time as the Menard Street Mission, it became, on the death of the man to whom, more than any other, it owed its existence, the Markham Memorial. Mr. Markham was Superintendent of the school from its beginning until his death, last January. He was a prominent business man, and his talents in this direction were faithfully used by him to the development of what he felt to be a greater than any secular work. Mr. Edgar S. McClelland, brother of Mr. J. I. McClelland, succeeds him.

The generosity of the Lafayette Park Church has been supplemented by that of the Washington and Compton avenues Presbyterian Church; and through this aid, the mission has had as its pastor, Rev. Charles Stelzle, whose experience in social and religious work has been of inestimable benefit to the institution. A note from Mr. Stelzle to this paper, says: "During the past month there have been twenty meetings per week at the mission; attendance about 10,000 persons per month." There is a Free Dispensary, Penny Savings Bank, Boys' and Girls' Clubs, Carol Club, Choir Club, Stereopticon Lectures, and various other features of institutional work.

It is quite in keeping with the history of this remarkable mission that its Primary Sunday School Class should be the largest of its kind in the world. It has a membership of some 800 children, under the care of one teacher, Miss Kate H. Haus. This lady, who is rightly regarded as one of the most successful Sunday School and Christian Endeavor workers in the country took charge of the class, June, 1883, when attendance averaged 80 to 100; in October, it had increased to 400; from 1884 to 1896, attendance grew to 900. The effects of the tornado was to reduce the ranks for a time. The average age of pupils from 1883 to 1901 has never exceeded seven years and has often fallen below this.

As to the influence of the mission upon the community, the following high authority may be quoted. Mr. Lawrence Harrigan, Chief of Police of St. Louis, stated once, before the Grand Jury: "The restraining influence of the Souard Market Mission Sunday School is worth more to the southern part of St. Louis than 100 policemen." The Captain of Police Souard Station informed Mr. Markham that before the school came they had the prison filled every Sunday, but after it commenced work, it was rarely the case that they had any one in the prison on Sunday. The neighborhood, while not answering to slums like those of New York, is that of the typical working class district of a western city. The saloon, the dance hall, the wine room, vile literature, poverty, infidelity, have to be fought there as elsewhere. The thousands of children and young people leading circumscribed lives because of lack of opportunity; and the multitudes of tired, discouraged parents, with little of cheer or comfort, "having no hope, without God in the world," who dwell in such regions, are in themselves a perpetual appeal to Christ's faithful servants to "come over and help us."

GOD THE CREATOR OF ALL THINGS

"IN THE BEGINNING GOD"

International S. S. Lesson for July 7. Gen. 1: 26-31; 2: 1-3. GOLDEN TEXT—In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth. Gen. 1: 1

IN THE BEGINNING GOD CREATED THE HEAVENS. A child, looking at a picture of some idols of a far-off land, to which men and women and children were praying, asked her mother, "Do the people who worship that image see the same moon and stars that we do?" "O yes," "Well, I should think they'd know 'twould take a better god than that to make the moon and stars." The mother might have added: "There are learned men in our own country who think the moon and stars and flowers and birds and love and hope were all created by formless, lifeless dirt." Such irrationalism the child's clear intuitions would have laughed to scorn. Scientists are giving up this "gospel of dirt." They see in the orderly progress of the seasons and the ages the footprints of a Mind like ours, but greater, all-wise, and all-powerful, "the mighty God, the everlasting Father."

AND THE EARTH. A pastor, calling on a very poor woman living in an attic in a crowded city, saw a strawberry plant in bloom in a broken saucer on her window-sill. He said to the woman, "Your strawberry plant will soon turn from flower to fruit, and you will enjoy its sweetness, after waiting so long for it." "Oh, sir," she replied, "it is not for the fruit I keep it, but it is the only living thing I can keep, and it reminds me by its daily growth that God is near." If one such plant whispers of the nearness of a living God, what a creation chorus rings in our ears who look out on the full vision of nature at this high-noon of the year, when every rose bush, like the bush of Horeb, is aflame with the presence of God, and when the air is charged, like that of a temple, with the incense and music of flowers and birds!

Wondrous truths, and manifold as wondrous
God has written in the stars above,
But not less in the bright flowerets under us
Stands the bright revelation of his love.

Making evident our own creation
In these stars of earth, these golden flowers.
—LONGFELLOW.

AND GOD SAID, LET US MAKE MAN IN OUR IMAGE. The strongest proof that a mind, like ours, but greater, made the world, and still rules it, is the order and progress with which all seasons, all ages, all natural forces work together, like the wheels in some great factory, toward the product which the intelligent Manager has evidently had in view from the first. But the argument from design, confined to the machines of nature, the writer has found the most effective in helping the young to realize God as a person, like ourselves, in mind and heart, though infinitely greater, and unconfined by a physical body. For young men and young ladies in our high schools and colleges, to whom a little science has brought doubt, such a fuller unfolding of science will bring faith in God. The argument may be presented in the following logical form:

Modern explorations in the buried cities of the ancient world have shown that many tools previously supposed to be modern are only reinventions of "lost arts." The tools found in those ruins are positive proof to us that at the times and places when and where they were used there existed intelligent minds like ours. But other explorations have shown that more numerous and more wonderful tools, and even machines, existed at a much more remote period. These most ancient machines include saws, lances, anchors, combs, chisels, hooks, brushes, trap-doors, and roller-skates—indeed, the mechanical principle of almost every tool and machine gnat form a life-boat, each egg a water-tight compartment, filled with air and with an exit like that of a lobster-trap, that allows the young gnat in due time to go out, while allowing nothing in the meantime to come in. Not alone for sparrows and lilies, and for the hairs of our heads, but for the very insects, God wonderfully provides. The water-boatmen, like a tourist in the Adirondacks, carries his boat on his back, and literally "feathers" his oars. The snail carries his boat inside his shell. The velela is a living raft with a living sail. Instead of hands and feet, the little synapta of the sea has four anchors to hold him secure when the waves would sweep him away. Sponges also have anchors in some cases. The lementoma, a living parasite like a pirate, anchors himself to what he would feed upon. The archer fish can shoot a fly with a drop of water. The "Dutch rush," or equisetum, is one of the best of sandpapers. The beaver's tooth is a self-sharpening chisel, the back part being softer than the front, and so wearing off faster, so keeping the front on edge. The toucan combs his feathers with a natural comb in his beak. The common fly has a saw by which it makes in the bark of trees an incision for its eggs, while the sawyer beetle is a living circular-saw that saws the bark of trees to feed upon the juices. Some insects have double wings that are fastened by a row of hooks. Grass blades act as effective wedges, and pry their way up to the light, and one form of grass protects itself as a saw-edged sword. The duck's beak has a natural filter, and the glow-worm larva and common fly have beautiful brushes. The chirodota is a form of beauty, and similar paddle-wheels serve as roller-skates to use on the water for one of the water insects. The stomach of the camel, the "ship of the desert," is provided with many water-bottles, as manifestly adapted for its voyages across the sand as the water-barrels of ships for their voyages across the sea. One kind of spider has a beveled trap-door to his robber cave, and so has one form of the Venus fly-trap, an electric trap that we might well copy, whose electric spines, when a fly, drawn by its sweet juices, lights upon its open trap, close swiftly enough to catch a fly. The brain and nerves are a telegraphic

MALE AND FEMALE CREATED HE THEM. Not many individual so much as a man and wife in the creators! parenthood, image the divine Father. Many a man in the home trinity of father, the mother, and the child come to know more fully the father of God and the Sonship and sacrifice of Christ. The Bible often makes marriage the image of intimate love of Christ and the soul. Let us not be too much haste to deny that marriage is a sacrament. But the extreme view of the Roman Catholic, with marriage a sacrament and no divorce, than the ordinary view of marriage as "midway between a joke and a crime," a mere contract, to be broken for other reasons than the law of Christ allows. Marriage is sacred, even if not a sacrament, and not alone married people, but the young people of our S. S. Schools also need to be so taught in a spirit that forbid profane trifling. When the newspapers treat marrying as a game and marrying a fortune not as prostitution, but as an honorable success, it is time for the Church to reiterate her divine edicts upon this matter, that to be unequally yoked with unbelievers is to risk one's faith, and to marry without supreme affection, or to be divorced on other than Scriptural grounds, and remarry is to commit adultery.

That first family was given dominion over all animal life, and the highest form of that dominion is to rule the animal life in ourselves in the strength of God.

AND GOD BLESSED THE SEVENTH DAY. God's last and crowning creation was the Sabbath, the germ of a leisure

The Sabbath a Weekly Reminder of Our Creator

When, in every age, the scattered household should have prolonged fellowship with each other, and with God. Work is often spoken of as a part of the primeval curse, but it was, instead, a part of man's Edenic blessing. Work for our loved ones, in proper days and hours, broken by the weekly Rest Day, and unmarred by the oppression of greed, is far more glad than idleness. On Sunday work and other overwork and selfish work are accused. Not for rest only was the Sabbath made, but yet more for remembrance of the Creator. On busy work-days, it would be easy to forget God. There must be one day when the unwonted hush upon the world of business and the sound of church-bells falling out of the sky, and the sweet faces of mother and children would whisper to selfish and sinful men:

Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy, now thy Creator.

The Jews have a saying, "He who breaks the Sabbath denies the creation." And the saying is still pertinent when we may add that he who desecrates the Lord's Day denies the Lordship of Christ over death and life. To break the Sabbath bath is to break the world's first monument, on which God placed his own name, that one day in every week we ought to turn from the questions of meat and drink, and look backward and upward. As God turned from previous work to minerals, vegetables, and animals, to rest by change of service, as he promoted the spiritual interests of man, so we are to turn on each Sabbath from our lower work, to the higher service of God and of our fellows.

"REMEMBER!" The Sabbath's thinking is what God puts chief emphasis upon.
